SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Stollery be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Stanbury on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, we look forward to Senator Stollery's attendance this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before Question Period commences I would mention a minor point of order. The notice in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate indicates that a meeting of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration is scheduled for tomorrow at 11.15 a.m. in room 257 in the East Block. Senator Graham, the chairman of that committee, tells me, although such a meeting usually does take place on Thursdays, that will not be the case tomorrow. To avoid any senator's being misled by what is in the Minutes of the Proceedings, I advise the house that there will not be a meeting of the Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee this week, but there will be one next week.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, are there any other changes in the schedule of committee meetings for tomorrow?

Senator Frith: As far as I know, all other committee meetings, of which we have had notice, will be taking place as scheduled.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, following the motion made by Senator Petten to have Senator Stollery named a member of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, could the deputy leader, or the leader, or perhaps Senator Petten, tell us if Senator Stollery asked to be put on that committee in order that he may attend the meeting scheduled for this afternoon?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Stollery has always had a deep and abiding interest in bilingualism, and he is pursuing his demonstrated interest and bent.

Senator Flynn: Last evening Senator Stollery was somewhat worried about the fact that the two parties were not represented at the committee meeting of yesterday. If he wishes to be there today to represent the Liberal Party, I am quite sure that Senator Murray will welcome him with open arms.

Senator Perrault: All of us on this side are deeply touched by the interest demonstrated this afternoon for government supporters by the Leader of the Opposition. His concern for their attitudes and views and the question of their committee membership has been noted with interest.

Senator Flynn: I am also happy to see that the Leader of the Government is in a very good mood today, which is in contrast with the mood he displayed last evening.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I do not think we can assure the honourable senator that Senator Stollery is looking forward to being welcomed with open arms by Senator Murray.

Senator Flynn: Well, I don't know about that. Senator Stollery is the one who complained yesterday, and I see he is not present in the chamber at this moment. He is probably waiting at the door of the committee room.

Senator Perrault: Obviously, he is preparing his views for the meeting this afternoon.

• (1410)

Senator Flynn: It is certainly a good idea that he should be prepared.

THE ECONOMY

QUEBEC—BUSINESS FAILURES

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the very distinguished Minister of State—

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn:—in charge of economic and regional development—or is it regional disparities? I always get mixed up.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I can correct it right now. The title is Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. All the other connotations are inappropriate to the office which, I believe, has an important function in this country.

Senator Flynn: I thank the minister. When he says “regional,” is it economic also?

Senator Olson: Both.

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between “economic” and “regional”; “regional” is not necessarily “economic.”

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Opposition should listen carefully. The title is Minister of State—that is pretty clear—for Economic and Regional Development. MSERD is the abbreviated term that is commonly being used.

Senator Flynn: I thought it should have been general and regional economic development. That was my understanding. I believe the way it is described officially is misleading. But that should not prevent my putting my question to the minister.

On previous occasions I have asked what effect the government's recent policy of stalling or completely abandoning certain mega-projects has had on the economy. My question today relates to the report referring to the number of recent bankruptcies. It was announced that in January there were 405 business failures in Quebec, 100 more than in Ontario, despite the larger population of Ontario. Would the minister attribute the situation in Quebec to the current recession?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, first, I wish to express my appreciation to the Leader of the Opposition for referring to the minister as a “distinguished minister”. I believe he said “very distinguished minister,” which adds to the compliment. The Leader of the Opposition then proceeded to ask a question related to mega-projects and attempted to relate that to the number of bankruptcies—

Senator Flynn: Failures.

Senator Olson:—involving a number of companies which, he indicated, were not in the same category.

I have a good deal of sympathy for the difficulties faced by some businesses in Canada, but I cannot stretch my intellectual capacity to see any relationship between those two assertions.

Senator Flynn: In connection with those figures, national records were set with 2,403 personal bankruptcies and 917 business failures. If we considered the total amount involved in the 917 business failures, the figure would certainly represent the equivalent of a mega-project. Perhaps the minister would comment on that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the comment that I should make at the outset, to avoid confusion in the connotation of words, concerns the definition of “mega-project” as used by the committee that was set up to look into the prospects, number and timing of so-called mega-projects. The term applied to any individual operation, or corporation, or project that had a required investment of $100 million or more. Whether or not you want to add up all of the people involved in bankruptcies, that does not fit the connotation that was used. “Mega-projects” is not a term that I initiated; in fact, I am not sure where “mega” came from, although I understand that it is a derivative of “major” projects—

• (1415)

Hon. Lowell Murray: It is from the Greek.

Senator Olson:—that were involved, and I have to repeat to my honourable friend, so that he will understand, that the government is not hanging all of its hopes on the so-called mega-, or “major”, projects. As a matter of fact, I have said in this chamber a number of times that from now until the end of this century, if you like, which is the period the major projects committee looked at, the $440 billion that would be invested in those major projects would be about 20 or 25 per cent of the total projected investment in the economic development of Canada.

MANUFACTURING SECTOR—DECLINE IN PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have a question that I should like to direct to the Minister of State for Economic Development, but before I do so I wonder if he would be kind enough to repeat the abbreviation for his department that I thought I heard him mention a few minutes ago but which I was not quick enough to catch.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): The department is the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development. If you take the first letter of each word and pronounce it according to the usual principles of pronunciation of the English language, the result is MSERD.

Senator Smith: I see. I thank the honourable gentleman for that explanation.

I am sure that the minister is aware that Statistics Canada reported last week that Canada's manufacturing industry operated at about 75 per cent of capacity during the final quarter of 1981, and intimated that that was a 20-year low. Would the minister indicate if the government can ascribe a reason for this decline, such as a decrease in productivity, or failure of markets, whether export or domestic, or a reduction in investment?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is, of course, a combination of reasons for this. Some of them are interrelated and, in some cases, very complex. There has been a decline in consumer buying of a number of the items produced by the manufacturing sector. There has also been a decline in some of the demand for the export of Canadian manufactured products. This situation, of course, is not confined to Canada, and, indeed, is substantially more severe in other parts of the world where some of our major trading partners are to be found. These are some of the reasons.

I suppose another is that interest rates, driven by inflation, have come to unacceptably high levels, preventing some people from continuing consumer buying at the rate that was in effect prior to the dates my honourable friend has mentioned, principally the last quarter of 1981. We hope that there will be a reduction in inflationary pressure, and there are indications that that is happening, which could be followed by such actions as a reduction in the interest rate. That, of course, is linked to greater confidence on the part of investors, and, indeed, consumer buyers whose purchases would involve interest charges on unpaid portions.

We have reason to expect that all of these things will work out well, because inflation is now receding somewhat rather than continuing its recent climb. Certainly, there is an enormous number of economic development projects in Canada that could alleviate the situation, not only as regards capital investment but, indeed, as regards the confidence that has to be established so that interest rates will not go skyrocketing again.

QUEBEC—BUSINESS FAILURES—NUMBER IN RECEIPT OF RDIA GRANT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question which is supplementary to that asked by Senator Flynn regarding bankruptcies and the new department of the Minister of State for Economic Development. My question concerns the grants that were given to many businesses during the past few years under the Regional Development Incentives Act. Could the minister produce a list which will indicate, out of the 405 Quebec businessmen who went into bankruptcy, those who were in receipt of an RDIA grant? Could the minister also indicate how the government expects to get repayment of the funds?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am not sure whether I can produce such a list, but I will take the question seriously and make every effort to do so. My honourable friend must also be aware of one other fact which relates to RDIA grants as well as other grants that are made from time to time by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That fact is that in order for any such program to perform effectively, it, by its very nature, must be ready to take higher risks than those that the commercial financial community would support. There is no question about that, honourable senators. If that were not the case, the program would not be doing its job. Perhaps it is not perfect, but we believe, and have believed for a number of years, that it is appropriate for the federal government to institute some kind of program that will take on some of the higher risks so that, as a result, more development can take place in the regions of this country.

It comes as no surprise to me that, if one is involved in somewhat higher risks of capital investment, one may suffer a higher risk of the consequences that follow should the businesses be unsuccessful.

Senator Marshall: I would agree, in part, with what the minister has said. I think, however, that if we saw the percentage of those businesses which went bankrupt and which also received RDIA grants, we would have some indication of the performance of this program. I am not merely interested in the performance in the province of Quebec, but across the country as well. Such a list would tell the whole story and could be helpful to the minister in advancing these grants through MSERD.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it is probably a good idea to review the performance of such programs now and then. I hope, however, that the honourable senator is not advocating that, somehow, regional economic development should be a "no risk" operation.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No!

Senator Olson: If it were such an operation, it certainly would not perform the function for which it was set up.

Senator Flynn: Who said that?

Senator Olson: No one has said that, but I know what the honourable senator is leading up to.

Senator Flynn: Wait until he does.

Senator Olson: He is inferring that somehow we should be absolutely certain that there is no risk involved. If there is no risk—or, at least, a no higher than normal risk—involved, there is really no purpose for DREE, either.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, perhaps the minister is going off on a tangent. I am not suggesting that at all. If he examines the records of the other place, he will see that I was one of those who gave the government credit for advancing venture capital, which the banks refused to do. I believe the question is legitimate. I think we should be aware of what is happening with the program. Perhaps some changes would be advisable which would make it better.

Senator Olson: I shall try to produce such a list. However, the other part of the honourable senator's question really has to do with how we are going to get our money back. We shall get our money back by means of the same recourse open to any individual with respect to any corporation that has gone into receivership or trusteeship. That usually means settling for something less than 100 cents on the dollar.

DECLINE IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING—NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hear, hear! Another first for Senator Donahoe!

Senator Donahoe: I appreciate the compliment. I can tell honourable senators that I made careful note of the minister's new title when it was announced in the chamber.

● (1425)

My question concerns a statement the Prime Minister made a little more than a week ago at a press conference which he called. He is quoted in the newspapers as saying that the share of all spending by government has declined from 52 per cent to 34 per cent.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Is that the federal government?

Senator Donahoe: The federal government. Well, it was the federal Prime Minister who said it.

Hon. Jack Marshall: That is Trudeau.

Senator Donahoe: My question is directed to the minister to whom I have already referred in such exact and glowing terms. Is the minister able to confirm that those are accurate figures?

Senator Olson: I believe that the Prime Minister had some basis for using those figures. I will ask him, if the honourable senator wishes, what compilations were used to arrive at those figures. It would depend on what was included, and whether it was just transfers to other governments. In fact, I think he also said, "excluding transfers to provincial governments."

We will have to check to make sure. I know Senator Donahoe will want to co-operate with me so that we can come to an agreement so that we will be adding the same things into the same columns. In some cases there are certain preliminary assumptions which have to be made.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): You have to read the whole speech.

Senator Donahoe: May I ask a supplementary question for the sake of clarity and in order to be of assistance, perhaps, to my honourable friend the minister?

The article in which I read the statement was printed in a newspaper. It also said at the same time that officials of the Department of Finance were baffled by these figures. When they were asked directly whether the figures were accurate, just as I have asked the minister this afternoon, their answer was that they were unable to explain the source of the figures.

My question is simple. The phrases used by those commenting on the Prime Minister's statement were:

It's curious . . . I don't know where they came from . . .

The Prime Minister has what amounts to a photographic memory. But . . . he's not always right.

Sometimes the camera does not open, or the lens does not take the right picture, or something, because he is not always accurate.

Senator Perrault: What are the names of these people? Do you have their names and positions? You must, of course, give your sources.

[Senator Donahoe.]

Senator Donahoe: I would be glad to supply a copy of the article to my learned friend.

Senator Perrault: Just the names. That is all we want.

Senator Donahoe: What names?

Senator Perrault: The names of the people he is quoting.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Homer nods!

Senator Donahoe: I beg your pardon. I misunderstood you. The official of the department who made this statement is a man by the name of John Holding. I am sure that it is possible for my honourable friend the Leader of the Government to verify the statement.

Anyway, Mr. Holding made the statement and my question is very simple: If it is not the problem of the Department of Finance that the Prime Minister is misleading Canadians as a prelude to cutting back on transfers to the provinces, it would seem about to become a problem of the provinces, and I want to know whether the minister can confirm that, in fact, the federal share of all government spending has increased since 1968, when Trudeau came to power.

Senator Olson: Well, the question of course gets into a great deal of difficulty because Senator Donahoe says at the outset that he is quoting from a newspaper, and then he wants me to comment on the accuracy of that. I should like to refer him to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, page 129, citation 357, which says:

A question oral or written must not—

I emphasize the word "not", and then under (e) it says:

—inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are true.

So he has ruled himself out of order by the preamble to his question.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You never understood the rules in your life.

Senator Olson: I understand them better than you do.

Senator Donahoe: Any port in a storm.

Senator Olson: No way!

Senator Donahoe: "Any port in a storm," I always say.

THE CABINET

HON. H. A. OLSON, P.C.—DESIGNATION

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege involving the Senate as a whole. In a statement made by Senator Olson, he described himself as the Minister of Economic and Regional Development, but in Hansard of March 2 he is listed as Minister of State for Economic Development. The Honourable Herbert Eser Gray is listed as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. So I think the honourable senator was incorrect when he described himself in this chamber as the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. However, if he claims that this list should be corrected, then that is another matter.

● (1430)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I shall have that list corrected to the complete satisfaction of my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. He is absolutely correct in saying that the legislative authority has not been passed by both houses of Parliament to change my title from Minister of State for Economic Development to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. However, there is no doubt that when things improve and Parliament can get on with its business, this matter will be dealt with as well. In any event, when I was asked to give my new designation, I replied very clearly that an "R", for Regional Development, was being added to my title, and once Parliament is in a position to deal with the legalities and the statutory requirements for which we on this side of the house have a great deal of respect, that will be the case. However, it will not be the case until both houses of Parliament pass it.

Senator Flynn: Of course, the legislation could be introduced in the Senate since it is not a matter involving money. If the honourable senator intends to take this approach, I hope that he will include more initials, because to have the "R" stand for Regional Development does not make sense.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have long since given up trying to find rational explanations—

Senator Flynn: Without success.

Senator Olson: —for interpretations which my honourable friend puts on most things. Once in a while his interpretations can be quite accurate, but in most cases I do not follow his logic or reasoning.

Senator Perrault: It is tortuous.

Senator Flynn: It is very difficult for me to adjust to your thinking.

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator cannot understand the initials and chooses to give them other connotations, then that is his choice and his right, and I am sure that he will continue to exercise his right, so I can give no undertaking that I will try to sort out my honourable friend's thinking.

Senator Perrault: Two-syllable words seem to confuse him.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISING

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it deals with certain advertising by Air Canada. It seems that many Canadian citizens took advantage of an advertisement offering a return trip from Toronto to Vancouver at $354, only to learn upon attempting to buy the tickets that there was a mistake, and the price was actually $448. To my mind, this comes very close to misleading advertising. We receive reports almost every month on the number of people and firms charged with misleading advertising, and I think that this may be a fine example. Would the Leader of the Government investigate the matter to determine whether Air Canada will be charged, and report back to this house?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would appreciate it if Senator Marshall would provide me with the details or a copy of the reported advertisement which, according to him, misled a number of people into believing that they could fly out to springtime in Vancouver at a lower price than they were ultimately asked to pay.

Senator Marshall: How much do you pay?

Senator Perrault: I would suggest to the honourable senator that in the first instance he should write to Air Canada to determine whether or not there was simply a typographical error.

Senator Marshall: I would never receive a reply.

THE ESTIMATES

DISTRIBUTION TO SENATORS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on February 24 Senator Marshall sought information on a question of privilege concerning the distribution of the estimates to senators. I contacted my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, on this matter. I have been provided with the assurance that copies of the estimates were sent out both to senators and members of the House of Commons at the same time through the normal distribution channels.

The problem seems to be in the distribution system in the East Block. Senators and members of the House of Commons with offices in that particular building seem to receive material, sent through Distribution, one day after everyone else. That appears to be the case in the distribution of the estimates. Senators were sent all of the material at the same time as everyone else. Therefore, it is not the Senate which is "always last to receive them," but those parliamentarians who occupy offices in the East Block.

Honourable senators, I am taking steps to see what can be done to rectify the situation and to make sure that senators who occupy offices in the East Block receive material, sent through Distribution, at the same time as everyone else.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ANNUAL SEAL HUNT—DYE SPRAYING OF SEALS BY PROTESTORS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Marshall asked a question about dyeing yesterday—that is, the dyeing of seals.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Perhaps you should explain that it is d-y-e-i-n-g.

Senator Perrault: As I promised last evening, I contacted the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on this subject to get a complete update on the situation. However, I thought it might be useful to repeat an answer given to the same question posed by Senator Marshall two years ago. It was given on April 29, 1980, and is to be found at page 134 of Debates of the Senate. It reads as follows:

I am informed by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans that experiments have been conducted on the effects of dyeing young harp seals. Apparently, small quantities of dye are not harmful to either the pup or the mother-pup interaction. In large quantities, however, it is possible that harmful effects could result. Certain dyes, for example, might possess odours which could interfere with the mother's ability to identify her own pup.

Although conclusive results are not yet available, individuals would be well advised to consider the possible dangers to the harp seal pups they claim they want to protect.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. John M. Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Tremblay be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Asselin on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONSIDERATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eleventh report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was tabled on Tuesday, March 2.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, the purpose of this report is to list the failures and successes of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments in this Parliament in persuading ministers and heads of agencies to correct matters with respect to regulations which we have brought directly to their attention.

Our committee examines all the regulations and other statutory instruments which appear in the Canada Gazette, or otherwise come to our attention. Our purpose and mandate is not to pass on the merits of a particular regulation. We approach it from a technical point of view to see whether or not the regulation is in breach of one of the 15 criteria under which the committee operates, and which have been approved by both chambers of Parliament.

The most important of these criteria is whether or not the regulation is authorized by the terms of the enabling statute. In other words, is it ultra vires? Other important criteria are whether, in the absence of express authority to that effect in the enabling statute, the regulation purports to have retroactive effect; appears to amount to the exercise of a substantive legislative power properly the subject of direct parliamentary enactment; imposes a fine, imprisonment or other penalty; imposes a charge on the public revenue; or requires payment to the Crown for any licence or service.

Two other criteria are whether or not it is in conformity with the Canadian Bill of Rights, or is unclear in its meaning or otherwise defective in its drafting.

If we are unsuccessful in persuading a department or crown agency to amend or withdraw a regulation that offends one of our criteria, our only recourse is to expose this intransigence and give the department concerned a slap on the wrist by reporting the matter to Parliament.

I am pleased to state that one minister in the last Parliament was so concerned at the exposure of an irregularity in the regulation-making process of his department that he bitterly resented—and said so in the other place when the report was being debated—our reporting the matter to Parliament without notifying him personally of our objections beforehand. We had been dealing exclusively with his senior officials, and had presumed that they had kept their minister advised. The committee thought that the minister had a very valid complaint, and we amended our procedure accordingly.

Our initial procedure remains unchanged. When the committee objects to or questions some provision in a regulation, it instructs our counsel to take the matter up with the designated instruments officer of the department or agency responsible for the enactment of the regulation.

The officer concerned may satisfy the committee that our initial objection was not valid. If not, and no promise of remedial action can be obtained, the committee chairmen, as a last resort, write the responsible minister or head of the relevant agency.

The committee may, after hearing from the minister or head of the agency, be satisfied. If not, and the minister or agency head declines to take action, the committee reports the regulation to both houses.

As honourable senators can see from the schedules to our report, the committee has had a fair amount of co-operation and success with some departments, less so with others. Some departments are very co-operative; with others—and they would be the largest group—we have had mixed success; and then there are a few departments where we have little or no success at all.

Schedule II lists six instances where the minister concerned has not even had the courtesy to reply to our original letter or the follow-up one. Three of these instances involve the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and one each for the Department of Finance, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Incidentally, of these, it is only the Department of Finance and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that I would put in the third group as departments where the committee has had little or no success.

Schedule I lists eight instances where departments have given undertakings to the committee to take action, but nothing has been done so far. Two of these go back to August 1980, two to February 1981, two to March 1981, and one each to April 1981 and May 1981. Three involve the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and one each for the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of National Defence, and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Of these, it is only the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that I would place in the unco-operative third group, whereas the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Defence would definitely be placed in the first group because they co-operate by responding promptly, and almost always either do what the committee wants or convince us that we are wrong.

Schedule III records the outcome of all matters raised with ministers and heads of agencies during this session of Parliament. It is to be noted that these total 50, and of these 50 there are 34 instances where the minister either took the action requested by the committee or gave an undertaking to do so. This shows that we have been successful in 68 per cent of the cases in which we have dealt with ministers—which is not bad, considering that the committee's only power is persuasion and, if necessary, exposure in a report to Parliament. This latter remedy apparently has considerable influence on many ministers; there are a few, however, who apparently could not care less and presumably they will continue not to care, unless the media give more publicity to our reports.

I should also point out that the committee has been successful in many other cases where our counsel has dealt with the designated instruments officer only and it has not been necessary to appeal to the minister.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the tenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was presented on Wednesday, December 16, 1981.

Hon. John M. Godfrey moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, the tenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments was presented to this house on December 16, 1981. I did not make a speech on the report at the time because, frankly, I could not think of anything to say that was not already in the report. However, I think now is the time to remind honourable senators and the government of what is in that report and why we were critical of the government for enacting three sections of the Claims Regulations.

Two of these sections involve what employees of the federal government must do when they are involved in an incident that may give rise to a claim against the Crown for damages.

One of the legal points that often arise, for example, where a Crown-owned motor vehicle is involved, is whether or not the employee was acting within the scope of his duties or employment at the time the incident occurred. A judge trying such a case would consider the factual evidence as to what the employee's duties are and the evidence as to what the employee was actually doing when the incident occurred, and then arrive at the legal decision as to whether he was or was not acting within the scope of his duties or employment, and thus whether the Crown was liable.

These two sections referred to in our report actually require the employee, who is usually not a lawyer, to state what is essentially a legal conclusion, namely, whether or not he was, in his opinion, acting within the scope of his duties or employment when the incident occurred.

As stated in our report, the committee considered this to be unfair and wrong in principle. The employee should be asked factual questions concerning factual matters. The legal conclusions that can be drawn from the facts should be left to the lawyers and the courts. Employees should not be asked questions beyond their competence to answer.

The other section to which exception was taken is section 8(a) of the Regulations which requires the Deputy Attorney General to give "his opinion on the position the Crown should adopt respecting liability" arising out of an incident where an employee is involved. The Deputy Attorney General in section 8(b) must also give "his opinion as to whether or not"

- (i) the incident was occasioned by the negligence of an officer or servant of the Crown, and
- (ii) the officer or servant of the Crown involved was acting within the scope of his duties or employment at the time the incident occurred—

The opinion given under section 8(b) is, of course, perfectly proper and necessary.

The committee felt very strongly that the opinion required in section 8(a) was improper because the Crown should govern itself by the highest possible standard of conduct in litigation.

It is outrageous, if the Crown has a legal opinion under section 8(b) that it is liable because the incident was occasioned by the negligence of an officer or servant of the Crown who was acting within the scope of his duties or employment, that it should then be advised by the Deputy Attorney General to deny liability in the hope that they can make a settlement for a smaller amount of damages.

As we say in our report, given the great advantages that attend the Crown as litigant, "particularly in relation to citizens with limited means, it seems to your Committee right and proper that the Crown should readily admit its liability when it has a legal opinion to that effect. If a satisfactory settlement cannot be reached, any litigation should be confined to the quantum of damages."

It is, I might add, astonishing that the government should be so insensitive to what is right and proper, as to blatantly disclose in a regulation that they are prepared to approve tactics which would not normally be adopted by any decent and honourable individual, or corporation in the private sector.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Nurgitz, debate adjourned.

BROADCASTING

REGION 2 MF (AM) BROADCASTING CONFERENCE (SECOND SESSION)—ORDER DISCHARGED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Stollery calling the attention of the Senate to the Region 2 MF (AM) Broadcasting Conference (Second Session) held during November and December, 1981, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Order No. 10 calls for the resumption of the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Stollery calling the attention of the Senate to the Region 2 MF (AM) Broadcasting Conference. I moved the adjournment of this debate to allow honourable senators to participate, if they so wished. If no other senator desires to speak, then I would suggest that the order be discharged.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order discharged.

EDUCATION

CONCERN FOR FUTURE OF POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 18, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Macquarrie calling the attention of the Senate to the widespread expressions of concern from educational leaders concerning the future of post-secondary institutions in Canada, in particular with reference to governmental grants.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to congratulate Senator Macquarrie for taking the initiative in bringing this very important matter of post-secondary education in Canada to our attention and, through us, to the attention of the Canadian nation as a whole. I listened to, and subsequently read, Senator Macquarrie's speech, much of which was of a humorous nature but, nevertheless, serious. I did not agree with everything he said, as would be expected.

There are a couple of things in his speech that I am going to refer to. At one point he said:

I rarely run across a cheerful administrator.

He was referring to the universities and institutions of higher learning. He also said:

It is a time of crisis for the universities.

Like Senator Macquarrie, I have had some experience with universities in one way or another, and that covers a period going back to when I first went to university—52 years ago. At one period Senator Smith and I were both provincial ministers of highways and also successive Presidents of the Canadian Roads Association—the Canadian Good Roads Association, I believe they called it then—and it was our duty and practice—I do not know where it originated—as president of the association, to make what was called a presidential tour across Canada. In doing that, we would visit all of the universities of Canada. I do not know if that practice still continues, but it was a very valuable and enlightening one. We met with the presidents of universities and technical colleges, and my recollection is that, without exception, every university we visited was going through a period of crisis. I do not think we came across one administrator who was cheerful about the situation, to use Senator Macquarrie's term.

Senator Macquarrie, in relation to post-secondary education—and I believe he was speaking extemporaneously, and used words that are rather too strong at the present time—said:

—what the Minister of Finance is putting forward is almost incomprehensible. I think it is also iniquitous.

I do not agree with that, and I will deal with it further on in my speech.

I should also like to congratulate the Leader of the Government—although I notice that he is not in the chamber at the moment—for the excellent speech he made in reply to Senator Macquarrie. What Senator Perrault gave us was an excellent outline of federal-provincial relationships in this matter of post-secondary education. Also, he reminded us of something that I am inclined to forget, and that is that the federal government's contribution to post-secondary education is not limited to these transferred grants—or whatever we might call them—that they make directly for post-secondary education. As Senator Perrault pointed out, we have such things as military education, student loans, manpower training and many other fields where Ottawa is making a direct or an indirect contribution to the overall costs of education.

I want to congratulate my colleague and esteemed educator, Senator Hicks, for the very interesting and valuable contribution he made to this debate. He gave us statistics, that I had never seen before, showing the contributions through the years that the various federal governments had made to education. I was interested to note that he and I are in agreement on this matter of accountability. I cannot see how we could go on indefinitely having the federal government pumping such huge sums of money into post-secondary education and not require some degree of accountability. I do not say there is anything seriously wrong with that. I realize there are inherent dangers that must be obvious; nevertheless, it is something that Senator Hicks said we could live with.

If I may go back again, I am reminded of the building of the Trans-Canada Highway. Highways and roads were a provincial responsibility. Nevertheless, in the early 1950s the Government of Canada came into the picture through the medium of the Trans-Canada Highway Agreements.

Senator Rowe: Yes. But there was accountability. I spent five years as Minister of Highways and I know we received grants of 50 per cent to start with, and later it was raised to 90 per cent, but certainly we had to account for it. I do not think it in any way upset or disturbed any of the inherent rights of the provinces in those matters. I give that as an opinion, for what it is worth. I do not think the matter of visibility has any great potential hazards at all. This matter of visibility is as old as federal-provincial relations.

Going back to the Trans-Canada Highway—and I was as much to blame for this as anybody—when the then Minister of Public Works, Bob Winters, came to Newfoundland he would see the signs showing what the Government of Newfoundland was doing. He objected, as did subsequent Ministers of Public Works, and rightly so. I am sure that I would have done the same had I been in their position. I would have objected to the fact that wherever one looked one saw the province getting the credit.

● (1500)

Hon. George J. McIlraith: They were wonderful signs.

Senator Rowe: Yes, they were. They were good signs. I helped to design some of them. So I do not believe we need spend much time on this matter of visibility.

I was interested in the figures prepared by Senator Hicks which appear in Hansard. In recent years Ottawa has contributed 83 per cent of the costs of post-secondary education in Newfoundland, 98 per cent in New Brunswick and approximately 50 per cent in Alberta and Quebec. Those are significant figures.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Would the honourable senator be kind enough to give me the reference in Hansard for those figures?

Senator Rowe: Yes, I will be glad to. In connection with Senator Hicks' speech on February 18 of this year, the tables were printed as an appendix. Senator Macquarrie's speech was given on December 2, when he introduced the motion.

I come now to Senator Macquarrie's use of the words "incomprehensible" and "iniquitous," with reference to the budget of the Minister of Finance or what was hoped to be done with respect to post-secondary education. I say quite seriously that we have to be careful here that we do not fall into the old trap of looking for everything to be in black and white, looking for the good guys and the bad guys. There are no villains in this situation. We may differ in our approach to education and with regard to the political aspects of the various federal-provincial agreements, but I do not believe that we should allow education to become a political football, as has so often happened in the past.

In this connection, may I say that I do not believe that what the federal Minister of Finance is doing is either incomprehensible or iniquitous. I cannot accept that a man who was a distinguished academic, a distinguished professor in his own right, is not as concerned about the future of post-secondary education as I am or any other honourable senator; and, by the same token, with regard to the Honourable Mr. Regan, who, as we know, is deeply involved with these matters, I do not believe that his record while Premier of Nova Scotia—later I shall refer to Nova Scotia in connection with this subject of post-secondary education—in support of post-secondary education, and indeed education at all levels, can be criticized. However, I will come back to that in a moment, because I believe we can learn a good deal from what has happened in the province of Nova Scotia.

Also on this point, in the federal cabinet we have the Honourable William Rompkey as spokesman for Newfoundland, at the federal level, on education and other matters, and I am sure that no one can accuse him of not being concerned about the future of post-secondary education, if for no other reason than the simple fact that he is a professional educator in his own right. He has three university degrees, one in English, one in education and another in adult education. Because he advocates either this or that, no one should assume that he is no longer interested in or concerned about post-secondary education. That would be arrant nonsense. I am not implying that Senator Macquarrie tried to make us believe that—I do not believe he did; but there are people who appear to be inclined to distinguish between the good fellows and the bad.

I do not believe that the persons I have named are less concerned about education than, let us say, are Senators Macquarrie, Lamontagne, Hicks, Yuzyk or myself, all of whom have some background in education at the professional level.

One fact emerges from the figures given by Senator Hicks and Senator Perrault, which I believe can give us some degree of comfort. It is that since the federal government entered the picture in the early 1950s, when Mr. St. Laurent was Prime Minister, the federal government's contribution has continued to rise, and I believe that the federal government's contribution will continue to rise.

There is, of course, the growing fear—particularly in academic quarters—connected with the federal government's concern over the problems of unemployment, particularly in this technological age, that the needs of technology will be met at the expense of the traditional university programs. I believe that to be a very real fear and that it is something about which we should all be concerned.

As our economic needs become more serious, we might see a repetition of what happened during the great depression of the 1930s. I went through it, as did many other honourable senators. In 1932 the government then in power cut grants to various government programs, and also salaries for various categories of public servants, by 20 per cent. Educational grants, most of which were used for the payment of teachers, were cut by 50 per cent. Why was that done? Because that was the easiest thing to do, and education suffered. We have to watch, in these difficult times, which may become worse, that any federal or provincial government does not take the easy way out when it comes to economizing and cause our education facilities to suffer.

I wish to enunciate again one or two principles. I did this earlier in my Senate career, but it is something about which we should keep reminding ourselves. It was the great classical universities of Europe and of the Middle East—Coimbra in Portugal, the Sorbonne in Paris, the several city-state universities in what is now Italy, and Oxford—which more than anything else rescued Europe from the Dark Ages and from the intellectual and political stagnation of medieval times.

In the same context, I think we must always bear in mind that, in spite of technical advances, mankind, which includes us, is capable of reverting to the Dark Ages; in fact, in several countries in the world, perhaps in several dozen, this reversion is already taking place, or has already done so. There is no law that says that we cannot revert in that way. Every day we read the news in newspapers, or watch it on television, and can see manifestations of such a reversion.

It is not an accident that Canada has become one of the greatest and most advanced countries in the world, with a high standard of living and of civilization generally. To find equivalent standards one has to go to some of the smaller countries of Europe, such as Denmark, Holland, Switzerland and one or two others. I would remind honourable senators that the standards of civilization achieved in Holland, for example, over the past 400 years were not due to what we call here, sometimes, our "matchless natural resources." Nor has the greatness of Canada, or the standards we have achieved here over these last hundred years or so, been due to our resources, whether in the form of minerals, water power, forests, or great farm lands. These things were born of the character and training of the people who made up Canada from the outset. There are other countries in the world whose resources are equal to ours, but not their standards. This is not chauvinism or parochialism; it is a simple statement of fact.

I am not sure if I have ever brought up this next point in the Senate. If I have, it will bear repetition.

Some 30 or 40 years ago a survey was made in the United States with the object of finding out which state had the highest cultural and economic standards, which state would be the most desirable in which to live, and which the least desirable in which to live. The survey was not conducted by academics, by professors at universities. A cross-section was consulted across all of the 48 states, which was all there were at that time. A number of criteria were used, but I will not go into detail on that.

The substance of their findings was that the state which had the highest standards of civilization was the State of Massachusetts. Furthermore, of the 48 states the one that spent the most per capita on post-secondary education, as well as on primary and secondary education, was also the State of Massachusetts. Interesting enough, the state which had the poorest standards of civilization was also the one that spent the least per capita on education. That, speaking from memory, was the State of Mississippi. I am speaking now of some forty or fifty years ago.

I think it is significant that the first colony, which became the first state in what is now the United States, to create an institute of higher learning was also Massachusetts. I believe that Harvard University was founded in the year 1636. Eventually, a second institution was created side by side with Harvard, though the Harvard people had some apprehensions about it, believing that this new seat of learning would hurt them. This institution was the one that we now know as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Just as the people at Harvard were worried about the advent of that second institution, so concern is being expressed in our liberal arts universities with regard to what is considered as being an increasing emphasis on technological education. It is not that there is an objection to such education, since we obviously must have it in this day and age; but there is a fear that in emphasizing technological education at every level we may be sacrificing historic and traditional educational values.

In that connection I want to say that in the western world, at any rate, universities have always shown a remarkable ability to change with the times and meet the new demands of society. I believe that we can trust universities to adjust to contemporary needs here without too much prodding from the federal or any other government. I think we have to have that much trust in our universities. The people who make up the faculties of those universities are Canadians, and are just as concerned about the future of this country as are all of us here. As a matter of fact, I was struck by certain figures given by a university president only recently. He said that there was an increase in the number of students in the faculties of engineering, business administration and computer science. That happened without any prodding from the federal government, or, as far as I know, from any provincial government.

I believe it was Senator Macquarrie who suggested the idea of a conference on post-secondary education, with representation from all concerned groups, including the national government, provincial governments, even municipal governments, certainly the universities and their organizations, and so on, with the object of attempting to work out some formula for applying federal and provincial help to post-secondary education over a fairly long period of time.

Universities have become very large. Student bodies of 10,000, 15,000 or 20,000, with faculties of perhaps several thousand, are not uncommon. You cannot run that sort of institution the way you can, as we used to say in Newfoundland, a corner "bull's eye" shop. It is big business now, apart from anything else. Such a conference might very well serve to allay some of the apprehensions, and, indeed, some misapprehensions, that exist in the minds of so many people today.

Honourable senators, I want to say a few words—and this is also related to this whole business of federal contributions to post-secondary education—about the situation that we see in Newfoundland today.

In 1949, when Newfoundland became part of Canada, we did not have a fully fledged university. We had a university college which had been established in 1925. In 1925 we also had another institute of higher learning, which was the Teacher Training School. Memorial College, as it was then known, offered courses of two years' duration in most of its disciplines, and a course of three years' duration in engineering.

In 1949 the Government of Newfoundland created, by statute, a university. At that time approximately 360 students were enrolled. Today, that university has an enrolment of 10,000 students. At present, Memorial University is one of the world leaders in what I understand is known as "cold water research" and in marine research in general. That university has the most modern medical school and teaching hospital in all of Canada. It has the most modern school of engineering as well. I say that it is the most modern because it is the newest school of its kind in the country. In January of 1982, the university opened the most modern library in Canada. This new library cost tens of millions of dollars and, at any given moment, affords 2,000 students individual accommodation. Honourable senators, it is not just in my opinion that these facilities are regarded so highly; I am citing to you the opinions of authorities involved in those fields all across the country.

The faculties of geology and biochemistry are becoming world famous, as is the Department of Folklore. The genetic research that is being carried on at Memorial University has also attracted world-wide attention, especially with regard to cancer research.

Today, honourable senators, the Extension Service affects the lives of tens of thousands of Newfoundlanders who have never been inside a university. It is rather interesting, in my view, that of the five presidents holding office since the university was founded in 1949, four of them, including the most recent, were born in the outports of Newfoundland. Dr. Leslie Harris, who became president a few months ago, is himself a product of that university of which he is now the head. That gives me, as I know it does a great many other Newfoundlanders, great cause for satisfaction.

If I may repeat myself, honourable senators, in the event that someone should regard us as being a little parochial, I should like to pay tribute to the non-Newfoundlanders who are working at Memorial University and at its branch at Corner Brook. These eminent scholars from all parts of the world came to Memorial in part, I suppose, to make a livelihood, although they could have done so elsewhere. Perhaps they chose this university because it required "pioneer work." Today, these scholars from other parts of the world are making an admirable contribution to the university and, of course, to Canada. It is, in every sense of the word, a community of scholars. One might ask: What does that have to do with the subject at hand? Most of these accomplishments would have been impossible without the federal grants to Newfoundland.

Honourable senators, every day during this period of economic turbulence we are assailed by claims and counterclaims, accusations and denials, and may, as a result, find ourselves doing something that Plato warned us against approximately 2,400 years ago. To paraphrase, "Whatever else you might quarrel about," he said, "don't quarrel about education. It is too important." I plead with everyone concerned, at all government, political and ideological levels, to bear in mind another admonition handed down to us by Plato. I quote his exact words:

Neither must we cast a slight upon education, which is the first and fairest thing that the best of men can ever have and which, though liable to take a wrong direction, is capable of reformation. And this work of reformation is the great business of every man while he lives.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Flynn, for Senator Tremblay, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 10, the debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces", tabled in the Senate on February 10, 1982.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, while I have come to know Senator Lafond as a very modest man, I am sure that all of my colleagues will join with me in paying a tribute to him in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on National Defence. He should be commended for his leadership and guidance in our deliberations, which produced the first report of the subcommittee entitled "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces."

One of my military contacts, upon reading it, felt that the report and the testimony presented to the committee provided what is probably the best collection of factual information and formed opinion on Canadian military affairs in more than a decade. I hope that this report will have the same effect on those within government who have the power to act on our recommendations.

It is satisfactory to note, within the past three weeks, that the plea made to Canada by the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, General Rogers, to increase the size of the Canadian brigade in Europe coincides with the recommendation of the subcommittee to increase the strength of that brigade by 4,400 personnel from its present complement of 5,400. Further, it was a source of satisfaction to note that U.S. Admiral Harry Train supports the need for Canada to beef up its sea power by acquiring new frigates, and to replace our aging vessels which have become an embarrassment to Canada.

Certainly we, as members of the subcommittee, should be pleased by the fact that the estimates recently tabled in the chamber show that Canada will spend more than $7 billion on defence in the next year. This represents an increase of 19 per cent, and is in line with the federal promise to meet our NATO commitments for the procurement of the F-18 fighter, the long-range patrol planes, the refitting of aging destroyers, the purchase of medium-sized tanks and wheeled vehicles, and the promise to meet the increased cost of maintenance and operation of our planes and ships and to expand our military manpower.

We cannot, however, be satisfied even with these expenditures in this period of galloping inflation. As the report suggests, we must find another $1.7 billion to keep pace with our projected short-term requirements. To those who say, "We cannot afford to," I say: We cannot afford not to. Even this comparatively modest amount is the penalty we must pay because of past neglect of our defence system and the depressed priority level to which national defence has been pushed for far too long.

It is really amazing, honourable senators, that our troops have been able to perform so well under present circumstances. They should be given every credit for what they have been able to accomplish over the past decade.

What the government has done to the Canadian Forces is shameful and must be corrected. Even though we received positive reaction to our report from the Minister of National Defence himself, who stated publicly that the report should be taken seriously, that it was realistic and well balanced, and particularly his supporting the need for a white paper, I have to treat that reaction on the part of the minister with cautious optimism. I am convinced that the minister is sincere in what he says himself. I am sure he wants to continue in the stated trend of defence spending, but I am not as trusting of the conscientious objectors who sit in cabinet or on Treasury Board.

Certainly, the spending announced last year was welcomed by all concerned and gave a special boost to the morale of the military. Certainly, it is in vivid contrast to the government's attitude on defence in the sixties and seventies. Certainly, the projected five-year outlay of some $40 billion should allay the fears of pessimists. But I have to confess that I am one of them, because I have heard those stories before. My reason for pessimism is because of the new exclamations of spending restraints alluded to in the recent budget, which noted that defence expenditures were placing considerable pressure on the government's financial position, and which advised defence management to proceed on the assumption that there would be no further upward adjustments for at least two years. Again, the positive intentions of the government to provide vast sums for defence spending have been tempered—tempered by the recently announced restraints which tend to demoralize.

I have another concern due to the fact that, as I understand it, an interdepartmental committee has been established to look into the question of whether the planned purchases by Canada are the right ones, whether the government will really have enough money to pay for them, and also whether the proportion of the budget now spent on overhead can realistically be cut in favour of still more capital spending.

We can only hope that the conclusions reached in this report will not detract from the thrust now being made by the government, because a withdrawal or postponement of committed defence procurement would be unwise, unfair and, in fact, downright stupid.

To avoid taking up too much of your time by going into all aspects of the report, honourable senators, and because many aspects will be covered by other members of the committee, I want to restrict my remarks to the reserves and the cadets.

After re-reading our report in conjunction with the report of the other place, entitled "Action for Reserves," I question why, if we believe in the total force concept and that the regular and reserve forces should be equal participants, the reserves should be studied in isolation, particularly when dealing with the manpower question which is so interrelated.

Despite the fact that the report deserves commendation for its more detailed study, it indicates a lack of co-ordination in parliamentary efforts, a waste of resources and a duplication of effort. The reserves, to my mind, must play a more meaningful role as a vital and equal component of the total force. Unless the government and the military stop treating the reserves as poor cousins whom they have to put up with, just giving them some of the leftovers, and unless they stop treating the reserves with other than token promises and condescending pats on the back about how important they are, the reserves will continue to deteriorate to a state of ineffectiveness—if they have not already reached that state, other than for a few isolated units who hold strong in spite of, rather than with, regular force support and because of a strong unit dedication by a smattering of officers and men who have some unit spirit, dedication and patriotism still left within their hearts.

I cannot share the optimism of the Director General of Reserves and Cadets, who appeared before the committee, that more attention will be paid to the reserves in manpower, training and equipment, because that same rhetoric has been bandied about every year since World War II. I remember when they appointed the Chief of Reserves, General Rohmer. Somewhere in his evidence he said that during his tour of duty—as a major general, I think—he was never once asked his opinion on the reserves.

[Senator Marshall.]

I say all this, honourable senators, even though I hope that time will prove me wrong. I know that General Cowan is sincere in what he says, but he and other senior officers, as well as the minister, are repeating the same stories that have been told each and every year in the reserves through speeches to the Conference of Defence Associations or the other militia reserve associations. I can verify that, because in my own militia service of over 20 years I heard the same rhetoric at the annual meetings and inspections—and, indeed, as we were told at our committee hearings.

I have here a quotation from the newspaper The Reservist in which General Cowan is quoted as saying:

It is an acknowledged fact that in recent years the repeated budget cuts in the Department of National Defence have resulted in our "reserves" suffering. The units have not been getting the equipment they needed and we have not been able to update the facilities the way they should have been.

How true those words are. But "now," he said, "we are doing our utmost to correct that. The lean years are over. Canada's reserve forces are on the move."

I sincerely hope that that is not just wishful thinking, but I am afraid it is unless a new attitude towards the reserves is developed in the coming months and years.

Honourable senators, if we agree with the premise that our country cannot afford a standing military force capable of fulfilling all our military tasks, and if we are to stop once and for all the on-again-off-again political declarations made according to the whims and fancies of whoever happens to be Minister of National Defence at the time, Canada must decide that the most economic way to go is through the reserves, and we will have to rebuild, strengthen and support the reserves to such an extent that we can establish a nucleus of adequately trained patriotic Canadians who can fulfil a meaningful role as an integral element of our total force. In particular, they must be trained to a level where they are able to react or respond to our wartime needs.

I should like to refer to a paragraph on the reserves contained in the 1981 report entitled "Defence Canada." It states:

The reserves are an integral part of the structure of the Canadian forces; they receive challenging employment, equitable pay and service conditions, and training which recognizes the vital role they have in the Canadian Forces.

Well, I don't really know what reserve forces they are talking about in that paragraph, because they certainly do not receive challenging employment, they do not receive equitable pay, and they do not have the same service conditions and training. But giving them the benefit of the doubt, honourable senators, I am hoping that we will see increases in supplies, equipment and ammunition and the expansion and new construction of armouries, training grounds and ranges as a result of the $230 million budget indicated by General Cowan.

For the purposes of this exercise, dealing with our report, while I could go on to stress the damage that has been caused to our Canadian Forces over the years, and to the reserves, repeating this at this stage would not help, especially in view of the thrust of spending promised by the government.

I agree with General Withers and the minister that we should stop looking over our shoulders. By way of recommendations, both our report and that of the committee of the other place list in clear detail our short- and long-term requirements as well as a number of complaints made by people in a position to know, including militia officers who now command units.

I should like to stress one particular recommendation in our report having to do with the Reserves. It reads:

● (1540)

A new Standing Reserve Force might be created, for example consisting of 2,000-3,000 personnel recruited into units which could be called for some 6 months service on a rotational basis.

I wonder why that point was missed. The paragraph goes on:

One of its main tasks would be to maintain an effective Canadian presence in the North.

Of course, there are other tasks, particularly those of a domestic nature. The report goes on to say, in the same paragraph:

The Supplementary Reserve could be upgraded and made a major source of augmentation and reinforcement personnel for Regular formations. A new Ready Reserve for augmentation and reinforcement purposes might also be considered.

And the report goes on to make other recommendations.

Personally, I would go further than the report and suggest the formulation of a national compulsory service under a youth development program for youths of 16 and 17 years of age for a period of six months. I hope to introduce an inquiry or private bill on the subject in the near future.

Turning for a moment to the topic of cadets, I feel that Canada's cadet program is one of the best, simply because of its value to our youth. To illustrate this, I quote from the 1981 National Defence report:

The cadet program is providing a challenging and rewarding experience for a large segment of young Canadians and is succeeding in its stated aims of developing in youth the attributes of good citizenship and leadership, promoting physical fitness; and stimulating the interest of youth in the navy, army and air force components of the Canadian Forces. For the first time in several years the strength of the cadet movement increased rather than declined.

In the naval report the Minister of National Defence and the Chief of the Defence Staff indicated that they could not understand why the number of cadets was increasing while the reserves were decreasing in personnel and deteriorating to, as I described, a state of ineffectiveness. The reason for this, of course, is because of the fact that four years ago permission was given to the cadet corps to take in females. On speaking to a cadet officer in St. John's, Newfoundland, I learned that there are 2,100 cadets in 31 units within the province and that 40 per cent of those cadets are girls. Of those 2,100 cadets there are only three regular force personnel. I also want to add that the increase in personnel in the cadets is partially due to the dedication of a few people who still believe in what the cadets have to offer, and I hope that the government will adopt the same belief in the near future.

This increase in the number of cadets is not without its problems. For example, because of the high numbers, many cadets are being denied the opportunity to attend summer camp simply because these camps are restricted to quotas. As a result, many cadets are leaving the cadet corps in disgust. Of the 2,100 cadets in the province of Newfoundland, the province with which I am most familiar, only 450 cadets will be able to attend summer camp.

I wish that Senator Molgat were present in the chamber, because I want to make him aware of the fact that at Camp Argonaut, where upwards of 1,000 cadets train and on which many thousands of dollars have been spent in upgrading, the people in control of the purse-strings will not spend $40,000 to install a swimming pool. I hope that General Cowan can see his way clear to providing the moneys for that pool out of the $230 million just allocated. In an attempt to raise the $40,000, the cadet instructors are running raffles and anything else they can think of, as well as contributing from their pay-cheques, to raise money to have this pool installed. I realize that this matter has nothing to do with the overall defence of Canada, but it certainly relates to an integral part of the development of our forces.

I believe that the school cadet program should be an integral part of the school curriculum, as was the case years ago. That program was one of the best programs Canada ever had for youth. It provided leadership, respect and discipline, and brought out and channeled the energies of our youth. Indeed, I wonder why we run lotteries in our provinces to raise millions of dollars to provide for physical development of our youth without taking into account all those kids in the rural areas who never get a chance. I find it ironic that while we tell our kids that they should not drink because it is bad for their health, they are deluged with advertising by the beer companies associating the good life and the values of sport and physical development with drinking beer.

Finally, I would like to refer to one sentence in the introduction to the report entitled "Action for Reserves" which, to me, puts into perspective what our part-time reserves are all about:

Reserve training has contributed importantly to the development of local leadership and nurtured a sense of citizenship and patriotism . . . Service in the reserves has been a significant expression of voluntary tradition which runs so strongly through Canadian society.

Our government and the Department of National Defence should look at this expression by young Canadians. It appears that we are now finally on the road to building up our forces to the point where we can contribute and participate with pride, as we should, in Canada's forces.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debated adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE HONOURABLE PAUL YUZYK

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF HONORARY DOCTORATE BY UKRAINIAN FREE UNIVERSITY, MUNICH, GERMANY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it will be of great interest to you that last Friday, March 5, Senator Paul Yuzyk was awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy Honoris Causa by the Ukrainian Free University, Munich, Germany. This high honour was conferred upon him on the occasion of the 90th anniversary of Ukrainian settlement in Canada, which was celebrated throughout the country last year.

This recognition was given to Senator Yuzyk for his contributions to the educational, cultural and political progress of his people in Canada, for his leadership in promoting the cause of multiculturalism, and for his defence of human rights in Canada, at NATO and at the United Nations.

Senator Yuzyk, as you know, is an M.A. graduate of the University of Saskatchewan, and a Ph.D. graduate of the University of Manitoba. He was a professor of East European, Russian and Soviet history at the University of Manitoba and at the University of Ottawa. He is the author of several books concerning the contribution of the Ukrainian people to Canada. Of course, his activity here in the Senate is well known, but I thought mention should be made of this great honour that has been bestowed upon him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is certainly most appropriate for the Leader of the Opposition to draw to the attention of all honourable senators this significant honour accorded Senator Yuzyk. Those who support the government in this chamber extend their congratulations to the senator.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I am most grateful to Senator Flynn, the Leader of the Opposition, and to Senator Perrault, the Leader of the Government, for their kind words, and I am grateful also to the senators for the warm applause that I have been accorded in the Senate chamber. Indeed, I consider it a great honour to have been recognized by a university that has struggled against great odds to keep alive an independent centre of Ukrainian academic studies.

Since the conquest of the Ukrainian Independent State in 1921 the system of education of that country has been totally subordinated to Russian communist and imperialist goals and programs imposed by coercion and intimidation. It is to the everlasting credit of the Bavarian and German governments that they accommodated and gave financial support, and that they gave legal status on a par with German state universities, to the Ukrainian Free University in 1945. The Minister of the Interior at Bonn, Herr Baum, spoke at this convocation.

The institution has a proud record. Many of the university staff have taken positions in universities, colleges and higher educational institutions in the United States, Canada and elsewhere, where they have attained distinguished careers and, in many cases, have helped to establish departments of Ukrainian Studies in language, literature, history and culture.

Several hundred graduates with M.A. and Ph. D. degrees have found important positions in the United States and Canada.

I am indeed happy to join the exclusive circle of those who have been awarded honorary doctorate degrees by the Ukrainian Free University, among whom are also such outstanding Canadian scholars as Professor R. Watson Kirkconnell, President of Acadia University, and poet and writer; Professor George W. Simpson, Chairman of the History Department, University of Saskatchewan; and the former Prime Minister, John G. Diefenbaker, statesman and ardent defender of Ukraine statehood. These men have had a profound influence on the course of my life and, therefore, I am profoundly indebted to them.

• (1410)

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: I would like to add my voice to the congratulations already voiced by others to our colleague, Senator Yuzyk. I received more than passing pleasure and share vicariously the satisfaction I am sure he must feel today, because our backgrounds have so much in common. I congratulate him, and I hope that he will long be spared to carry on the multitude of activities in which he is engaged.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ROWE

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I have a rather small matter of privilege. Yesterday in the course of my remarks in the debate on post-secondary education, I spoke of a survey that had been done some 40 years ago and stated, speaking from memory, that of the two states named in the survey, Missouri was on the losing side. I am sure most of my colleagues realized that I was making a mistake. I realized my mistake on the way out of the chamber, and I was able to have it corrected in Hansard before publication. Rather than the State of Missouri, I should have said the State of Mississippi.

In fairness, I want to stress again that this survey took place some 40-odd years ago, and anybody familiar with that lovely state and that beautiful University of Mississippi will know that conditions have changed greatly for the better since that survey was made.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 16, 1982, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

MANPOWER TRAINING AND JOB CREATION EXPENDITURES— ANNOUNCEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an announcement with respect to manpower training and job creation expenditures. I received this statement shortly before 2 o'clock this afternoon, and I provided a copy for the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate in advance of our sitting this afternoon. I have also had copies made in both official languages for distribution to honourable senators, and I ask for the assistance of the pages in having them distributed.

I am pleased to announce today that the federal government is boosting its training and job creation expenditures by an extra $208 million in a move aimed at meeting employment needs of young people and other Canadians. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration said in his announcement:

This is a commitment on the government's part to act now so that our young people can receive the kind of training they need to get permanent and well-paying jobs... We want to be certain that young Canadians have the opportunities to fill highly skilled jobs, particularly in trades in critically short supply.

Of these new funds, $188 million will be used for training and to support a major expansion and modernization of training facilities in Canada to meet the skill demands of the 1980s. The additional funds will open up several thousand new training places for welders and machinists, and in high-technology occupations. Pre-apprenticeship training programs will also benefit. Another $20 million of the funds are being added to the Summer Canada Program, the federal government's

● (1415)

The additional training funds will bring total federal training expenditures to more than $1 billion in fiscal year 1982-83.

The minister went on to state:

This major increase in training expenditures reflects the government's strategy of applying long-term solutions to employment problems and its commitment to a new National Training Program. In fact it is an investment in the future of Canada as the majority of people who will take skill training will be under 25.

At present, 70 per cent of trainees enrolled in critical trades skills training are under 25. The industrial training portion of the NTP will receive additional funding of $54.3 million over the next two years, and other high-skilled training funding will be increased by $30 million.

The increased funding will help many disadvantaged youths, such as natives, obtain the training necessary for meaningful employment.

The Occupational Growth and Adjustment Fund, a new federal initiative which is a major element of the National Training Program put forward last January by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is intended to provide a stimulus to accelerate skill development in national occupations. It is based on the new system of identifying priority occupations in which there is a demand. These occupations will be identified in large measure on the basis of improved manpower information systems to be developed in co-operation with business, labour and provincial governments.

The fund will enable a total federal contribution of $108 million in 1982-83 and 1983-84 to be used to provide capital and initial operating expenses for the establishment, expansion or modernization of technical training facilities and equipment.

Facilities to be supported by the fund could be operated by provinces, industry or non-profit organizations such as native associations. The minister stated:

It is essential to make such a fund available to those with special needs to ensure that they have access to emerging employment opportunities.

The funding we are providing for this should also have a positive effect on the construction sector.

Mr. Axworthy pointed out that the fund is desperately needed because the capacity of the present facilities is insufficient to train the skilled people required by industry. He went on to say:

Major continuing shortages of some 9,000 skilled workers are predicted each year for the next five years, and without the increased funding we will be providing, young people will never get a chance to develop their potential.

The extra $20 million for Summer Canada will bring total funding for student programs to $120 million. It will allow communities to provide increased opportunities for young people to get the kind of labour market experience that will enhance their future job prospects.

The $188 million in training funds will be spent under the authority of a new National Training Act which the Minister of Employment and Immigration plans to introduce when Parliament resumes.

May I thank honourable senators for their indulgence in permitting such a long statement to be read in the chamber when all honourable senators by now have received copies of this document.

In this regard, I suggest it is fortunate that at least one chamber of Parliament is operating.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Don't say it; don't say it!

Senator Perrault: I welcome the fact that members of the opposition are here and are able to exercise their democratic and parliamentary right to respond, if they desire, to this statement. That is all I wanted to say.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we are, of course, very pleased with the statement made by the Leader of the Government and the initiatives he has announced on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy. It is also clear that the statement was made in lieu of tabling the bill in the House of Commons. In circumstances other than those prevailing at the present time in the other place, the Minister of Employment and Immigration would merely have tabled the bill and, at second reading, would have made the speech just read by the Leader of the Government. This is perfectly acceptable.

However, I feel there are some fuzzy areas. It is not clear whether any of the $280 million or $188 million or $20 million which are mentioned here and there in the speech are additional funds which were not included in the regular budget. It seems they are additional funds. It is difficult to make any judgment on this situation or at least on what has been announced, before examining the bill itself.

The government is to be congratulated for whatever positive impact the bill may have, subject to consideration of the bill when it is tabled. I may point out that consideration of this type of bill cannot be initiated here. It seems the Leader of the Government has been unable, within the past ten days, to find any bills he could table in the Senate to keep us busy while the House of Commons is otherwise engaged.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: They are on strike.

Senator Flynn: Senator Robichaud is perfectly free to say anything he likes, but the members of the other place must be the judge of their own actions. Filibusters are hardly more useful than what is happening at the present time. It is just a way of attracting the public's attention to what the government is doing. However, I do not want to start a debate on this question.

Senator Robichaud: It would be a waste of time.

Senator Flynn: I merely wish to say, Senator Robichaud, that the Leader of the Government had told us he would consider the feasibility of initiating bills in the Senate, following an unusual suggestion made by Senator Bosa some time ago. But, as I already said, there are none. Meanwhile, we are being kept busy with statements like the one we just heard. We have been told that legislation specifically concerning the plans announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be introduced in the other place. I think we should wait and see what the bill is like in order to have a more realistic and practical basis on which to judge.

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): We have the authority to do that now.

Senator Flynn: Not here. It is a money bill, but if you do not need a bill, that is another thing. I am taking the announcement as it was recited by the Leader of the Government. If the Honourable Minister of State for Economic Development—

Senator Olson: "and Regional".

Senator Flynn: No, not "Regional". That is not yet official, and I again suggest that the title is wrong and should be corrected.

If the honourable minister would read what has just been announced, he will find that the last paragraph states:

The $188 million in training funds will be spent under the authority of a new National Training Act which [Mr. Axworthy] plans to introduce when Parliament resumes.

Senator Olson: I take it all back.

Senator Flynn: Thank you.

Senator Perrault: I thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for his statement with respect to the proposal and the generally supportive nature of his remarks. May I encourage him to use his demonstrated persuasive skills to convince his Conservative colleagues in the other place to go back to work so that we may get the bill under way in Parliament?

Senator Donahoe: Cut that out!

Senator Flynn: I could not repay that compliment to the Leader of the Government. I am quite sure that even if he used all his talents he would not be able to persuade the government to make the proper concession.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether there is any reason why this bill cannot be published at this time and, by means of a motion in the Senate, referred to a Senate committee for study.

● (1425)

Senator Flynn: That is a difficult problem.

Senator Perrault: That would be an unprecedented procedure, but there is an unprecedented situation in the other place. Certainly, Senator Godfrey's proposal will be taken under consideration.

Senator Flynn: As always.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a grievance relating to all manpower training programs in that all the information emanating from the Department of Employment and Immigration does not go to every parliamentarian. I ask the Leader of the Government if he would check with the Department of Employment and Immigration to ensure that all senators are on the mailing list for the terms of reference that go out to those organizations or individuals who want to apply under the various programs. I know for a fact that we are not getting all the information, and I hope he will take steps to ensure that this does not recur.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it was felt that in the Senate this afternoon it would be appropriate to have this statement delivered to the desk of each senator. Therefore, we are off to a good start as far as these current employment initiatives are concerned. Certainly, much depends upon the initiative of honourable senators in contacting departments and specifying exactly the type of material they want. Continuing representations are made to all ministries to make certain that senators receive all the information available to other members of Parliament.

[Translation]

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: My question is directed to the Leader of the Government and concerns his statement that $208 million will be spent on training and job creation to meet the needs of Canadians, especially young Canadians. I was wondering if the enabling legislation, which should appropriately follow the statement, will provide for a specific amount for each province, or will the $208 million be distributed according to some other system as yet to be defined? Have quotas been established for each province? How is the $208 million going to be divided? As you know, the Province of Quebec is in financial difficulty and urgently needs funds to help young Quebecers.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that detail is not currently available to me, but the question will be taken as notice, and as much information as possible will be brought to the Senate.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I appreciate Senator Leblanc's question because I had in mind asking what might be available for the Atlantic region. Therefore, if the leader brings in a statement of this nature which would still have to be approved, as our leader has said, by the other place, I think it would be wise to bring in further information as to how many millions might be available for the Atlantic region and Quebec because, you know, we are not all fat cats like British Columbia, Alberta, Toronto and places like that. We would like to have a little more information.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, one thing that we can agree upon is that there is a need for fast action, the need to get this assistance to young people and others as quickly as possible. In this regard, I know that Senator Muir will again contact his former colleagues in the other place and ask them to end their strike.

Senator Olson: I thought he already had.

Senator Muir: I am wondering why the honourable leader would refer to what is happening in the other place as a "strike". There are justified reasons on both sides, but I shall not get into that at the moment.

However, further to what Senator Marshall has said, we receive many letters. Although Liberals may have taken our places in the House of Commons, the public may not be aware of that and still write to us or telephone us and request us personally to secure information regarding many facets of government operations, employment and so on. As Senator Marshall has said, every available bit of information should be made available to all honourable senators. As the Leader of the Government knows—because he is tremendously busy with his duties in this chamber, plus his western duties, plus his regular duties—you cannot always be—

Senator Olson: And his ordinary duties.

Senator Muir: —and his ordinary duties—one cannot always be calling various departments and asking, "What's new today, fellows?" You have to have the information sent to you.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, let me make it clear that I attempted to say, obviously not very successfully, that where there are regular mailing lists established by departments, often a request by a member of Parliament to be placed on a certain departmental mailing list means that, as a matter of course, certain information is provided to honourable senators and members of the House of Commons on a regular basis.

● (1430)

I wish to say that I acknowledge the fact that both Senator Muir and Senator Marshall, when they were in the other place, demonstrated their great capacity for hard work. They were effective members, and I know that as honourable senators they have the same attitude toward their regional responsibilities as other honourable senators.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Perhaps I can assist in this process of making known to my colleagues the necessity for providing information to honourable senators in that fashion. If there is a department where there appears to be some delinquency or deficiency in providing information, I would appreciate being informed personally, so that I can see to it that action is taken.

Senator Olson: There is a checklist every month.

SASKATCHEWAN

URANIUM CITY—CLOSING OF BEAVERLODGE MINE

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I gave notice to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board that I would be asking two questions today. The first is in regard to the Eldorado Nuclear mine in Uranium City. Last fall the crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., pulled the rug from under the feet of the residents of Uranium City by announcing that the Beaverlodge mine would close in June. Since June is rapidly approaching, would the minister inform us of what, if anything, is being done by the federal government to help the dislocated residents of Uranium City?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the Canadian government has introduced many measures to ease the impact of the mine-closing on the miners, their families and their communities. Those families forced to relocate are eligible for a Canada Manpower Mobility Grant which covers travel expenses, relocation costs, and the like, for people seeking and finding new jobs. The Canada Employment Office in Uranium City has been open seven days per week to help accommodate the job search for the miners.

Mr. Axworthy, in January, signed a restriction preventing foreign workers from entering the country to take jobs in depressed industrial sectors.

Canada Employment and Eldorado have signed cost-sharing agreements to aid dislocated miners, and Canada Employment and the municipality of Uranium City have negotiated cost-sharing agreements to aid dislocated municipal workers.

The community itself has established a task force to look at viable alternatives for Uranium City such as tourism, fishing and a northern service centre providing hospital, education facilities and transportation to the north. They are also looking at ways to compensate homeowners and owners of businesses for their lost capital investment. This 11-member task force includes seven representatives of the community, as well as representatives from two federal departments, namely, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and Canada Employment.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources initiated a special task force on mining communities at the federal-provincial mines ministers' conference in January. This task force is addressing the whole question of mining-dependent communities and is to report its findings at the next federal-provincial mines ministers' conference in September.

The operations at Uranium City are no longer economic at present prices for uranium. The mine, in fact, is now considered to be mined out. A few days ago, a six-member provincial government team reported that closing was justified because the mine was no longer profitable. Perhaps the province will now shoulder some of its own responsibilities and take a more active role in assisting those families to adjust to the loss of their homes and to look at viable economic alternatives which would revitalize this community.

Since the announcement of the closing, about 280 families have left the community; so the town of 3,000 has now been reduced to 2,100 people. I hope to take a first-hand look at the situation in early April by visiting the community. I am taking steps to have Mayor Wasylenka invited to the next meeting of the federal-provincial task force on mining communities to present a report.

CROWSNEST RATES—IMPACT OF PROPOSED CHANGE

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I have a second question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. It is one of which I have given him advance notice, and it relates to the proposed Crow rate changes in the west.

● (1435)

I want to refer to an article in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix in which the Honourable Gordon MacMurchy, Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Saskatchewan, is quoted. The article begins by referring to the Honourable Mr. MacMurchy as having said that Saskatchewan will lose $1.4 billion to $1.9 billion a year by 1990 if the federal government's plan to change the Crowsnest Pass freight rate agreement is approved. The article goes on:

If Ottawa contributes $612 million a year in rail compensation as promised, the cost will increase 10 times, he said. The average farmer, who now pays less than 13 cents a bushel to transport grain to port, would be paying $1.23 a bushel or $2.05 a hundredweight by 1990.

But if Ottawa stopped paying $612 million a year in 1985, the farmer's cost would increase 13-fold, he said. The average farmer would pay $1.62 a bushel or $2.70 a hundredweight to transport grain.

Another paragraph is as follows:

If freight rates increase 13 times, an average-sized farm of 1½ sections would lose more than $21,000 in net income each year, MacMurchy said. If the rate is 10 times greater, the average farm would lose $15,896 a year.

These allegations seem to be at odds with any figures I have, and I am just wondering if the minister could give us some background information on those figures. I am in some doubt as to whether the Minister of Agriculture, if he is quoted correctly, is telling the truth about these facts, and I would like to know what the minister's comments are.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I can say that the figures used by the Honourable Mr. MacMurchy are figments of his imagination. I think they constitute scare tactics. They are designed to alarm and frighten the farmers of western Canada, and I expect they are being used in preparation for an election that is going to be called, based on this issue.

The easiest way for any government to operate, especially in western Canada, I guess, is to proceed on the principle that when there are many things in doubt about their own operation, the best thing to do is run against Ottawa. If you run against something that is not going to happen, that makes it still easier.

They ran on the basis of saving medicare against a supposed attack by a Liberal federal government at one time, and on another occasion against a supposed Conservative threat. Those were both false issues.

In any event, it is interesting to note that the Government of Canada has this year pledged $612 million to keep the Crow.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): How much has Saskatchewan pledged?

Senator Argue: Saskatchewan has pledged nothing. The Government of Saskatchewan has given the people of Saskatchewan 16 speeches by Mr. MacMurchy, and a whole lot of propaganda. However, that is good politics, I suppose, and it could be pretty effective.

The policy of the federal government has been announced by the Minister of Transport. As I said, that policy is to pay $612 million this year to keep the Crow rate exactly where it is, and to pay the railroads the losses that may be involved. Going on into the next few years the total commitment by the Government of Canada is $3.2 billion. There is some room within this $3.2 billion commitment, as I understand it, for a further increase next year, the following year and the year after, in the federal government's contribution.

The federal government has asked Dr. Clay Gilson to go out to western Canada and hold discussions with the principal people involved in the use of the railway. I quote from the policy statement which has been made public. It says that one of the major subjects to be dealt with in the consultations is the future responsibility for paying grain transportation costs. It is made very clear that the discussions will be centred around the apportionment of those increased costs resulting from future inflation and from an increased use by the grain shipper of those facilities.

The contribution of the federal government has been committed over this period at this rate. I have said this before, honourable senators, and I will repeat it. It is my understanding, and I have attended all of the meetings and read all of the documents, that it is a commitment for the future as well. When the new system is in use and is put into statutory form, with regard to the cost of wheat and the return from grain, I believe that farmers can look forward to an improved Crow rate in the future. If one relates to the price of grain, I expect that in the future the Crow rate will be even better than it has been in its 80-year history. I believe the federal government will establish a policy that will be in the best interests of everyone concerned. I would say that all of these accusations made by Mr. MacMurchy are patently false.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to raise a point of order with regard to the comments made by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. He made reference to provincial governments conducting election campaigns critical of the federal government, and so forth. I simply want to point out that the Honourable John Buchanan ran his election campaign in Nova Scotia on his own record. I am sure that the honourable minister is aware that Premier Buchanan recently made a very amicable arrangement with the Prime Minister of this country despite the difficulties involved with offshore rights.

I do not want to take up too much time. We have yet to hear from the Honourable Senator Donahoe, who will be making a valuable and important contribution this afternoon. I merely wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TRADEMARK BILL

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask two questions of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

One month ago today, on February 11, I asked him when we might expect a new trademark bill. At that time I pointed out that one such bill had been presented in the Senate three years ago. I think this would be an appropriate time for the Senate to study a trademark bill in committee. I ask the honourable senator whether he has any information on this matter?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at the present time the trademark measure is not a leading matter of priority with the government.

REQUEST FOR STATISTICS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, my second question involves a newspaper article written by Douglas Fisher which appeared in the Toronto Sun on January 22, 1982. In his column, Mr. Fisher stated that federal spending on fisheries amounts to $400 million this year, and that the employees of the department are now 5,800 in number. He also stated that the total value this year for fish may hit $1.4 billion. He went on to state:

To put that in perspective, the federal government will spend to manage, regulate and perpetuate our fisheries this year about a third of the total value produced. And we have 5,800 federal employees (plus another 2,000-odd provincial employees working in the field) as a frame and base for only three times that many fishermen.

The simple question to ask would be: Is that true? If not, what are the facts? However, I realize that such a question is against the rules of the house, so I will now demonstrate how to get around those rules.

I would like the Leader of the Government to supply answers to the following questions: How much does the federal government spend on fisheries in a year? What is the total value of the fish caught by Canadian fisheries in a year? How many federal employees are working in the fisheries field?

How many provincial employees are working in the fisheries field? How many full-time and part-time commercial fishermen are there in Canada? How many people are employed in the processing of fish?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Godfrey for providing some prior notice of these questions. The answers pose a substantial research task for Fisheries Department officials, who must gather this information so that it can be made available to the Senate. That process has been under way since the inquiry from Senator Godfrey was received in letter form.

With regard to this question inquiring whether or not Mr. Fisher's newspaper column contains truths, Senator Godfrey, of course, is aware that a question, oral or written, must not inquire as to the truth of statements made in a newspaper.

Senator Godfrey: Therefore, I carefully refrained from asking that question. I think that rule is really one of the silliest we have, and I have demonstrated how easy it is to get around it.

ENERGY

OIL—REDUCTION IN EXPLORATION ACTIVITY

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. Is he able to confirm the statistics released by the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, namely, that since the National Energy Program was introduced 184 rigs that had been drilling in western Canada have quit the country, and only one has since returned?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I will direct that inquiry to the people who are in possession of that information, and will ascertain whether or not it is true. That will depend, of course, on how things are added up.

Senator Bielish: I have a supplementary question. While the minister is making his inquiries, would he also verify the report which states that 107 servicing rigs have also departed? If that is true, we all know what it means to the economy.

Senator Olson: I will check that as well.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the minister confirm reports that the Canadian government is considering a request from the United States Defence Department that U.S. military weapons be tested on Canadian soil?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. While the minister is seeking that information, would he also ascertain what Canada's role will be in the testing of those weapons? Secondly, would he find out Canada's share of the cost of conducting such tests?

TRANSPORT

MAINLAND-NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY SERVICE—SUBSIDIZATION OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the question asked by Senator Muir on March 3 last concerning the subsidization of freight movements to Newfoundland.

The Minister of Transport has taken action to terminate the subsidization of freight movements to Newfoundland by Newfoundland Steamships Limited, which is the only private carrier receiving a subsidy. The effective date of this action will be April 1, 1982. CN Marine Inc. will be the only subsidized ferry service carrying freight from the mainland, via the port of North Sydney, to Newfoundland after this date.

I would also like to include the Minister of Transport's press release for the information of honourable senators. Perhaps it could be incorporated in this reply.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The press release follows:)

A buy-out of the Newfoundland Steamships Limited subsidy that provides a direct shipping service between Montréal and the Province of Newfoundland was announced today by Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin.

Newfoundland Steamships Limited entered into a 13-year shipping subsidy contract with the Canadian Transport Commission in April, 1973, to provide a shipping service as an alternative to the rail truck service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland.

Termination of the current subsidy agreement, which expires March 31, 1986, will include lump sum payments of $3.4 million in 1981-82 and $2.5 million for 1982-83.

Direct shipping between Montréal and Newfoundland will continue to be served by two unsubsidized private shippers, Newfoundland Steamships Limited and Atlantic Freight Lines Limited.

Buy-out negotiations began in 1981 and the subsidies will cease after April 1, 1982.

UNITED NATIONS

OUTER SPACE TREATY—CANADIAN INITIATIVE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the question asked by Senator Thompson on March 9 concerning strengthening the Outer Space Treaty.

It is true that Canada worked very hard on this particular treaty, which addresses the banning of nuclear weapons from outer space. There is now a suggestion of a further banning of all weapons, such as killer satellites, from outer space.

This topic is presently being addressed by the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva. Canada is actively engaged in the work of that committee, and is an active and energetic participant.

THE SENATE

REFORM—MOTION RE ELECTION OF MEMBERS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C.:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, on behalf of the Honourable Senator Bosa, I yield to the Honourable Senator Donahoe.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, my first duty and my first wish is to thank those who make it possible for me to speak this afternoon. This is a subject I am anxious to express my views on, but circumstances will prevent my being here for a period of two or three weeks.

You will note that I begin by giving glad tidings to the government, that one of the opposition, who sometimes makes trouble for them will not be present during the next three weeks.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): You are not going to strike?

Senator Donahoe: I do not intend to be here, and I suffer from the fear that you will proceed with consideration of the motion and that it might be disposed of before my return. Therefore, I thank Senator Petten and Senator Macdonald, and I thank Senator Bosa, who is not present, for having yielded in order that I might speak.

I want to begin my remarks, which I hope will be mercifully brief, by emphasizing that I am speaking on Senator Roblin's motion that this house would be better served if we who are its members, instead of receiving our positions here by appointment, were in fact in some way or other elected.

I want to stress the fact that I have now been in this house for nearly three years, during all of which time I have listened with intense interest to what Senator Roblin has had to say. It has been a rare occasion, indeed, on which I have found myself in disagreement with anything he has said. But in the case of this motion, which he has advanced so excellently and to which he has spoken with such force, I find that he and I have different points of view.

You will recall that Senator Roblin gave 48 hours' notice of his motion, but, having given that notice, he then, with the permission of the house, spoke to it within 24 hours. As a consequence, I did not have the pleasure of hearing him deliver his remarks in person, but I have read them and have given them consideration, so I consider myself fully familiar with them and, therefore, entitled to respond to them this afternoon.

It was with a sense of relief that I read that Senator Roblin, in proposing this change, did so as a private member only. The motion was not, he said, in any sense to be taken as party policy but was merely his own idea. I want to echo what he said, in that any remarks that I make this afternoon are to be taken as my own ideas and are not to be construed in any way as binding any other person or as reflecting, in any sense, the views of the party to which I am proud to belong.

In reading Senator Roblin's remarks I noted that he had asserted that he did not seriously expect his motion to carry, because he said that, in his opinion, there were fewer people who shared his views than opposed them. I do not know whether he was correct in that assumption or what the result of any vote taken on the motion might be, but I am cautious enough that I could not allow a vote to be taken without now expressing my views on the subject, first, as I have already said, because of the danger that the motion might be disposed of in my absence, and, secondly, because of the danger that Senator Roblin's forecast might not be correct. He may have misjudged the temper of this house and there may be many more people who agree with him than disagree with him. In such a case the motion might carry and my silence could be misconstrued as acceptance of his views, even though I, were I present, would choose to vote against the motion.

Honourable senators, I sympathize fully with the views of those people in western Canada who find desirable the idea of an elected Senate. I feel they do so because they believe that an elected Senate would accomplish for them what the appointed Senate, as we have at present, has in fact failed to accomplish. They look upon this house as an organ or medium through which their rights and the rights of their territories could be expressed—effectually expressed—and through which, they feel or could come to feel, what they believe in in the west could have an effect upon the events that take place in this great country. I seriously doubt that that is a belief they hold at present. They think they could attain what they want by having an elected Senate, but I believe that in that they err, that they are not right, and that they would not in any way improve their position merely by tampering with the structure of this house, merely by changing the manner in which the personnel of this house are chosen.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Right.

Senator Donahoe: I am not, as Senator Frith is, a scholar. I cannot do what he did so excellently in this house the other day—give you a play-by-play or blow-by-blow description of the fates of all those similar resolutions which have been moved in this chamber up to this point. Because I lack the capacity, perhaps, I propose not to go into the history of the various resolutions. Suffice it to say that in view of the fate of those resolutions as related by Senator Frith, perhaps Senator Roblin's belief with respect to the fate of this motion was justified by the history of the preceding motions.

I read with interest what Senator Roblin had to say about a series of organizations whose names as reformers he introduced, I took it, as an argument in support or in explanation of his motion. I noted with interest that the committee which dealt with this subject in this house came to the conclusion that an elected Senate was not required, but the report of that committee, the so-called Lamontagne committee, was mentioned more by way of an afterthought, as a voice which might be listened to, than as establishing a serious case to justify the allegation that the kind of reform this body should have is to be found in an elected Senate.

Perhaps I will be pardoned if I say that that does not altogether surprise me. I was a member of the Lamontagne committee. More than that, I was a member of a subcommittee of the Lamontagne committee which did much of its work during the summer. You may recall—perhaps you do not—that the work of the committee was divided and allotted to various subcommittees, each of which was asked to bring in a report on what the particular subcommittee felt should be included in the main report. That main report was to be made up by compiling a final report composed of all the minor reports.

It was summertime. It was warm. It was difficult. The shores of the bay on which I spent my summer were beautiful and were beckoning. Notwithstanding that, my sense of duty compelled me to come to this city to attend the meetings of the subcommittee. I want to congratulate Senator Neiman, who was the chairman of our subcommittee, and the others who served on it, who did as I did and put their personal wishes and personal views to one side in order to come to this city to deal with the work of the country.

You may ask what the question was that we were considering. The question that was submitted to the subcommittee of which I was a member was: May we have your views on the question of entrenchment?

You may recall that at the time the committee was meeting we were then in the process of approaching an amendment to the Constitution of Canada. I do not hesitate to remind you that I voted against that amendment, when it eventually came before us. I voted against it for a variety of reasons which I do not intend to go into here. However, one of the things with which the joint committee on the resolution had to involve itself was entrenchment of the Bill of Rights. Members of the Senate were asked to provide their views on the subject, and we laboured long, hard and diligently to come to our conclusion; namely, that it was not desirable that the entrenchment of the Bill of Rights be adopted by the people of Canada. The subcommittee of the committee chaired by Senator Lamontagne came to the conclusion that we ought not to entrench the Bill of Rights in the Constitution, and we so reported. I will admit quite freely that, to my knowledge, the subcommittee never completed its full report, but we at least reached a full decision as a committee, and it was accepted by all those who attended the committee meetings.

I see a head shaking, and I see that it is the head of one of the senators involved in that committee. Perhaps the honourable senator did not accept the decision. I merely said that I had the impression that the decision had been accepted. If I am wrong, then I apologize. If the decision was not accepted by any member of the committee, I challenge that member to say that it was not accepted. There may have been, and undoubtedly were, different points of view expressed in arriving at our conclusion. In any event, we left believing that the chairman was to complete a final report and that it was to be submitted to the main committee which, in due course, would make up its mind.

I went away and returned in time to sit on the main committee, only to find that in a cavalier way it was announced that the decision arrived at by the subcommittee, of which I was a member, did not meet with the satisfaction of the committee. The honourable senator shakes his head. Perhaps the words I have used are not exact, but I am not pretending to quote exactly what was said on that occasion. I am only attempting to draw conclusions from the action that was taken by the main committee. I defy anybody to deny that the main committee took action based on the idea that they would prepare a better report for consideration by this house if they eliminated altogether the report of the subcommittee of which I was a member and, accordingly, that was so done. The report which this house considered and acted upon was without the benefit of any conclusions that were reached by the subcommittee on which I worked.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): May I make a short observation?

Senator Donahoe: I would welcome it.

Senator Frith: As I recall, the conclusion that Senator Donahoe has reached is correct. The subcommittee of the Lamontagne committee, on which I served along with Senator Donahoe as well as Senator Neiman, did spend a lot of time on this question and, certainly, Senator Donahoe was totally consistent in his adversity to the entrenchment of the Bill of Rights, although we had some very fruitful exchanges on the subject. I thought that the decision of the committee on Part III, which dealt with the Bill of Rights—Part I being a new approach to federalism, and Part II being reform of the Senate—was that, because the constitutional amendment dealing with a bill of rights was either before Parliament or imminently before Parliament, by the time we made our report we were overtaken. I do not remember the committee rejecting the viewpoint of Senator Donahoe. I recall the committee as saying, in effect, "Look, we'll deal with Parts I and II, and since it looks as if we are all going to be talking about Part III because of the constitutional proposal regarding a Bill of Rights, we will leave it."

Senator Donahoe: I thank the honourable senator for his intervention. I merely say that I am speaking from results, not from what actually took place or what was said. The honourable senator may be perfectly correct in saying that the joint committee took the opposite view to ours, and that that was a known and recognized view at the time our report was being prepared, but I would retaliate by asking when it was that a viewpoint advanced by a committee of this chamber was eliminated merely because a different and contrary view was advanced in the other place or by the joint committee.

Hon. Joan Neiman: I wonder if I may intervene for a moment?

Senator Donahoe: Yes.

Senator Neiman: My recollection of these events is slightly different from that of Senator Donahoe. Unfortunately, I did not know that this subject would be raised today, or I would have drawn my file. Senator Donahoe was quite right in saying that we on the small committee started out by being personally opposed to the idea of entrenchment of the Bill of Rights, merely because of our particular backgrounds and disciplines in common law. After many meetings, which were attended very faithfully by Senator Donahoe, much testimony and the completion of research papers, my very distinct recollection is—particularly following the testimony of Mr. Gordon Fairweather, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and, as you know, a former Attorney General of New Brunswick—that we came to a somewhat different conclusion. You will recall that Mr. Fairweather testified that at one point he was opposed to entrenchment but after a time he came to see that it was probably right, just and proper at this point in our history. As a result of our conversations with him, it is my recollection that all of us came to the point of view that we opposed total entrenchment without the consent of the provinces. The approach we preferred was to go ahead with entrenchment, as far as the federal government was concerned, and then to persuade the provincial governments, by example as well as through negotiation, to follow our lead.

That is the basis upon which I drew up my report, and I was sure at the time that I had the concurrence of our subcommittee. As Senator Frith has just said, the decision of the full Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee was that we would be overtaken by events because a Bill of Rights had already been presented, or was being prepared, and that it seemed superfluous to advance our views. Certainly, my recollection is that that was the type of report that we had intended to put forward in our subcommittee.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I accept what Senator Neiman has said and I find nothing wrong with it. However, I think enough has been said on the subject, and I do not propose to go into it any further. I merely want to say that, in my opinion, there must be many persons listening to this speech, if I can call it that, who have no knowledge whatever of what transpired in that committee, because it was carefully arranged so that no matter what the committee argued or what conclusions it arrived at, they were never referred to in any report of the Lamontagne committee. I introduced the subject, not to discuss what took place in our subcommittee or to imply that anybody was of a different point of view or had changed their views, but merely to indicate that, because of what happened, I personally have grave doubts as to the value of the report of the Lamontagne committee, because I have exact knowledge of the portion of it to which I was or should have been a party.

I looked at the resolution, and I found that I had to stop and think: In what context will this resolution be used if it is adopted? We are in a position where the matter we have been arguing about—that is, an entrenched Bill of Rights—is to be adopted by a foreign parliament to become the law of this country. It is to be adopted imminently, not months or weeks from now, but possibly days. A minister of the Crown has been cooling his heels in a foreign capital waiting to bring it back.

The Queen of my country, the Queen of Canada, is being—I don't know what word is fitting—cajoled and, perhaps, has willingly accepted an invitation to bring the Constitution to Canada. I have told you that I will not be in attendance for the next three weeks. Thank God I will be away during that special day on which the Queen will be here. I may not be invited, but if I am invited I will not have the pleasure or necessity of declining the invitation because I disagree with what is being done. I will regretfully decline the invitation because of my absence; I will be visiting a foreign country.

I have thought about what the resolution means to this Senate. I would defy any senator on the opposite side of the chamber to stand and say that, when this foreign country has decided our Constitution for us by making the Canada Bill law, in our Constitution you will find a section which will provide that this body shall have the rights it has enjoyed for 115 years and shall not be reduced to the right of a suspensive veto, and that it will not be reduced to merely providing a purely delaying tactic when it has exerted the entirety of its force. That is what is going to happen.

Senator Frith: I will take up that challenge. That will be the situation with regard to constitutional amendments, but not with regard to legislation.

Senator Donahoe: I am not talking about constitutional amendments.

Senator Frith: The honourable senator said that the Constitution will provide that the Senate's traditional rights will be changed and reduced. He is correct on the question of its right regarding constitutional amendment. The provision in the constitutional resolution to which he is referring regarding suspensive veto applies only to constitutional amendment and not to legislation. We will still have our absolute veto over legislation.

Senator Donahoe: I am tempted to ask the honourable senator if he has ever heard the story about the camel and the Arab. On a cold winter's night, the camel asked permission to shelter slightly under the tent and, by morning, the camel was completely covered and the Arab was out in the cold. If the honourable senator can tell me that we are only partially pregnant, I will respond that I do not believe it. We will go the whole way, and I will prove it to you later.

Senator Frith: My goodness! What did the Arab do before he left?

Senator Donahoe: I will prove it to you later by reminding you of the attitude towards the Senate of some very important people involved in the conduct of the affairs of this country.

I accept what Senator Frith has had to say, that, as of this moment, the suspensive veto is only applicable to legislation dealing with the Constitution of Canada. However, I assert, subject to contradiction, that it will not be long before the suspensive veto applies to every piece of legislation that reaches this house. I make this argument almost entirely on that basis because that is what I believe and that is what no one can successfully stop me believing.

Like Senator Roblin, I believe that the federal state which Canada has been up until now, and such as it will remain for a short time, and as some people in certain quarters say it will continue to be—although I am not one of those people—requires an effective second chamber. I agree that the need for such arises from the fundamentally regional characteristics of our country. I believe, as does Senator Roblin, that if no Senate had ever been conceived by the Fathers of Confederation, no nation would ever have been developed. No Senate; no Confederation!

I further believe that, in the 115 years that have elapsed since Canada was formed, the Senate has justified its existence. It has operated in such a way that it has come to be a true asset to the people of Canada by the originating, the improving and the passing of the laws of this country.

If one takes the trouble to read what Senator Roblin has said, one will see that he finds that the agreement made was to have two houses, and that they were, firstly, the House of Commons, based on representation by population and, secondly, the Senate, based on territorial representation. He says that representation by population satisfied the interests of Upper Canada. I do not use the term "Upper Canada" in any disrespectful way. Upper Canadians are those who had the good fortune to be born in Nova Scotia, and I understand they use the same term for those who come from Newfoundland.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Certainly.

Senator Donahoe: Upper Canada is the name by which this part of Canada was known prior to Confederation. There were two areas, Upper and Lower Canada. Interests were satisfied by the form of Confederation which was adopted. They asked for one-man-one-vote equality, regardless of where a person came from. Senator Roblin very properly said that the maritimers and the French-speaking minority—then, as now, concentrated in Quebec—had other aims and views. They saw Upper Canada as possibly being able to impose its will on regional minorities. They sought a counterbalance, and the forum provided to them was the Senate.

I read an article which said that territorial and regional representation was not the only reason for the formation of the Senate in 1867, and I do not even pretend that it was, but I certainly say it was a major factor. I further say that, in the part of the country from which I come, it was used as the point of all points to achieve acceptance of Confederation. It was not easy in my province. There were those, in some political parties—to which I have never offered my support—who did not believe in Confederation. The government of the day went to London and tried to get them to do away with Confederation.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame.

Senator Donahoe: They ran elections in my province and were known as anti-Confederates. This is only an aside. The only point I want to make is that people who talk about history ought to know a little bit about what took place in times gone by.

In my part of the country, regional representation was the reason put forward for having a Senate. The counterbalance that made Confederation palatable was the institution of the Senate, and it was devised, largely, for that purpose.

Senator Roblin and I share the view that it is proper that we have a second chamber. We part company on the proposition that a second chamber would be more effective than it is now if its members were elected. We meet again when we agree that Canada needs an effective federal chamber to represent regional interests. We part company again on the question as to whether or not those interests would be better served by electing senators rather than by appointing them.

I do not propose, in these few remarks, to advance any proposition as to how this could be made a more effective chamber. I said on a previous occasion that I was of the firm conviction that we could reform the Senate in such a way that it would become more meaningful and more effective, and I still believe that, but the only purpose of the motion before us today is to recommend to us one particular method of reform—election; and I am confining my remarks to my views as to what "election" means.

Some may say that that approach is negative, but I do not believe that any form of election would produce better senators or a better Senate than the one we now have. On the other hand, I believe, particularly in light of the amended Constitution which is about to be given to our nation, that the quality of the people elected to the chamber would be less than the quality of those who now occupy the chamber by appointment.

I was not going to mention this, but I have talked to a number of senators about this, and they have talked about the possibility of an elected Senate. I addressed one question, and one question only, to them, that being: Were there to be an elected Senate, would you run for election? Without question,

I did not hear one senator say that he would be prepared to run in an election for the privilege of sitting in this chamber.

Hon. Eric Cook: I have a supplementary question. Would they get elected?

Senator Donahoe: Whether or not, as the senator has asked, they would be elected, is a moot question. I do not know what the honourable senator's record is, but I admit that I was defeated in my own province. I was defeated four times before I was ever elected, and I was elected some 16 times in various capacities, and then finally defeated.

I do not know whether I could be re-elected, but I can tell him something: I might not be able to get elected, but my two sons are quite capable of getting elected. One is the Speaker of the Legislature of Nova Scotia; the other is the Minister of Education in the Government of Nova Scotia; and I should like to think that my presence in this chamber has not caused them any sorrow or grief or difficulty.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Donahoe: So, I am not going to talk about what we should do with this chamber. I merely want to make it clear that I think there is room for improvement, and I am prepared to consider improvement. I cannot make myself believe that election is the proper way to achieve improvement, because I cannot believe that the quality of people who would hold themselves up for election would be better than that of the present members of this house.

I cannot believe that the limited nature of the Senate, functioning on what is left—

Do not stand up and challenge me, please. If you do not think that this body is less now than it was before we passed the law which is about to be passed in Britain, then you and I are never going to agree, because that is my firm and unalterable conviction, and I so expressed myself at the time we were considering it.

Senator Frith: I agree with you.

Senator Donahoe: So, I cannot believe that the limited nature of the Senate, functioning on what is left, can conceivably attract people of experience, of broad vision, who have a love of their country such as that of those who serve in the Senate today.

I believe that under such circumstances the election of senators to this chamber would bring to it only those people—and correct me if you think I am wrong—who are more concerned with what the Senate can do for them, to paraphrase John F. Kennedy, than with what they can do for the Senate or for Canada.

I will accept any worthwhile proposal to reform the Senate and to make it more effective, but I do not believe that we should move in the direction of reform simply because we conceive that the public of Canada is seeking reform, unless we are sure of where we are going.

I have a random thought that I wish to express while it is in my mind. It is that we are going to have a new Constitution, an amended Constitution—and there was great talk about how democratically it was amended. I want to tell you that, in the history of this Confederation, no Constitution, no amendment to any Constitution, was ever conceived in a way in which it was the child of a joint committee of the two bodies of Parliament, with or without the approval of the Prime Minister of Canada. What we need, and what we should have, is the approval of the people of Canada, and I am not going to say today that we do not have it, but I am prepared to say that it was never sought. If the consensus—which some people make so much of—of the premiers of the provinces—were analyzed, if the legislatures were consulted, and if the people of the provinces were consulted, I have my doubts that the answer would be the answer which was given by the premiers.

I merely advance that as a random thought that is worth thinking about. Do not fool yourselves into believing that what is going to happen in this country has the full and undivided support of a majority of the people of this country, because I have grave doubts that that is true.

Reform for reform's sake is not good enough. Any reform we undertake must hold out a real and true prospect of improvement. It is argued that the Senate, as it is now constituted, is, generally speaking, regarded by most people as a fifth wheel of the Constitution; that the media, by and large, overlook our debates; that we have no credibility; that we are neglected by the provincial governments while, at the same time, we decline to exercise the powers we possess—that is, to act as a direct curb on the federal executive.

On that point I want to make only one statement, that being that if you are the possessor of a big club you do not have to go around hitting people over the head with it. You only have to remind them every now and again that you have a big club which you can pick up and wield if their conduct is such that it compels you to do so. If people are reasonable, the one holding the club will be reasonable. If anybody tells me that we are an ineffective body because we have not exercised our veto, I say that there is more than one reason why this house exists, but one reason is to provide sober second thought. When we have discharged that function to its limit, unless what is being done is so outrageous that it cannot be borne, and it really has to be pretty outrageous—I thought we had reached that point when the resolution to support the Canada Bill came forward. I thought that the Senate would rise in indignation and say, "You cannot do this to us; you have not got the right. You are not the right body; you have not the true consent." But members of the Senate did not say that. I thought that and tried to say that, but only a few honourable senators agreed with me. We are going to have a new Constitution, and I sincerely hope and pray, as I stand here, that those who voted for it will not live to rue the day.

However, it seems to me that, by electing a body which had any real power, we would be flying in the face of those who believe that Parliament is big enough, and there are some who believe that. I have said that Parliament was based on representation by population. I do not remember it all, but I went to school and learned what they did with the original system, although I cannot be precise on what the original system was. However, I can tell you that the original system allocated 65 members to Quebec, and one divided 65 into the population of Quebec and came to a unit number and decided that there should be one member for each such unit in each province. How many members there were depended on the population as ascertained in the census. I know it would work because in Nova Scotia, when we started, we had 18 members and now we have 10, and we are damned lucky. In Prince Edward Island they have four members and they have four senators. Why do they have four senators, and why do they have four members? Because the B.N.A. Act states that no province shall have fewer members than it has senators. If it were strictly representation by population, mathematically speaking practically every riding in Toronto has a bigger population than the whole Province of Prince Edward Island. But you only get one member and they get four. You may say that that is not right, but I say to you that it is right because we are a nation. We stretch from sea to sea. We are composed of all those provinces that joined together to form Canada. One of them is Prince Edward Island, and without such provinces, we would be an incomplete whole, small though they may be.

The population of Canada has grown. The system has changed, the unit is now different, and the distribution of seats in Canada is now different. I am told that under the system now in vogue, whatever that may be, as a result of the most recent census we are likely to increase the number of members in the House of Commons.

Senator Marshall: To over 300.

Senator Donahoe: My honourable friend says "to over 300," and I presume he is right. I do not pretend to know, but I know it is an increase. I also know that there are members of the House of Commons who say that that is an error; that we should amend the law; that we should change it so that there will be no increase; and that we have enough members now—282 or whatever the number is.

Senator Marshall: There are now 282 members.

Senator Donahoe: We do not want to get like Great Britain. We do not want to have such a large number as Great Britain that if they all show up at the same time there will not be enough seats because there are just too many of them. Incidentally, it is that kind of Parliament that is giving you your new Constitution, but I will let that go by.

To get back to what I was saying before I became side-tracked, some members of the House of Commons believe that there is a sufficient number of members now and that we should amend the law so as not to have any more. Then I come into this chamber and I find senators saying to me, "Ah, but what we should do is elect the members of the Senate!"

Senator Marshall: Shame!

Senator Donahoe: Elect them—for what?

Senator Marshall: For life!

Senator Donahoe: Elect them to have real power? Elect them to exert their will as opposed to the will of the House of Commons? No, we do not want to do that. After all, we already have an elected body.

I come from a province where we had two houses—an Executive Council and a House of Assembly—and at a certain point the same sort of situation as has happened here happened there: one party was too long in power. It had the power of appointment of the members of that house, so that when an opposite party, after 43 unbroken years, was elected it was discovered that there was not one voice—not one—in the upper house to speak in support of that elected body which the electorate of Nova Scotia had said should decide their fate and make their laws. I shall not go into it because it is a long, sad story. But when those people were recalcitrant and refused to see reason, and sometimes you can see that going on today—I am tempted to tell a story but I have been speaking for a long time—when those people would not support the government, then the province took the only course open to it and said, "We have the right of nomination. There is no limit on the number who can sit in the house. Therefore, we propose to appoint a sufficient number of councillors who will vote that we extinguish the upper house." The upper house was extinguished, and it was my party that did it. Do not think that there is anything partisan in what I am saying about this because there is not. It was my party that did it. We did away with the second house, but it is not my party that is going to do away with this second house, it is somebody else, and I will prove it to you before I am finished—and I am going to be mercifully brief for the remainder of my remarks.

If the Senate is to have neither real power nor the possibility of any, having regard to the new Constitution, and if it is to be elected only, then the function of the Senate is largely being lost. The inevitable effect of any vote taken in this house will be to demonstrate that the Senate has lost its purpose, that we are voiceless. Why bother to speak on a resolution? Suppose that by a miracle you could open the minds of those opposite you; suppose that you could persuade them that that man who sounds so foolish is talking sense and that they must support him; suppose that by a miracle that happened—it would not matter one whit or one iota because six months later the things against which you voted, the things on which you agreed with somebody else, the things on which you disagreed with those who make the laws of this country would be the laws of this country. You could say you disagreed and you could say it was wrong, or you could say any damned thing you liked about it, but when it was all over it would be the law of the country and whether you liked it or not you would be stuck with it.

Senator Marshall: Too many Liberals!

Senator Donahoe: If, on the other hand, the Senate is to have neither real power nor the possibility of any—as I suggested to you it probably will not have, if you think about the Constitution we are going to have—then, in my view, the function of the Senate, as I have already said, is largely going to be lost. The inevitable effect of any vote taken in this house, based on the Constitution of Canada, will be to demonstrate that the Senate has lost its purpose. I think that is a good phrase and I think it bears repeating because it is something that might give some meaning to and understanding of what is taking place around you.

One should not tease people and one should not accuse people who see things differently from oneself, but the fact remains that I have grave doubts as to how much serious consideration was ever given to the possible effect of what was being done, and that a very high percentage of government members voted the way they did, not because of what they were trying to bring about, not because of what they expected to happen, but because they were voting with their party. As I said on an earlier occasion—and exception was taken to it—I thought we gave a pretty good demonstration that there is at least one of your number who was prepared to vote for whatever he was bloody well told to vote for, regardless of what it might be and regardless of what his opinion of it might be. We had the experience in this chamber of seeing an honourable senator, who is not here today—and I am sorry to speak in his absence, but we had the spectacle of his standing here and advancing all the reasons why certain actions should not be taken, and then not waiting for amendments to be made. Don't let anybody give me the story that "he fixed it up and changed his mind in the interval." When he made his second speech it was different: "The resolution has been improved; the resolution has been amended." Maybe it had been and maybe he voted for it, but it is damned true that he told us, standing on his own two feet, that he would vote for it, no matter what happened to it.

Senator Marshall: Right.

Senator Donahoe: He said, "I am going to hold my nose and vote for it."

I do not know how many honourable senators shared his views, and I do not know how many were motivated by the same thing and voted in the same way. All I know is that they voted that way, and we are about to get the amended Constitution, amended in a way unseen or unheard of for more than 115 years, the results of which, I submit, are not fully recognized, appreciated or perhaps even expected.

● (1540)

I am an old man. I do not expect to live long. "Thank God," say some people. I do not expect to live long, but I do expect to live long enough to see the Constitution come to Canada. I expect all of the more healthy and more sturdy people in this chamber to live much longer than I, and to reach the day when they will say, "What, in the name of heaven, possessed us to have that kind of Constitution? Why did we go American? Why did we establish the American type of government in this country? Why did we forsake the parliamentary form of government which had been ours for more than 115 years and which had served us well?"—and don't tell me that it has not served us well. Don't anyone on the other side stand up and say "This house is no good. Unless we reform it, we might as well not have it." I happen to think that is true in the case of those who have occupied seats in this chamber and have not done their duty. But that is another story, and don't anyone tell me that it has ever been that bad. What has happened in this country cannot be laid directly at the feet of those in this chamber because, after all, we have exercised the power given to us in such a manner that we have not interfered with the exercise of power by those who have been elected by the people. As I said a short while ago, some can say that that is craven; others can say that the Senate has been ineffective; but no one can say that what I have just said is not the truth, because ever since I have been in the Senate we have never exercised the power of veto; nor have I heard anyone stand and say that on such-and-such an occasion we did exercise the power of veto.

So, I come back to my argument, which is the main thing which impels me to make my speech. I say that the quality of those who will be prepared to sit in this house, to exercise a vote which comes to them by virtue of seeking election—a vote which will be meaningless, a vote which can have no effect; to express opinions which cannot be heard; to make arguments which can have no cogency; to try to persuade people to agree with those arguments—the quality of those who will be prepared to seek election to exercise such a privilege, if one can call it a privilege, will, in my opinion, be far less than the quality of those whom I now have the honour of addressing, and of those who have not seen fit to be present to hear my address but who will, I trust, read my remarks on a future occasion.

I now wish to bring my speech to an end by expressing two or three thoughts; and I want to show the source of those shots—thoughts.

An Hon. Senator: "Shots"?

Senator Donahoe: They are shots as well as thoughts. It was a Freudian slip on my part.

I consider what I am about to say to be pungent and correct. I hesitate to do this, because I have been rebuked for asking questions concerning newspaper articles. However, I have never heard anyone read a rule which says that one cannot refer to articles in a speech, and I propose to refer to them. Here is the first article. It is not really the article to which I am going to refer, but only the headline. It says:

Vacancies Prove People Don't Believe in Senate

Balderdash! Why are there vacancies in the Senate? Because the man who is the Prime Minister of this country causes vacancies to exist in the Senate. We die; we retire; we move off; our seats are here; and Joe Blow, on the street, cannot come in here and occupy that vacant seat. Someone has to be tapped on the shoulder by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, and he has to say it is his wish that he come here.

I do not see Senator Stollery here. I would explain to him how he got here, if he were around, but I won't. I say that is a faulty headline to an article attempting to prove that people do not believe in the Senate. It proves nothing of the kind. It proves only that the Leader of the Government in this country has a deep and abiding contempt for the Senate and that he will be happy when the day comes when he is no longer faced with the necessity of dealing with it in any capacity.

° Here is another editorial. It is headed, "Reforming the Senate". I shall read only two paragraphs:

Granted, an elected Senate would pose some problems, particularly in terms of resolving conflicts with the Commons. Considerable thought needs to be given to that point.

Nevertheless,—

Listen to this. You have been very good and very patient, and I thank you for that; but I want you to listen to this:

—I find it heartening that when Canadians think of regional representation in Ottawa they seem to feel that it is they, as regional federal electorates, who should be represented, rather than their provincial governments.

So far as I am concerned, that is merely another argument for extending the House of Commons, making it a bigger body than it is now, making it more unwieldy, adding to and augmenting the problem that is occasioned by the law as it now stands with respect to units of population.

Here is another editorial. It is headed, "Just imagine! A people Senate", and says:

Picture the people who would be available: doctors, civil servants, housewives, businessmen, teachers, students, sales people, secretaries, fishermen, mechanics—even (gasp) editors. Valuable and common-sense citizens who wouldn't touch politics with a barge pole. And a few weirdos for spice.

That is an article that has been cut from a reputable newspaper in Canada.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Donahoe: The writer wants the people who are sitting in this chamber not to be former premiers, former attorneys general, former members of the House of Commons, valued people in their own communities, but the kind of people he has named, with a few weirdos thrown in for good luck.

Senator Frith: No change there.

Senator Donahoe: The public is being told that that is what is wanted, that what we have is no good, so let us go to something better. I do not consider myself to be a weirdo; I am merely a little eccentric. I do not consider myself to be a weirdo, and I do not believe that any honourable senator here is a weirdo. I do not consider that a weirdo has any place in this chamber or in making the laws of this country.

Then there is an article which deals with one of the premiers who gave their consent. I refer here to Premier Hatfield, who is of the same party as myself. He has changed his position. He now believes that Canada's Senate will never work. He spoke to students on this subject and said that the Senate debates on the Constitution were uninformed. I thought that my contribution was informed. I listened with great interest and disagreed most heartily with a number of propositions that were advanced by people on the other side, but never once did it occur to me to think that those who spoke were uninformed. If anyone is uninformed, I regret to say that I have to believe it is Premier Hatfield—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Donahoe: —because were he well informed he would not make a speech of that kind.

Senator Marshall: He is one of the weirdos!

Senator Donahoe: He said that he does not believe that the Senate debates were informed. But I do not believe he knows what he is talking about when he makes that statement.

Senator Marshall: Right.

Senator Donahoe: Finally, to conclude—"And thank God," says someone—I shall read a brief editorial. It is the only one I saw which absolutely confirmed my own views. It is headed, "There is a Real Need For The Senate". I agree. I have been arguing all afternoon that we need a real Senate. It is very brief. I shall read it, and I promise that I shall then say very little.

● (1550)

Laboulaye said, in one of his lectures, that Jefferson, who had become so completely imbued with French ideas as even to admire the unicameral system of legislation, one day visited Washington at Mount Vernon, and, in the course of the conversation that ensued, the comparative excellence of the two systems came up for consideration.

They were discussing, in a friendly way, which is better, a bicameral house or a unicameral house.

After much had been said on both sides, finally, at the tea-table, Washington turning sharply to Jefferson, said, "You, sir, have just demonstrated the superior excellence of the bicameral system, by your own hand".

"How is that?" asked Jefferson.

"You have poured your tea from your cup out into the saucer to cool. We want the bicameral system to cool things. A measure originates in one house, and in heat is passed.—

Don't tell me there is no heat in the other place, because I know better.

—The other house will serve as a wonderful cooler; and, by the time it is debated and modified by various amendments there, it is much more likely to become an equitable law! No, we can't get along without the saucer in our system".

I am not an admirer of the American system, but it has one feature that we share with it; that is that we both have a bicameral legislature, and the function of cooling is attributable alike to the Senate of Canada and to the Senate of the United States. Washington said that the Senate of the United States was a cooler: I say that the Senate of Canada is a cooler. We do cause the other house to reflect; we give it time; we give it food for thought; and we do things to hastily considered propositions that reach us from time to time that have the effect of having those propositions reconsidered.

The editorial continues:

The same holds for Canada!

Let us keep our senate! Very few changes are needed to bring it up to perfection, operandi-wise.

No need to change its name either!

We do not need a House of Representatives; we do not need a House of the Provinces: we need what we now have, namely, a Senate.

I trust that those who pay heed to the arguments that I have advanced here today, if they are worthy of that name—perhaps I should call them beliefs—will find that some of those arguments or beliefs appeal to them, and that they will take them unto themselves and say, “Amendments may be needed, changes perhaps there should be, but whatever we do, let us not fool ourselves into believing that a change to a body of elected members is going to have any worthwhile effect, either on this house or on this country.”

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, would the Honourable Senator Donahoe permit a question?

Senator Donahoe: By all means.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I have always enjoyed hearing Senator Donahoe make a speech, whether in this chamber or in the Legislature of Nova Scotia, or on the platform, or wherever it may be.

He quoted from a newspaper, and I was wondering what woman, or man, or possibly someone in between, had written the article. Could the honourable senator put the name of the author on the record, and advise if that man or woman, or whoever it may be, has ever offered himself or herself for public office in an election, whether it be for dog-catcher, city alderman, town councillor, member of the House of Commons, or whatever it may be?

Senator Donahoe: I have great pleasure in answering the question. I so violently disagree with those who say that the quality of person who would come into this house would be the kind of persons that I referred to, that I made not the slightest effort to find out what kind of person made the statement. I said to myself, “I do not want to know that kind of person!”

Senator Muir: I have just one further comment on that. I appreciate the honourable senator's reply. Perhaps I should not lower the debate to such an extent in view of his enlightening remarks. You will find that many, many times, however, the greatest critics of the House of Commons, of the Senate, of elected municipal officials, are armchair generals who sit back and never at any time offer themselves for any position in their town, city, county, province or country. In reflecting on such comments, you have to consider the source from which they come, I suppose.

Senator Donahoe: I agree.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 16, at 8 p.m.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1981, pursuant to section 34(2) of the Official Languages Act, Chapter O-2, R.S.C., 1970.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, by way of informal notice, I believe that later this evening we will have a report from the Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science on Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code.

The report is not quite ready at this moment, so I warn you that I may be asking for leave to revert to Reports of Committees later this evening.

TAXATION AND BORROWING AUTHORITY

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject matter of Bill C-93, intituled: "An Act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds," or any matter relating thereto, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the mover of the motion to explain the reasons for his asking that the committee be authorized to examine and consider the subject matter of the bill.

I have been trying to get a copy of this bill. Apparently it is a recent one.

Senator Hayden: A similar bill was before the Senate earlier, but it did not cover the same items, of course. That bill dealt with excise taxes, certain taxes in relation to pipeline gas, et cetera.

This bill requires detailed study. Therefore, I think that should be done as soon as possible so that we can intelligently consider the scope of the bill when it finally comes before the Senate.

Senator Flynn: I understand it is Bill C-93.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Yes.

Senator Flynn: I have not been able to find a copy of it. If a pre-study is being requested only because the committee has nothing to do, I do not think that is a valid reason.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): It is perfectly valid.

Senator Flynn: I understand it has been the practice of the committee to pre-study tax bills, but I cannot understand what the urgency is in this case.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I can understand why Senator Flynn asks why the committee wants a pre-study, if he has not had a chance to read the bill, so I will certainly undertake to see that he gets a copy of it. I do not know why it is not included in our material because it has been introduced in the other place.

Senator Flynn: It was one of the last ones introduced.

Senator Frith: Yes, I think it was.

Hon. G. I. Smith: What is the number of the bill?

Senator Frith: It is Bill C-93. Its main title, or the first title you see on it, is "Borrowing Authority" and that would make one think that it should go to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. But it has some excise tax and other tax implications that make it fall, at least its principal parts, within that part of rule 45 concerning the jurisdiction of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

If Senator Flynn feels that he wants further assurance about the advisability of pre-study, I suggest that he speak to the chairman about when that pre-study should start. All we really want now is for the committee to have the authority it requests.

Senator Flynn: The question I was worried about is exactly what the deputy leader mentioned, that being the fact that we will be dealing with borrowing authority and taxes at the same time. Not having had a chance to look at the bill, I am a little puzzled as to exactly what we are being asked to do.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I should like to supplement what I said to Senator Flynn. This bill received first reading in the House of Commons on February 10. One of the major points in the bill relates to the changing of the basis for calculation of sales tax. It proposes a change in the base from the manufacturer's price level to the wholesaler's price level. This has provoked, judging by what I read in the newspapers, very considerable interest and discussion. Obviously, if you increase the spread, as you do, between the manufacturer's and wholesaler's price, you are going to increase the tax yield and whatever the consequences are that flow from that. I expect there will probably be substantial public interest.

Senator Flynn: I don't doubt that.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-89, intituled: "An Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

● (2010)

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order, and not to argue about the motion. As a result of the discussion on the previous motion I looked carefully at the bills that are available to me on my desk, and I find that the last numbered bill before me is Bill C-88. It seems rather strange that we should be asked to deal with Bill C-89 before it arrives on our desks.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I make the same comments I made respecting the previous motion. The point of order raised by the honourable senator is valid. We will try to have copies of these bills made available.

I hope the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will be given authority to pre-study the bill, with the proviso that such pre-study does not take place until members of the Senate have had adequate opportunity to look at the bill and to prepare themselves.

Senator Smith: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Government for his reply. I pose a further question since my own recollection of this matter is not necessarily reliable: Has this bill been introduced in the Senate and, if not, what is its status in the other place?

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I believe that Bill C-89 is in committee of the other place?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not believe we should grant leave at this time. We shall have time to look into this matter tomorrow. If the committee wishes to commence a pre-study, it has already received leave to proceed with Bill C-93.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Not at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Leave is not granted.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—EXTENSION OF ORDER OF REFERENCE

Hon. George van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was authorized by the Senate on May 14, 1980, to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence, or any subcommittee so authorized by the committee, be empowered to adjourn from place to place in Canada and in the United States for the purpose of such consideration.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon on Wednesday, March 31, 1982, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with respect to this matter of a committee sitting on a Wednesday afternoon when the Senate is sitting, I want to make it quite clear that this was discussed with Senator Lafond. It is the only committee for which leave has been granted to sit on that particular afternoon, and according to the provisional agreement made at our meeting, the committee will probably be the only one authorized to sit on Wednesday afternoon, March 31.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): March 31?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Flynn: You are certainly planning ahead!

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

COLD LAKE, ALBERTA—HEAVY OIL PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development in connection with a topic that has engaged his attention and mine over the last little while, namely, the future of the Cold Lake synthetic oil development in Alberta. I have been asking him what the government's policy is with respect to that matter, and I now invite him to consider the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in what I am told is an exclusive interview with the Globe and Mail of the other day, to the effect that instead of relying on the two oilsands plants, Alsands and Cold Lake, to supplement oil supplies by the end of the decade, only one, Alsands, is in the picture.

Can the minister tell me whether that is the policy of the government, and that the Cold Lake plant will not be required for the purposes it was originally thought it would fulfill?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I will refer that question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and perhaps get an expanded explanation of what is in the newspaper, without commenting on whether or not press reports are accurate.

Senator Roblin: While my honourable friend is consulting with his colleague, will he also ask him, in the event that the report is correct and that the Cold Lake project has been dropped from the priority list, why the government decided to give $50 million to Esso Canada in order to keep that particular plant available for supplying deficiencies in our oil supply?

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, the reason for that was explained fully at the time, but I can bring back those explanations, which I think are as valid now as they were then. The idea was to try to keep the group of engineers and others from dispersing before an agreement was reached between the producing provinces and Canada. However, my honourable friend will recognize some rather significant changes in some of the pricing projections that were made, some even less than a year ago.

Senator Roblin: With respect to the last comment of my honourable friend, that is what I have been trying to tell him for the last month or so. I am glad that he and I now see eye to eye.

Senator Olson: I agreed then.

Senator Roblin: You did? It is too bad that you do not carry your intellectual agreement into some activity with respect to the development of those oilsands.

I want to come back to my point, however, that if it is correct that the minister has written off Cold Lake as a potential supplier of oil for national self-sufficiency, then what becomes of the $50 million that was advanced to Esso with respect to it? Does this mean that the government has given up any hope of demanding, or even any right to demand, repayment of that sum?

Senator Olson: I think the actual sum was $40 million rather than $50 million, but I will check that too. I will also get a reply to the other part of my honourable friend's question, because I suppose that at this point, anyway, my honourable friend is allowing his memory to be selective, since he can remember the reasons that were given at the time. However, I think I would rather have the document in front of me so that I can read it to him precisely.

Senator Roblin: I assure my honourable friend that my memory is not quite that dull.

Senator Olson: But it is selective.

Senator Roblin: Selective or not, I remember the selective reasons advanced by my honourable friend to justify the gift of $50 million to Esso at the time. I say "gift", because I believe that is what it will turn out to be. I did not accept the reasons which were given then as being valid, because they merely excuse the government's lethargy and inability to come to a decision on the matter.

I can tell my honourable friend, however, that while Esso only gets $40 million, it will cost the Government of Canada $50 million because it has undertaken to pay the carrying costs on that sum. It was announced that, while Esso would receive $40 million, Petro-Canada would receive $50 million because it was the intermediary through which the money was advanced. Therefore, the taxpayers of this country will be contributing $50 million to this abandoned project.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I really don't think it bothers me very much.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Nothing bothers you.

Senator Olson: I do not spend long hours in remorse because I do not agree with my honourable friend. He is not debating; he is now attempting to demonstrate how accurately he predicted a number of things. If we were going to go into that kind of score card, it would be a different matter. My honourable friend knows very well the reasons that were given at the time. I will go into this in great detail and will provide the information tomorrow, or as soon as I can get it.

Senator Roblin: I am not trying to justify any predictions, either my own or those of my honourable friend. I am trying to induce him to tell us what will happen to that $50 million.

Hon. G. I. Smith: And tell the truth!

Senator Olson: I have told you already, and I will repeat, that the terms and conditions that were set out in the advancing of that money are there. Of course, my honourable friend also knows that there was a date by which it would be operational and would then be recoverable, also probably within the terms of the agreement. I will, however, obtain the precise information and put it on the record so that my honourable friend will have complete recall.

Senator Roblin: I do not want the honourable gentleman to lay that flattering unction on his soul. He is not going to be able to hide behind that agreement. He is going to have to justify the policy upon which the agreement was based. I ask him to tell us who will pay that $50 million.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend already knows who is going to pay any bills arising out of commitments made by the federal government.

Senator Roblin: Yes, the taxpayers of Canada are going to pay.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MEETINGS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question at this time. I might say that I am a little surprised to see that neither Senator Murray nor Senator Tremblay appears to be present in the chamber this evening.

In view of the fact that most unusual proceedings are taking place at what purport to be meetings of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, and in view of the fact that charges against the Crown are being made by witnesses, large groups of whom are being called, at great cost, to attend these meetings, I am rather surprised at the absence of those two honourable senators. Since it is rather unclear as to which one of them claims to be the Senate joint chairman of that committee, I suppose I must ask my question of the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If you had given notice, you could try that. You will make a speech, no doubt.

Senator Stollery: There seems to be no procedure, under the rules, by which I could ask the question of the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps there is a procedure whereby I could move a motion that the two senators be called to the Senate tomorrow to explain themselves. I would like to know what the situation is at this point, when these meetings are being held and the taxpayers' money is being spent—

Senator Flynn: Wait a minute! Order! Order! I rise on a point of order—

Senator Stollery: I am asking a question, Mr. Speaker, and I believe my question takes precedence.

Senator Flynn: I have a point of order.

Senator Stollery: There is no point of order.

Senator Flynn: You can't decide that. His Honour the Speaker will decide that, Senator Stollery. You had better resume your seat right away.

[Senator Olson.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): He has the floor.

Senator Flynn: I will not resume my seat before he does.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): You are not the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: I am not the Speaker, but neither are you.

● (2025)

I rise on a point of order. The honourable senator is putting arguments before his question and they are entirely irrelevant.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): He is presenting an introductory basis for his question and is in order.

Senator Flynn: No, no. He is saying that money is being spent. He doesn't know what he is talking about.

Hon. G. I. Smith: That is as usual.

Senator Frith: We might have a ruling on that for future questions by the Opposition.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order!

Senator Stollery: After that dubious point of order, honourable senators, I should like to be allowed at least to complete my question to the Leader of the Government.

Senator Flynn: Then ask a question. Come to the end of your question.

Senator Stollery: I wish to ask him if he has any idea of how we may find out what the percentage—

Senator Smith: When is the honourable gentleman going to start his question?

Senator Perrault: I would like to thank the honourable gentleman for his question.

Senator Flynn: You asked him to put it, of course.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is incredible the depth of cynicism to which the Leader of the Opposition has descended over the years.

Senator Smith: The depth of perception, you mean.

Senator Perrault: Surely the honourable senator is not implying that I arranged to have Senator Tremblay absent from the chamber tonight, or that I—

Senator Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege.

Senator Perrault: Sit down!

Senator Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege, and you had better sit down or I will make you sit down.

Senator Perrault: I did not arrange to have Senator Murray absent from this chamber tonight either.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, please! Order!

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government has said that I arranged for Senator Tremblay to be absent.

Senator Perrault: I did not.

Senator Frith: He never said that.

Senator Flynn: You did say that.

Senator Perrault: No, I did not.

Senator Flynn: You said that.

Senator Frith: No, he did not.

Senator Perrault: No, I did not.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Flynn: You said that, and we will look at the official report tomorrow, Your Honour, and will see if the reporter heard him. He certainly speaks loudly enough to be heard. He said that I had arranged—

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Frith: No, he said that you suggested that he had arranged the absence—

Senator Flynn: He said that you had arranged it yourself?

Senator Perrault: Let me explain what the situation is.

Senator Flynn: Yes, you had better explain it.

Senator Perrault: The Honourable Senator Stollery directed his question, in the first instance, to the Honourable Senator Tremblay.

Senator Smith: No, he didn't. Senator Tremblay was not here.

Senator Perrault: He said he had hoped to address his question to Senator Tremblay. He said that in Senator Tremblay's absence alternatively he had hoped to have the opportunity of questioning Senator Murray. And then the Leader of the Opposition—

Senator Flynn: I am speaking about what you said.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition, in a petulant display contrary to the traditions of this chamber, suggested that somehow we had a prior arrangement for me to make a speech on this occasion. I merely drew to the attention of honourable senators that I had nothing to do with the absence of Senator Tremblay this evening, and I had nothing to do with the absence of Senator Murray.

Senator Flynn: I never said that.

Senator Perrault: But I will tell you that the honourable senator has asked a very appropriate question.

Senator Smith: Sure, at your suggestion.

Senator Perrault: This so-called joint committee, this "kangaroo court," which has been convened by Honourable Senators Murray and Tremblay, is not acting in the best traditions of Parliament by proceeding with its deliberations without a representative group of members from the other chamber serving on the committee. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition must know that that is unacceptable and a parliamentary disgrace.

This Conservative Party, which is lecturing Canadians from coast to coast these days—

Senator Smith: He's mad now!

Senator Perrault: —about upholding parliamentary tradition and the customs of Parliament, is trampling those traditions into the dust, so far as this so-called joint committee is concerned.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Perrault: There is no acceptance at all by the Conservative opposition of the point that certain members of the House of Commons cannot in conscience attend these joint committee meetings. Certain members of the other place have stated that according to Erskine May they cannot attend those meetings while the Commons bell is ringing; that in conscience they must absent themselves from committees. That argument has no weight at all so far as Senator Tremblay, Senator Murray and the Leader of the Opposition are concerned. Their policy is to ram ahead with joint committee meetings which have no legitimacy in any meaningful sense in the realm of parliamentary tradition and justice.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I think I should rise on a point of privilege, at least. I may say as a preamble that it is a very pitiful picture the Leader of the Government offers to the Senate when he makes that kind of speech and defends the government against anything that might be said about it. So servile is the Leader of the Government that, to my memory, I have not seen the equivalent anywhere in my 25 years in this place and the other place. It is shameful.

● (2030)

Secondly, with regard to the question raised by Senator Stollery, I do not know whether he is a member of that committee, but I do know that Senator Guay is a member and that, if there was a desire to have the Senate and the Liberal Party represented at that committee meeting, they merely had to attend. The committee was only hearing witnesses. There is no justification for their absence. There is no reason for Senator Stollery crying or complaining about the committee proceeding, under the circumstances, when he merely had to go to the meeting. But if he wants to be a servile senator, at the service of the Prime Minister and of the servile Leader of the Government in this place—

Senator Perrault: That is unparliamentary language.

Senator Flynn: —then that is up to him.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, I rise on the same question of privilege. The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate has intimated that I would lend myself to what I consider an illegal meeting to give it legitimacy. I certainly would not do such a thing.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no? Go back into your place and stay there.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Because you were instructed not to go.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I wish to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government and Senator Stollery—lery that not only are they propounding shameful propositions but they are shamefully poor actors.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, let me respond to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate by suggesting that what we have here is a question of basic parliamentary courtesy, something which, tonight, the Leader of the Opposition has once again demonstrated he knows very little about. The Leader of the Opposition rose on an alleged point of privilege and then proceeded to employ quite unparliamentary language in discussing other members of this chamber. It was dreadful and abusive language.

Senator Smith: "Dreadful"—it hurt you, did it?

Senator Perrault: We are talking in terms of parliamentary tradition and custom—

Senator Smith: Go on!

Senator Perrault: —which has it that joint committees of Parliament should represent the various viewpoints in Parliament.

Senator Flynn: Never; that is not true.

Senator Perrault: And that includes members of the other chamber. We would expect the same consideration from the other chamber, were the situation reversed. We are suggesting that when members of the other chamber, in good conscience and for what they regard as good reasons, find themselves unable to attend meetings of a joint committee, then honourable senators should not move unilaterally to hold committee hearings; they should not move unilaterally to take decisions in an undemocratic fashion. We are talking here about parliamentary tradition and courtesy. We need no more lectures from the Conservative Party of this country about their desire to uphold Parliament and the traditions of Parliament, as long as the Leader of the Opposition condones that kind of committee performance by some of his followers.

Senator Flynn: What the Leader of the Government has said is entirely untrue. It is not in accordance with tradition at all, considering that the committee merely had to hear witnesses and that that was the only reason for the sitting of that committee. There is no rule that requires that all parties be represented in such a situation. The only requirement under the terms of reference is that the two houses be represented; that is all. When the Leader of the Government says what he says, he is not telling the truth.

Senator Perrault: Again, unparliamentary language.

Senator Flynn: I repeat: You are not telling the truth. Any committee chairman here with any experience at all will support my statement. It is not required that members of both sides be present if a committee is merely hearing evidence which is to be considered by the entire committee when it makes its decision. That is the reason there is a difference between the quorum required to hear witnesses and the quorum required to make a decision. The Leader of the Government should know that and should not get excited about what is going on in the other place.

[Senator Smith.]

I have been very careful to avoid discussing the goings-on in the other place, simply because it is none of our business. But that is not the reason the Leader of the Government is excited. He is excited because he feels that he must come to the rescue of the government every time we say an uncomplimentary word about it. I think he is behaving like a child.

Senator Smith: And a young child at that.

Senator Flynn: That is all I will say for now, although there is something I could add.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on at least four or five points the Leader of the Opposition could have been called to order for using unparliamentary language.

Senator Flynn: Sure. You too.

Senator Perrault: First, he called the Leader of the Government a liar.

Senator Flynn: I didn't say that.

Senator Perrault: And then there are all the other statements.

Senator Flynn: I said that you were not telling the truth.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition has said tonight that there is no requirement that both sides be represented at a committee meeting when hearing witnesses. That is a very technical and legalistic approach to the whole question.

Senator Flynn: Stick to the point about hearing witnesses.

Senator Perrault: Members of the other chamber are told by Erskine May that parliamentary committees should not meet while the division bell is ringing and, for that reason, under present circumstances, certain members believe that they must absent themselves from meetings of joint committees. The Leader of the Opposition knows that morally it is indefensible to proceed with meetings of a joint committee made up of members of both chambers and all parties, even though they may be hearings, as long as certain members must absent themselves for reasons of conscience and procedure.

Senator Smith: That is nonsense.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government knows that when a committee is hearing witnesses, both parties or all parties need not be represented, and I would call on any committee chairman in this place, beginning with the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to establish that very often witnesses have been heard with only one party represented. The honourable senator is trying to defend the government, and this is neither the place nor the occasion. I suggest that he mind his own business. I am quite sure that if Mr. Trudeau were here he would say, "Sir, please deliver us from my friends and I will look after my enemies."

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I rise on a related question of privilege and I hope that I will receive the same courtesy that was extended to Senator Flynn.

Senator Smith: And Senator Perrault.

Senator Guay: That is, I hope that I will be given a chance to explain my point without any hollering or yelling.

Senator Smith: We are no louder than you, Joe.

Senator Guay: I attended the meeting of the Official Languages Committee on Thursday, March 11. I arrived at the meeting room, Room 371 in the West Block, at two minutes before 2 o'clock. Senator Wood and Senator Hastings were also present. It was well after 2 o'clock before the joint chairman or Senator Tremblay arrived. When the joint chairman arrived and the meeting commenced, I rose on a point of order. As it is reported in the report of the committee of that day at page 37:39, I said:

On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I also felt the meeting had been postponed, because you did not take the Chair until almost seven minutes after 2 o'clock.

It is unfortunate that my presence at that meeting was not recorded in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for that day, because I notice tonight that Senator Murray and Senator Tremblay are recorded as having been present in this chamber. This is a typical example of the chairman calling a meeting for 2 o'clock when he cannot make it himself.

I do not agree with the comment of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate that a committee proceeding under such circumstances is legal. I have spent almost 15 years in both this and the other place, and I can say that I never attended a meeting of a committee that went ahead when both parties were not represented. Even when the Creditistes were represented in Parliament, we would wait for their representative to appear before beginning a committee meeting.

Senator Perrault: That is not the Tory way.

Senator Guay: My point is that it is shameful for the Joint Chairman of the Official Languages Committee to call a meeting, to present himself to the Senate, thereby being recorded as present that day in the Senate chamber, and then to leave us sitting waiting for the committee to begin, without the same privilege of being able to present ourselves in this chamber first. For this reason, I do not believe that committee meetings should convene at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

I would also inform honourable senators that the steering committee of that joint committee, which was agreed to by both joint chairmen, indicated that all the testimony by witnesses was to be heard before Easter. That proposal was approved by the committee, and it was agreed that we would not deviate from that procedure.

● (2040)

Just this last week alone, a joint chairman of that committee had taken it upon himself to call a meeting for the day after which the regular meeting takes place.

Senator Flynn: That's not true.

Senator Guay: I think that that is shameful—and that is the word I think the Leader of the Opposition used—particularly when my presence will not be noted in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Thursday last.

Senator Flynn: That's up to you.

Senator Guay: It is obvious, honourable senators, that the joint chairman of that committee is playing games. As I said before, if he is advising the Conservative Party in the same manner in which he is advising the members of that committee, I can see why the Conservative Party is in a great deal of trouble.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, I see that Senator Tremblay has taken his seat in the chamber, so I shall address my question to him.

Was an election held for a new joint chairman at the meeting which took place this afternoon?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I can testify that this afternoon, an acting chairman was elected by the committee members present and that there was a quorum for this purpose. The election took place under the direction—the word is perhaps not entirely appropriate—of the only person who was in a position to do so, namely, the clerk of the committee. In fact, he merely asked the committee members present whether they were agreeable to designating a chairman pro tem. They were, and they decided to do so right away. And that is why I was chairman pro tem of the committee which sat this afternoon. The committee meeting had been duly called by a decision of the committee itself, which had met the week before. I wish to emphasize that it was the committee's own decision. I was present last week when the committee decided to sit Tuesday this week in order to hear representatives of the Atomic Energy Control Commission. So that is why I was chairman pro tem of the committee, to hear the witnesses appearing before the committee and the group accompanying them. To answer the senator's question, there was a proper election, as a result of which I was chairman pro tem of the committee.

[English]

Senator Stollery: My supplementary question, honourable senators, would be supplementary to the questions I asked last week. I was at the door—

Senator Flynn: Were you there?

Senator Stollery: Yes, I was.

Senator Asselin: He was at the door!

Senator Stollery: Yes, I was.

It is interesting to see how the Leader of the Opposition, who sits, after all, 100 yards from the other end of the building, can pursue with a straight face the theory that somehow we ignore what is taking place at the other end of this building, particularly as it relates to a joint committee. That proposition is so ridiculous that it should not be taken seriously.

Senator Smith: By you.

Senator Flynn: You were not appointed to the Senate for that reason.

Senator Stollery: I should like to pursue my question to Senator Tremblay, which follows on last week's questioning. He says that everything took place in the normal procedure.

Senator Perrault: In the normal Tory way.

Senator Stollery: I presume—and if I am wrong I am sure the honourable senator will shake his head—that there was only one party present today when the new joint chairman was elected. So, in fact, what we have is a joint committee of Parliament that met last Tuesday after one of the joint chairmen refused to meet last Tuesday. That could happen if things took place quickly or in a hurry, and particularly since the steering committee had planned meetings for Tuesdays, but then the committee met all of a sudden on Wednesday, a day on which the committee does not meet often.

Senator Guay: It never did.

Senator Stollery: Then the committee suddenly decided to meet at the very hour the Senate was meeting on Thursday, which is certainly unusual.

The decisions which were made at these meetings were not normal decisions that are made when there are no events taking place. All of these decisions were made with only the members of one party present. That has culminated today, apparently—

Senator Flynn: Put your question.

Senator Frith: He is asking Senator Tremblay to verify what took place.

Senator Flynn: He is asking a supplementary, yet he has been talking for 10 minutes.

Senator Stollery: I want to be clear on this. Do I understand that Senator Tremblay is now a joint chairman of the committee, and that he was elected joint chairman of this committee without members of more than one party being present?

Senator Flynn: You never understood anyway.

Senator Stollery: Is Senator Tremblay now a joint chairman as a result of an election which has apparently taken place with only the members of one party being present?

Senator Perrault: Shame.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: Strictly and objectively speaking, I was elected chairman of the committee this afternoon by representatives of both houses of Parliament. Senator Stollery is querying the propriety of an election where one of the political parties was not represented. As far as I know, joint Senate committees are defined mainly—

Senator Stollery: Joint committees of the Senate and the House of Commons!

Senator Tremblay: In terms of representation of both houses. In another words, they are joint committees because they represent both houses of Parliament. As far as I know, there is no rule that the joint character of these committees derives from representation of the various parties. If Senator

[Senator Flynn.]

Stollery cannot agree with our traditions and institutions, I wish he would tell me what rules or constitutional practice require that the parties must always be represented. It is up to Senator Stollery, and with due respect, to the Leader of the Government, to provide an answer.

● (2050)

[English]

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government clarify something for me? As a result of this parliamentary authority which he has cited, which I do not challenge, am I to understand that joint parliamentary committees should not meet while the bell is ringing? Is that the understanding?

Senator Perrault: It is a procedural point dealt with by Erskine May—I do not have the precise reference in front of me—that while the bell is ringing, committees do not meet.

Senator Smith: What bell?

Senator Perrault: The bell in the other place in this particular case. Honourable senators, I know that senators like Honourable Senator Smith know in their conscience and their parliamentary experience—

Senator Smith: I do know it, yes.

Senator Perrault: —that you should not schedule joint committee meetings when members of the other chamber are unwilling to attend for reasons which in conscience and in procedure make it impossible for them to do so. In these circumstances you should not hold meetings of a joint committee out of courtesy, out of deference and respect for parliamentary tradition and practice. Honourable Senator Smith knows that. He is just flapping his arms this evening.

Senator Smith: I don't know that.

Senator Perrault: He knows better than that. He has been around long enough to know that.

Senator Smith: I rise on a question of privilege. I don't know any such thing and neither does the honourable gentleman know any such thing, because it is not true.

Senator Perrault: You should know it. I find it very remarkable that tonight we have the Leader of the Opposition and spokesmen for the opposition advocating the merits of having a one-party committee which parades under the mask of being a multi-party joint committee supposedly representing and reflecting both chambers.

Senator Flynn: Okay! Okay!

Senator Smith: We are only challenging your nonsensical assertion of what Erskine May said. He does not say anything at all of the kind.

Senator Perrault: Senator Smith always descends into vituperation when his argument is weak and that, of course, is the sign of a person with a very weak position to defend.

Senator Flynn: The leader resorts to noise. That is all he does.

Senator Smith: Sometimes when I hear a lot of noisy nonsense, it is difficult to be as courteous as one should be.

Senator Perrault: Senator Smith says it does not say that, and I say it does say that. If I can have one of the pages produce a copy of Erskine May, I will find the reference. Honourable Senator Smith, being a former premier of Nova Scotia, should know better.

Senator Smith: I do know better, and you don't!

An Hon. Senator: Order!

Senator Perrault: Certainly his sense of fair play should be such that he would recognize the importance of having adequate representation from both chambers and from all parties on those joint committees.

Senator Smith: I have not observed very much fair play on the part of my honourable friend, and I do not know why he should expect any from me.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I am not sure it is a question of privilege—

Senator Flynn: Try it.

Senator Tremblay:—but it is a real question. As a duly elected joint chairman of the joint committee meeting held this afternoon, the question being raised implicitly by Senator Stollery and by the Leader of the Government is: Should I, as joint chairman of that committee this afternoon have moved, if Liberal members of that committee were not present, a postponement of the meeting? As a question of privilege or a question of due process, may I, in that respect, follow the behaviour adopted by the Speaker of the House of Commons in a similar situation where one party is ready to vote and the other party is not? Be careful what you say about that. If I had made a ruling of that kind because there were no Liberal members of the committee present—be careful about the conclusion that you will reach—it might have had tremendous implications.

My understanding of the situation this afternoon was that I was duly elected by the members present because there was a quorum, the quorum being defined in terms of a presence of both chambers disregarding party affiliation of the members. If you introduce a dimension that a joint committee is not composed on the basis of both chambers being represented but at the same time having a representation of parties, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate—

Hon. Peter Bosa: What about conventions?

Senator Tremblay: I am raising a question of privilege, but not for the sake of reflection on our part as senators. My point is in view of the implications of the principles involved, you are changing the basic rules of the composition and the definition of quorums in all joint committees if you go beyond a representation of both chambers on those joint committees and add another rule that within the representation of both chambers there should be at the same time a representation of parties.

Senator Perrault: I should like to respond to Honourable Senator Tremblay because he has put forward a viewpoint.

Senator Flynn: No, he has put forward a question. Answer the question!

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition has disrupted proceedings enough this evening.

Senator Tremblay: I put forward principles.

Senator Perrault: You put forward a viewpoint.

Senator Smith: Senator Tremblay asked a question.

Senator Perrault: Honourable Senator Tremblay belongs to a party which reminds us, in this chamber, and in other forums about the need for principle, about the need to observe convention and tradition, and about the need to observe fair play. These are all principles and positions enunciated frequently by members of the Conservative Party.

Senator Tremblay: Not very often on your side.

Senator Perrault: What are we saying here? We are saying that joint committees should be balanced and should see the involvement of all political parties in the other place and in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: It is not in the rules.

Senator Perrault: We are saying that these committees should represent a balanced representation of parliamentarians considering the important questions taken under consideration by these joint committees, and we are saying that in this particular or unique impasse with which Parliament finds itself faced surely Senator Tremblay must know why Liberal members of the other place, yes, and others, have not been attending his committee meetings. He has read the newspapers.

Senator Smith: They don't want to go. That's all!

Senator Perrault: He has heard the television broadcasts and he has listened to the radio.

Senator Flynn: They have been instructed by you.

Senator Asselin: Were they instructed not to attend?

Senator Perrault: He has attended meetings of his own caucus. Honourable senators, here is the Leader of the Opposition who, again in his usual boorish fashion—

Senator Flynn: Dealing with you, that is the only way I can talk.

An Hon. Senator: Order!

Senator Perrault:—talks in terms of fair play and free speech, interrupting everyone who tries to make a point in this chamber. But this kind of conduct has been a feature of his checkered career in Parliament.

Senator Smith: Isn't the Leader of the Government nice and generous!

Senator Perrault: What is the point we are trying to make?

Senator Smith: Who knows?

Senator Perrault: We are trying to make this point, and I appeal over the heads of certain senators who sit on the other side.

Senator Tremblay: Yes, what is the point?

Senator Perrault: We are saying that because certain members of the other chamber are unwilling to participate in joint committee meetings as long as the House of Commons fails to record the division commenced on March 2 the joint committees should not meet. The bell is ringing.

Senator Flynn: And we know the bell is going to continue to ring.

Senator Perrault: We do not know how long it is going to continue to ring; that is admitted. We say that on—

● (2100)

Senator Tremblay: May I correct what the Leader of the Government is saying? I have never heard any bell—

Senator Perrault: Let me conclude what I have to say, and then, with great respect, I will listen to the honourable senator. Let me quote the authority cited by certain members in the other place. Any of us may agree or disagree with their interpretation, and any of us may agree or disagree with their motives, but they cite page 617 of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, Nineteenth Edition.

Senator Smith: What does he say about the Senate?

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is becoming more and more of a nuisance when efforts are being made to explain some of these points.

Senator Smith: I am always a nuisance when I do not agree with the Leader of the Government.

Senator Perrault: There is a difference between being a gadfly and a plain mosquito, and tonight the honourable senator is being a mosquito.

Senator Smith: There is a difference between being bombastic and being sensible, and I will say which you are—

Senator Perrault: Perhaps the honourable senator will give me time to read the reference. I believe that he may be frightened that something may be brought forward which will discredit his party's position.

Senator Smith: Do you think I have not read it before?

Senator Perrault: The senator suggested earlier that he did not know any reference existed, so I am bringing it to his attention. His memory must be failing. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to discipline his senators a little more effectively.

Senator Flynn: I could not achieve the same efficiency as you do, that's obvious.

Senator Perrault: Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of privilege?

Senator Flynn: Yes, because you have asked me to discipline my members; but I am not able to do the same as you in this respect. It's so obvious. You see that they all listen to you religiously.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition has taken his place—I hope. Let me read the reference:

When a division is called in the House, the chairman of a standing committee must suspend its proceedings for such time as will, in his opinion, enable members to vote in the division and return to the Committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: That is what it says.

Senator Smith: What does it say about the Senate?

Senator Perrault: Until they vote, certain Commons members believe that sittings of committees should be suspended. That is the viewpoint taken by some of our fellow parliamentarians in the other chamber. The point to be made is that whether one agrees or disagrees with the position those members have taken, it is grossly unfair and undemocratic to purport to have a meeting of a joint committee when certain members will not attend those committee meetings because of important procedural opinions. It is, for some of them, obviously a matter of conscience.

Senator Flynn: How does it apply to senators?

Senator Perrault: According to Senator Flynn, meetings of joint committees, under these circumstances, may be legal, but it is not in the tradition of parliamentary democracy to have unrepresentative joint committees proceed. To do so is against convention and tradition. If we were in a situation similar to the one they are in in the other place, I believe that many of us would resent very much a joint committee's proceeding to hear witnesses and taking decisions without the presence of a number of honourable senators. We are appealing on the basis of fair play. We are basing our view on tradition and convention, and, yes, on this reference from Erskine May. Surely, it is a matter of dealing fairly with the other chamber and attempting to expedite the work of our committees in a democratic fashion.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to the question I asked initially. After all that has been said by the Leader of the Government and by Erskine May, joint committees cannot sit while the bell rings because it is a discourtesy, it is unconventional and unparliamentary—is that what the Leader of the Government has said?

Senator Perrault: The view expressed is that they should not meet, under the circumstances. It is a matter of one's perception of what the parliamentary system should involve.

Senator Nurgitz: I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer and perhaps I might even agree with it. Can he tell me why the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, with a joint chairman of my party from the other house, sat last Thursday while the bell was ringing?

Senator Guay: Because Senator Godfrey does not know any better.

Senator Flynn: Senator Guay has fallen into the trap. That was a bear trap for Senator Guay.

Senator Nurgitz: My point is that Conservative members of the House of Commons could not attend because of the parliamentary precedent which has been recited from Erskine May. But that committee sat. Why is no honourable senator standing up and screaming and shouting about the compulsory aspect of that meeting?

Senator Perrault: I want to assure honourable Senators that I am consistent in my viewpoint, as erroneous as some members of the opposition may consider it to be. I believe that no joint committee should meet unless it includes fair representation from both chambers, and an opportunity for fair and balanced representation from both houses of Parliament. My remarks hold equally true with respect to all joint committees.

Senator Flynn: Of both parties?

Senator Perrault: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Are you saying that both parties should be represented in the Senate?

Senator Perrault: What was the question?

Senator Flynn: You said that no committee should sit unless both parties were represented in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: I am talking in terms—

Senator Flynn: “In terms”? Say clearly.

Senator Perrault: I am speaking in terms of joint committees involving both chambers. I am offering a viewpoint, which I believe is supported by many honourable senators, that we should proceed in a co-operative way with the Commons to ensure that joint committee work is balanced and represents the various shades of party opinion.

Senator Flynn: Liberal senators could attend those committees. I am saying that if the Liberal Party was not represented, it is because they refuse to go. If the Leader of the Government says that both parties have to be represented, it means that if in the Senate we decide not to attend a committee, you will not be able to proceed, even to hear witnesses.

Senator Guay: On a point of privilege—

Senator Flynn: You are not involved in this.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, Senator Wood has been seeking to speak for about half an hour.

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, as a long-standing member of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, I should like to ask Senator Tremblay a question. I would like to state that I have not seen him at any meeting of the committee. Obviously, he is a new committee member and a new joint chairman.

I should like to know if he agrees with the words of Senator Murray when, on March 2, he said:

Unfortunately, I see myself forced to adjourn the committee so that the MPs may go to the house for the vote.

I hear the bell ringing. The bell is still ringing and the MPs have not gone to vote. I would like to hear the opinion of the honourable senator on that matter.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: I would suggest that Senator Wood heard very well, just as I heard last week the question she asked Senator Murray. So far, Senator Wood, is my understanding of the events accurate? You addressed the same question in the same terms to the committee chairman, Senator Murray. You have just asked me, in my capacity as new chairman, to give my opinion on this question which you have just asked in the same terms. Is it not true that you asked the committee chairman the same question last week?

[English]

Senator Wood: That is the same question.

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: In that case, Senator Wood, since your memory has been so faithful and since you have asked the question in exactly the same terms, would you by any chance remember the answer that the then committee chairman gave you?

Senator Wood: Senator Tremblay, I am putting the question to you.

Senator Frith: Do you agree or do you not?

[Translation]

Senator Guay: He does not know the answer.

Senator Tremblay: Senator Wood, your question is, in fact, a matter of your memory against mine, and you prefer to trust yours. That is obvious from the way you repeated your own question. So I think you should provide the answer yourself, that is, what Senator Murray answered at the time. That way, at least I will not make any mistakes.

Senator Langlois: You are not answering the question.

Senator Tremblay: The trap was too obvious.

Senator Langlois: That is no excuse!

Senator Tremblay: No, it is not an excuse. The trap was too obvious for me to misquote the reply given by Senator Murray when he was acting as chairman. Since the same question was put to him—Senator Wood has confirmed that the question was put to the chairman in the same terms—I would be laying myself open to faulty recall, something Senator Wood could not do since she had received the answer last week.

[English]

Senator Wood: I have a supplementary question. What I wanted was to have your opinion on that, Senator Tremblay.

Senator Flynn: You do not ask for an opinion.

Senator Wood: I can ask any question I like.

Senator Flynn: Senator Olson refused to give any opinion.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I rise once more on a question of privilege.

When the Leader of the Government and I were discussing what Erskine May said, I advanced the view that Erskine May did not say anything about the Senate, or anything that was applicable to the Senate, unless the facts were such that they made it so. The Leader of the Government very eagerly grasped Erskine May, and read what Erskine May said, which confirmed exactly what I said, namely, that it had nothing to do with the Senate.

Senator Perrault: I was not talking about the Senate.

Senator Smith: You were talking about senators going to the committee.

Senator Perrault: I was attempting to explain and describe the concerns of the members of the other place.

Senator Smith: Well, let me finish my point of order.

Of course, the honourable gentleman would like to evade the consequences of being wrong. That is a natural desire, but the only trouble is that in this case the authority which he so eagerly seized upon to support his position does not support it, and now he is trying to evade the position by saying that he never applied it to the Senate, though that was the very point of order that I raised with him. He asserted that I was wrong and that he would show me to be wrong and shouted for the book so that he could do it. He could not do it, because I was not wrong, and he was.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, what I endeavoured to do was explain why certain members of the other place refuse to come to the meetings of joint committees. I have quoted a parliamentary reference which they have cited to support their absence.

Senator Smith: You should have read it yourself first.

Senator Perrault: I quoted it, and I need not quote it again.

Senator Smith: Go ahead!

Senator Perrault: I did not use this reference in order to explain in any way the attitude of honourable senators.

Senator Smith: That is what you said you were doing.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, a moment ago, when the Leader of the Government started to speak, asking us to come to the point—I think that was the expression he used; he said, “Let us come to the point”—I expected that he would define a joint committee for us. I expected the first part of the definition to be that a joint committee is made up of representatives from both chambers. He did not say that. He just went on to say that it should be made up of representatives of parties.

As a supplementary question, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if the real point at issue is whether representation from parties should come first, as opposed to representation from both chambers.

Senator Perrault: No, honourable senators, that is not the point. I wonder—

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Tremblay: So you were not on the point when you answered.

Senator Perrault: —because opposition senators have not convinced us with their arguments, and some have not accepted our arguments, whether there is any point in engaging in a long and protracted debate at this point?

Senator Flynn: You started it, and Senator Stollery.

Senator Perrault: In the view of some of us, the essence of a successful joint committee is one which has the willing support of representatives from both houses. At the moment we have a situation in the other place which the authorities suggest is unparalleled in the annals of parliamentary democracy. It is a situation in which the Commons bell has been ringing for a protracted length of time. A situation is indeed unprecedented which sees certain members of the other place, who are entitled to attend those joint committee meetings, unwilling to participate in them because they believe that as long as the bell is ringing they should not be taking part in any committee activity. We are talking about a courtesy which most of us, I suggest, believe should be extended to the other chamber, to those members in the other place who feel in conscience that they cannot participate in joint committee meetings because the vote of March 2 has not been taken and the division bell is still ringing.

If Senator Tremblay rejects that viewpoint it is his right to do so, but that is a feeling held by many of us.

Senator Tremblay: By way of supplementary—

Senator Frith: Just say the last word.

Senator Tremblay: I think I have the right to ask a supplementary.

Senator Smith: Of course he has the right.

Senator Frith: I know. I am just asking him to say the last word and let us move on to something else.

Senator Tremblay: Speaking of coming to the point, do I understand that the main preoccupation of the Leader of the Government is that a meeting of any joint committee should be productive? If that is the case, I may tell the Leader of the Government that this afternoon's meeting was very successful.

Senator Guay: Because you were named joint chairman?

Senator Flynn: Even you would have done well!

Senator Tremblay: We heard representatives from the Atomic Energy Commission, who presented a very important brief to the committee. Representatives of the commission were there, as well as certain other people. Everybody felt that they had learned quite a lot from that presentation. They learned still more from the questions they asked of those representatives. The conclusion, in terms of the evaluation of that meeting this afternoon, will take the form of a question to the Leader of the Government.

Does the Leader of the Government not feel that when all parties—and I use that word not in terms of Liberals or Conservatives, but of all the people present—think that they

● (2120)

Senator Perrault: That is a rhetorical question. I really have nothing further to add.

Senator Tremblay: I understand that you have nothing to add.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF LIFE INSURANCE INDUSTRY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Representatives of the Department of Finance have been meeting with the representatives of life insurance companies with a view to finding a common ground towards taxation of that industry. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government has any information concerning these negotiations. If so, could he inform the Senate to that effect?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. I have no further information on that point as of this evening.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a brief question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Professor Mandel of the Osgoode Hall Law School recently published an article which was highly critical of the motives behind what was considered by the professor to be an unprecedented naming of two persons to do what I suppose could be termed a critique of the report of the McDonald Commission of Inquiry, which was released last August. Would the Leader of the Government indicate the basis upon which the government chose Wishart Spence and Robert Wright to offer opinions on the report of the McDonald Commission—opinions which, I understand, the government released within days of the release of the McDonald report itself? Obviously, in the mind of Professor Mandel—and certainly in my mind, as I read it—those opinions undermined the findings of the McDonald Commission.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a brief supplementary question. While I am aware of the position held by Mr. Justice Wishart Spence, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government would report to us on the expertise of the other gentleman. Could he also tell us whether the government is proposing to engage another, or others, to check the findings of the Spence and Wright report, if those are not satisfactory.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that further information will be sought.

ENERGY

EAST COAST—OWNERSHIP OF OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, who, as I understand it, has among his many duties a certain responsibility in respect of energy. Has the government decided whether, in its view, a certain proportion of properties being explored off the east coast of Canada—more particularly, possible supplies of gas and oil that may be discovered there—will have to be returned to the Government of Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I am not sure that I understand the question. I wonder if the honourable senator would repeat it?

Senator Smith: I shall be happy to do so. I am not sure that I can repeat it exactly as I put it, but perhaps I will repeat it in another form that will be easier to follow. That might require a sentence of explanation.

The honourable gentleman will know that off the east coast of Canada there is a good deal of activity involving drilling and exploring in other ways for supplies of gas and oil under the sea. I am asking him whether the government has adopted a policy in respect of leases acquired by the companies doing the exploration? Are certain of those leases, or a proportion of them, to be returned to the government upon certain conditions?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do understand the question now. I will check into that. As my honourable friend is aware, an agreement has been signed with the Province of Nova Scotia. There is no agreement with regard to some of the other offshore resources at this point in time. Therefore, all of the rules and regulations are not clear.

Senator Smith: I thank my honourable friend for referring to the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia, because that was going to be the subject of my supplementary question. If there is a general policy of the Government of Canada such as that which I just mentioned, how does it fit into the terms of the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia with regard to offshore and gas resources?

Senator Olson: I will take that part of the question as notice and will try to correlate it with the earlier question.

OIL PRICING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Roblin on March 3 which concerns the federal government's New Oil Reference Price program. I can inform the honourable senator that the New Oil Reference Price will apply to conventional new oil, synthetic oil, including Suncor and Syncrude production, and oil from Canada lands, as specified in the Memorandum of Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta of September 1, 1981. This definition would also make provision for including production for the Cold Lake project in Alberta.

The New Oil Reference Price schedule is also set out in the Canada-Alberta Agreement of September 1, 1981. That schedule provides for prices up to a ceiling of $49.22 per barrel on July 1, 1982, rising to $77.48 on July 1, 1986, the actual price at a given time being the lesser of the Agreement ceiling price and the international oil price, adjusted for quality differences.

An announcement by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of March 2 extended the New Oil Reference Price program to liquids extracted from wet gas pools, to crude bitumen and heavy oil from experimental projects in oil sands and conventional crude produced from qualifying drilling space units in heavy oil fields in Alberta.

INDUSTRY

MASSEY-FERGUSON LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have another delayed answer in response to a question raised on March 4 by Senator Nurgitz which concerned financial assistance to Massey-Ferguson.

I can inform the honourable senator that I have checked with my colleagues and can confirm today that no recent overtures have been made by Massey-Ferguson seeking further financial assistance from the federal government.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TRADEMARK BILL

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the question asked by Senator Godfrey on February 11 concerning the re-introduction of the trademark bill.

Honourable senators, the government is not planning the re-introduction of the trademark bill in the immediate future. I understand that the bill is still in the department undergoing some fine tuning, and that it should be re-introduced before too long.

UNITED NATIONS

INTERNATIONAL SATELLITE MONITORING AGENCY— CANADIAN INITIATIVE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to the question asked by Senator Thompson on March 9, 1982, concerning the International Satellite Monitoring Agency.

A feasibility study was commissioned by the Department of External Affairs to evaluate reports and other relevant documents available from a number of sources, including suggestions made by certain NGOs. This study will serve as the basis of an interdepartmental evaluation to arrive at the government's position at UNGA37.

The concept of international verification is one to which Canada subscribes, but the process must be practical and feasible.

Aside from financial and technical aspects, a number of very real problems in the political, legal and organizational fields are apparent. An example relates to the authority of the United Nations, which is not a sovereign body but an organization of sovereign states.

To have a reasonable prospect of success, the government contends that the two space powers, the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R., must co-operate in the venture.

Canada is interested in examining a number of different applications of the concept to the arms control process. Since such application would be in the multilateral context, a survey would have to be made to determine if existing multilateral agreements are sufficient to warrant the development of such a verification system.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Florence B. Bird, Deputy Chairman of Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 16, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare, and Science to which was referred Bill C-78, intituled: "An Act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, March 3, 1982, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Your Committee, however, considers that certain minor changes in the wording of the English version of the bill are needed to make the form of the bill more acceptable. Since such changes would not affect the substance of the bill, your Committee recommends that the changes be incorporated when the bill, after it becomes law, is consolidated in the next revision of the public general statutes of Canada.

The changes recommended by your Committee and the reasons for the changes are as follows:

1. Page 2, Clause 2: Strike out lines 12 and 13 and substitute the following:

"“labour adjustment benefits” means the benefits payable under this Act;”

As it now reads, the expression "labour adjustment benefits" is defined in the singular to mean "the benefit payable under the Act".

While the Interpretation Act contains a rule stating that "words in the singular include the plural", it would nevertheless be preferable, in your Committee's opinion, to see this key expression of the bill defined in the plural since, in the rest of the bill, it is almost invariably used in the plural. (See, for example, clause 1, which contains the short title of the Act; clause 9, dealing with entitlement to labour adjustments benefits; clause 13, dealing with the qualifications for benefits; and clause 16, dealing with the calculation and payment of benefits).

It should be noted, as well, that in the French version of the bill, the expression is defined in the plural (page 2, lines 21 and 22).

2. Clause 3, Page 3:

(a) Strike out line 22 and substitute the following:

"from the day the order is made, as is speci—"

(b) Strike out line 35 and substitute the following:

"from the day the order is made unless,"

The Interpretation Act has a number of provisions that set out rules for the computation of time in terms of "days". For these rules to apply, the word "day" should be used in this clause rather than the word "date".

3. Page 6, Clause 10: Strike out line 13 and substitute the following:

"employer, trade union or any person"

Line 13 at present reads as follows "employer, trade union or any other person".

The word "other" in this expression implies that every employer and trade union is either a person or a corporation (since the word "person" includes a corporation under the Interpretation Act). A partnership is neither a person nor a corporation and a trade union is not a person if it is not incorporated. The word "other", in your Committee's opinion, should be deleted.

4. Page 6, Clause 10: Strike out line 14 and substitute the following:

"the Board for certification that he is eligible"

Your Committee considers that it is better in English to say that "an employee . . . may apply to the Board for certification that he is eligible" rather than "an employee . . . may apply to the Board for certification as being eligible".

5. Page 7, Clause 11: Strike out lines 8 to 10 and substitute the following:

"11. The Board may certify that an employee named in an application under section 10 is eligible to apply to the Commission for"

This is similar to the change recommended in item 4 above.

6. Page 7, Clause 12: Strike out lines 26 and 27 and substitute the following:

"12.(1) An employee in respect of whom a certificate has been issued under section 10 may apply to the Com—"

Your Committee recommends this change to improve the legislative expression in the English version of this clause. Similar changes would be required in clause 13(1), at page 8, lines 38 and 39; clause 13(2), at page 9, line 29; and clause 13(3), at page 10, line 7.

Respectfully submitted,

FLORENCE B. BIRD
Deputy Chairman

She said: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I would like briefly to explain this report.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bird: Thank you, honourable senators.

In accordance with its order of reference of March 3, 1982, your committee held three meetings and examined Bill C-78 in depth. The Deputy Minister of Labour appeared before the committee twice, and other members of the department attended all three meetings. The committee also questioned the representative from the Department of Justice who was responsible for the drafting of the bill.

Your committee decided that certain minor changes in the English version of the bill are needed to improve the wording and make the bill more acceptable. These changes were summarized in a paper prepared for the committee, at my request, by our Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel. They were discussed at the meeting of the committee held earlier today. The Department of Justice draftsman, who was present at that meeting, agreed that the changes recommended by the Law Clerk would improve the bill.

Since these changes relate only to the wording and do not affect the substance of the bill, your committee did not consider it necessary to delay this important piece of legislation by amending the bill at this time.

Your committee, instead, decided to recommend that the changes agreed to by the draftsman of the Department of Justice be incorporated in the next revision and consolidation of the public general Statutes of Canada. Such a revision is now being prepared by the Department of Justice. The changes that your committee recommends are set out in the report that I have just presented.

During the course of its examination of the bill, your committee also drew the attention of the deputy minister to certain anticipated problems in the administration of the policy and procedures contained in the bill. The deputy minister undertook to give special attention to the problem areas that were pointed out by the committee.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to move the adjournment of the consideration of this report because there are some questions raised, in my mind at any rate, about exactly what we can expect as a result of what has been proposed by the deputy chairman of the committee. Particularly, I want to find out what undertakings have been given by the government to make the changes.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It is a difficult technique.

Senator Roblin: I want to find out just when the revision of the statutes, which I believe was the mechanism referred to, will take effect.

In other words, my thought is that, if we had an undertaking that the machinery is sufficient to make the changes the committee wished for within a reasonable period of time and without prejudice to anybody else, other things being equal, that would be adequate. But I am not sure that that is the case.

In any event, just having received this report I would appreciate the opportunity of reading it closely. Perhaps I could then phrase my questions a little more carefully, and we might have some answers from the committee with respect to it. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the discussion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, is that procedurally the right way to do it? I think we should have the answers, but we are really not debating the report.

Senator Flynn: We gave the deputy chairman of the committee leave to make comments.

Senator Frith: I understand that. I do not wish in any way to suggest that we should not proceed with exactly the objectives raised by Senator Roblin. Technically, however, I do not think we should be debating this report. It would be better for His Honour the Acting Speaker to ask, "When shall this bill be read the third time?" and for us to say, "At the next sitting," and then have these questions debated on third reading. Otherwise, in effect, we are debating a report from the committee, and that is not in order.

Senator Flynn: When a bill is reported without amendment, of course, there is no debate. That is agreed. In this case, however, the deputy chairman, or should I say the deputy chairperson, has mentioned some comments in the report and has commented on those comments. We gave her leave to do that. Therefore, I suggest that comments from this side, or from anywhere else in the chamber, are warranted and should be accepted. There is no suggestion that the report not be accepted. We simply make comments, as did Senator Bird.

[Senator Bird.]

Senator Frith: I have no quarrel with the idea that because comments were made that gives rise to further comments, but the rules do provide that the report presented to the Senate be received without debate. I believe we can achieve the objective suggested by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition and by the Leader of the Opposition, with which I do not quarrel, simply by raising these questions on third reading. At that point we will have before us the second reading debate, the report itself, and the explanation of it for which leave was given, and there would then be nothing to restrict our discussion of the very matters we are talking about now, and we would not run against rule 78(2), which provides that a report presented to the Senate shall be received without debate. It is just a matter of doing it in a way that seems more orderly.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend may be quite right, but he should have made his comments before Senator Bird spoke, because if we give leave to the senator presenting the report to enter into what is in substance a debate it then becomes difficult to decide where the limitation ought to be. Surely, if a report is submitted to the Senate without debate, that means "without debate." Debate is any comment. If we allow comment, then, in effect, we have allowed debate.

I do not think it is important enough to detain the Senate for very long, but it seems to me that on this occasion it would be perhaps consistent to agree that the matter be discussed a little further in the present form rather than to adhere to the procedure recommended by my honourable friend. The time for him to have raised his objection was before Senator Bird was granted leave.

Senator Frith: That may be so. Perhaps any comment can be considered debate.

Senator Roblin: Not "considered;" it is debate.

Senator Frith: The problem I am raising—regardless of whether I ought to have raised it earlier—is that if we do proceed in this way we will be setting a precedent. Perhaps that is what we want to do. If a chairman ever wants to give any explanation, then that chairman, in effect, would be in breach of rule 78(2). He ought not to comment because, as Senator Roblin says, any comment is debate.

Senator Flynn: Leave was granted, however.

Senator Frith: I agree. Perhaps we should not ask for such leave. Perhaps a chairman should say that the committee reports the bill without amendment, but he would like to make comments on third reading. Perhaps that would be the best way of proceeding.

Certainly, I do not think it is the end of the world, but it just seemed to me that this was a better way of doing it. Perhaps I ought to have raised that point earlier, but I suggest that that is another way of doing it. I am not trying to thwart any discussion at this time.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I understand the view of the deputy leader and I do not particularly quarrel with it. However, as a chairman who has once or twice asked for the same leave as was granted to Senator Bird, I expected that, if the leave was granted and if I made any remarks, any honourable senator who wanted to amplify those remarks or criticize them would then have the right to do so, because it seemed to me that it would be unfair to let me explain my point without other honourable senators having the right of reply.

I simply raise this matter, not to argue but so that it will be on the record and so that we will not have accepted the view of the deputy leader without its being noted that there are other views.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am certainly grateful to Senator Smith for the opportunity to make it clear on the record that I was not suggesting that there not be full opportunity to do exactly what is being suggested. I was simply saying that it seemed to me that procedurally the best way of doing that would be to do it on third reading. However, I do not believe it is of such great moment, and if we can clarify it by saying, in effect, that leave was granted to suspend rule 78(2) and to have debate when the committee reported in this case, then the problem is solved and we need not say any more. We all agree that, the explanation having been given, the opposition, or any senator, for that matter, should have an opportunity to discuss and explore the explanation.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Let us be clear about this. As I understand it, before I call third reading tomorrow senators will be invited to comment on Senator Bird's explanation.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, may I express my understanding of the position in order to regularize it? It seems to me that leave has been granted, in effect, to begin debate on the subject. That is the effect of having given leave to Senator Bird to make her statement, which, personally, I appreciated hearing because I think it raised some very interesting points. However, in effect, we have granted leave to dispense with the rule of no debate. Having done that, it seems to follow, as far as I can make out, that if an honourable senator wants to adjourn the debate to another time the Senate might agree to such a course being adopted. That was my position when I endeavoured to move the adjournment of this debate. Of course, the Senate could refuse to allow its adjournment, although that is not likely, being the body it is; but if it did, I would have to accept it. Otherwise, I think you should accept my motion that this permitted debate be adjourned by me, and allow me to make a few comments, as well as anyone else who wishes to participate, on the next occasion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I made the suggestion and it has been declined. The motion has now been made and we will accept the motion.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES AS CAUSES OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "Child at Risk", tabled in the Senate on 16th October, 1980.—(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, Senator Bonnell has asked that this order stand until Wednesday, March 31.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 17, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS—CESSATION OF RINGING OF DIVISION BELL

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have any documents to table, but I understand all is quiet on the western front. I am sure we all welcome that.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If you want the front to be quiet on this side, I will show you that it can be very quiet.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, may I for just a moment impose on your generosity and take advantage of today's being March 17, which is an important date in my part of the world. I wish to share the good feeling and good fellowship that people of Irish descent have towards each and every one of you on this day.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: There are some of us who have the double advantage of having Gallic and Celtic blood mixed together in our veins, like Senator Flynn, and sometimes they get more exercised than even the most adamant of us Irish. Nevertheless, to all of you who share the Irish blood that I have, and to all the rest of you who wish you did, I offer "the top o' the mornin'."

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, like Senator Doody, I sense a rare feeling of Christian tenderness, warmth and charity among all of us in this chamber. Of course, it is because we are celebrating the day of the Apostle of Ireland—St. Patrick's Day.

Senator Doody: You don't look Irish!

Senator Thompson: On such an occasion as this, it could happen that someone in this chamber might interject and ask why on earth I am talking about St. Patrick; but I suggest that such a person resist that temptation. I notice that my good friend, Senator Riley, is not in the chamber. He knows the perils I have faced in New Brunswick when I have talked of the origins of St. Patrick. If I did expand on his origins here, I would be glad if Senator Bosa was not present, because he could surely be claiming other virtues for his ancestry.

I wish to say, however, that my credentials are good, despite what some honourable senators may think or what the Immigration Department may have thought, because my mother was born in Dublin.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Thompson: I am inclined to exaggerate a wee bit and say that she "wheeled her wheelbarrow through streets broad and narrow," but I do not think I can go that far. My father was born in the north, in the misty green valleys. I have an idea that I was born on the border, although my birth certificate does not say so—but I think I will stick to that. I was actually born somewhere near Ballyutogue.

I visited my native land several years ago and felt as much at home in Dublin as I did in the north. I only wish that the people of Ireland could feel as much at home as I did in every corner of their native land.

On this day the thoughts and hearts of Irish men and women all over the world are attuned to the haunting music of Ireland, as gentle and as pure as the lovely lush green carpets that sweep down from the mountains. From the lilt of their speech to their songs which express joy and sorrow—it is all part of my homeland. We are hoping that honourable senators will share that spirit, and any other spirits they may feel inclined to share, today.

Dr. Johnson once said that the Irish are a fair people—they never speak well of each other. I would dispute that. I shall therefore not dwell on the fanatics who defame and shame the true patriotism of Ireland by their obscene distortions about medieval religious hatred, and their grotesque violence and brutality in their attempt to espouse the cause of peace and tranquility in Ireland. I shall not talk of them. I could talk of their positive accomplishments in so many areas, but I will just focus, in view of this being the eve of patriation, on the Fathers of Confederation: seven out of the 35 from the "Auld Sod".

● (1410)

I would like to leave with you the message of St. Patrick, a message of compassion and charity, which I hope will spread to Ireland, as well as all across this land of ours. It was a message of peace and mercy, delivered by St. Patrick in the Dark Ages. I hope that in my homeland, both north and south, both orange and green, that path to peace and charity will be found.

Though ye can't be "near"
And ye must be "far",
May the luck o' St. Pat
Be where ye are.

ENERGY

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM—COMPLAINTS OF CANADIAN PRODUCERS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I cannot let this item go by without asking a question of my honourable friend, the Minister of State for Economic Development, who is so gracious in his replies to the questions I ask in my search for knowledge.

I wonder if the minister could explain to me why the oil import compensation program is subsidizing certain foreign heavy crude oil imports into Canada, at the rate of some $9 to $12 per barrel, to the detriment of producers of that commodity within the country, who are complaining that because of that subsidy they have been forced to shut down some of their supply points for this type of crude oil.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Well, honourable senators, there is far more to it than that, although I will try to answer that part of the question briefly now and get more specific detail later as to the amounts of the import compensation, as well as the time frame in which they apply.

We recognize that there are some improvements that ought to be made in the regime set out in this program. The oil import compensation payments for a certain quality and grade of oil are set for x number of days, and if there are price fluctuations along the way you obviously get distortions. We know that there have been price fluctuations, almost all downwards.

There is, however, a little more to it than that, as I say, and that is that we are in the process of getting through the arrangements that obviously had to be made when one of the major oil producing provinces decided to restrict the flow of oil into the consuming area of Canada in the amount of something like 180,000 barrels a day at the peak, although I am advised that there were some days when the restriction was even higher than that. Of course, the refiners had to make alternate arrangements to have crude or fuel oil supplied to them. Though some of the refiners had contracts, some of their supplies were in the form of spot oil. There were, however, contracts, for that period of time, that seemed reasonable under the circumstances. Those contracts are not nearly exhausted yet.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I would ask the minister if he would look a little further into the matter for me on this particular point, namely, that Canada has had a surplus of heavy oil. We have, in fact, been exporting heavy oil all through this period to the United States, so I do not really understand, on the face of it, why we would be importing heavy oil at a subsidy of $9 to $12 a barrel, as compared to the cost available to Canadian producers for a similar commodity. I recognize that there are several complications here that the minister might deal with when he answers, such as the question of transportation, for example, with oil coming to eastern Canada from the production sites in the west, and so forth. He may be able to deal with that point.

I would also ask the minister whether the heavy oil situation with respect to imports is related to contracts with foreign suppliers, such as Mexico, or whether we have had to take so much heavy crude in order to get other supplies? I appreciate that it is a complicated matter. I am sure that the minister could deal with those various points in order to clarify it for me.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will try to do just that. My honourable friend will have to take into account that many of these arrangements were made when there was a very different set of circumstances surrounding the availability of crude oil supplies, whether they took the form of light oil or larger quantities of heavier oil. Another complicating factor is that some oil refiners are not able to accommodate a wide variety of grades of crude oil unless they make some modification to the refining process, which involves added costs.

I will try to provide a more detailed answer. I would simply ask the indulgence of my friend, because I know that he is a very fair-minded person. The arrangements that were made may not appear to be the most sensible, in the light of the circumstances today when oil is, first of all, at a lower price and there is an availability of almost all grades and qualities. I would ask him to keep in mind that that was not the case when some of the contracts were made.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Would he not think that, when these negotiations were taking place, the possibility of the change in the situation that he has just described should have been foreseen?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have always believed that the Liberals' foresight is as good as the Conservatives' hindsight.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is why you make mistakes.

Senator Olson: We do not usually score exactly 20-20 both ways.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CENTRE BLOCK—INSTALLATION OF STEEL DOORS IN CORRIDORS

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and has to do with the unsightly, unattractive metal and glass partitions that are being installed in the beautiful marbled corridors of this building.

There are two parts to my question. First, can the Leader of the Government tell me upon whose authority these unsightly additions to our corridors are being installed?

Secondly, what is the purpose of their installation?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. The reason for the installation of the partitions may have something to do with security, the maintenance of heat values, or fire protection. I do not, however, have all of the explanation this afternoon.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I would only observe that the building has been here for more than 60 years. It seems a shame that we are getting around to defiling the corridors now, when we have managed quite well with the beautiful, unobstructed marble corridors since the building was erected some 65 years ago.

TRANSPORT

CP AIR—DISCOUNT FARES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission has ordered CP Air not to implement no-frills discount fares on all of its domestic flights. The matter was to be studied further and a decision was to be reached by March 19.

I wonder whether the Leader of the Government could ascertain, through the Canadian Transport Commission, whether the decision has been made? Could he also find out why consumers are being denied the right to discount fares? I want to know why, when the major airlines are having to lay off their employees at a time of such high unemployment, they are being denied the opportunity to give to the consumers cheaper air fares? The Canadian Transport Commission, which has nothing better to do, is denying them that right. I want to know the reason for that.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall be pleased to take the question as notice.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—OFFSHORE OIL RESOURCES—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to a statement made by the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland concerning the offshore oil discussions. Apparently, when he called the election, the Premier of Newfoundland tabled a document in which selected quotations from a federal document were included in the Newfoundland material but were not made public. Could that federal document be made public for the sake of public knowledge in the province?

[Senator Hicks.]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice. I was of the personal view that that document had already been made public. However, I will check into the situation.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the minister of state in charge of regional economic development. Within recent days it has been reported by Statistics Canada that 1,116,000 people are out of work in Canada. I am not speaking of statistics basically, but of people, human beings.

How many more hundreds of thousands of people will have to lose their jobs before the government does something—I mean really does something? What hope, may I ask the honourable gentleman, is the government offering all of these people that work might soon be available?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the government is doing a number of things now. One of them is that we are attempting to make a major contribution to the reduction of inflation in this country, along with our trading partners in the western world. Following that, interest rates and the cost of investments can come down. We believe that when that happens there will be an encouragement to make substantially increased investments in the expansion of the economy in this country. That, of course, will involve for a great many people the jobs that are so badly needed in this country now.

Senator Muir: I should like to pose a supplementary question. I listened intently to the minister's response, but what he is suggesting will really do hardly anything for the million or a million-and-a-half—and those figures are no exaggeration—who are out of work at the moment.

I might say, to enlighten the minister for my next question, that since September the labour force has shrunk by 155,000 people. To them you can add the 95,000 people officially classed as "discouraged workers," people who have apparently just given up and no longer look for work. I believe they don't look for work any more because they are convinced that because of the policies of this government they will not find it.

I do not cast any reflection on the men and women who work in the Canada Manpower centres, because they are doing their utmost for the unemployed in this country. I am sure that if either the minister or I were behind Canada Manpower counters in areas of the Atlantic region and Quebec—and, indeed, as I mentioned the other day, in what used to be "fat Ontario,"—we would have nothing to give them either.

We have heard announcements about training. The minister in charge of the economy made some statements the other day in that respect. That is important, yes, but it will not help anyone for months or maybe even years.

What the minister has answered today in response to my first question is also important, but it bears on the future. May

I ask the minister now what the government will do now to put Canadians back to work now? I am not asking about the long-term future. I am concerned about what can be done now for those who are really suffering and even starving in some cases—and I can give him evidence of that. When I was in Nova Scotia over the past weekend, just in the small area where I live, I received 32 approaches from people looking for employment—men and women. There were telephone calls, personal meetings and letters. I should like to know what is going to be done now.

● (1425)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I could give a rather detailed explanation to Senator Muir were this the hour of debate, and I had 30 or 40 minutes to expand on what I said briefly a few minutes ago. I am sure that my honourable friend would like Canadians to be involved in worthwhile, productive jobs which give them an income, but to have worthwhile, productive jobs, there must be a market for whatever it is that is being produced and competitive prices. As my honourable friend knows, both the international market and the domestic market have sunk rather substantially recently because of high interest rates, the cost of investment, the cost of inventory and of purchasing goods and materials that is driven up by inflation.

We believe that we must attack some of the fundamental causes of this problem, simply because we do not believe that we can go from one level of inflation to a higher level of inflation constantly without suffering the consequences of the various cost factors that come up time and again in that scenario. One of the things we are trying to do to solve the problem is reduce the federal deficit. We are also asking Canadians everywhere to join with members of Parliament, indeed, with the government, to help correct some of these fundamental flaws or difficulties in the system.

Of course, there is the alternative of simply making work whether or not it is useful, ongoing work that is viable, competitive and contributes to the economy and to the socio-economic structure. I could bring in a rather long list of some of the things that the government is trying to do on an emergency basis and as temporary substitutes to the corrections over the long term.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, those are nice words, but they are very cold words for those who cannot purchase their groceries or meet their mortgage payments. The honourable senator in his response spoke about make-work projects as a bad alternative. I wonder why it has taken him so long to reach that conclusion when members of my party and I—getting down to the ordinary Joe in the other place—have often said the very same thing many times. It is not good enough to take people off unemployment insurance, give them a few weeks of work counting seagulls or something, and then put them back on unemployment insurance, though it makes the unemployment figures look good for a time. I hope there will be something more concrete forthcoming very shortly and that the honourable senator will realize that it is not an easy job.

Canada is facing something that the United States also faces, but I suggest that we not follow “Reaganomics” to such an extent that people must suffer. There are productive jobs that are good for the country. I hope the minister will look into that area.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not think that I could have made that speech better myself. I have heard Senator Muir make it for at least the past 15 or 20 years while he and I were in the House of Commons. He used to bring out that speech once a week.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I resent the response of the honourable gentleman and I do not believe that it is worthy of him. What he is suggesting is that this is a game we are playing, and that we haul out a speech which we throw at each other once in a while. I do not have such a speech. I am merely speaking from what I know to be the case in Nova Scotia, where I come from, and all across the country.

To those who read Debates of the Senate and, for that matter, House of Commons Debates—and I am sure there are not very many—it comes out sounding like this: “Muir will have a little say and then Olson will have a little say and then they will go on their merry way forgetting entirely about the unemployed.” That is not right. I do not believe that the honourable senator believes that and, certainly, I do not believe it. I believe that the government of the day, no matter what party is in power, should be busy with this matter. Although we were not in power very often, I know that while in the other place I spoke against and voted against any government when I did not think it was doing the right thing. I speak in the same way today, and I do not have a stock speech for any subject.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not understand why my honourable friend should take umbrage at what I said when I agreed with him that it was a good presentation.

I would remind him that, when both he and I sat in opposition in the other place for many years, we made the same speech a dozen times. I failed to say, but perhaps I should now say for his sake, that we made it equally seriously every time.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—ROLE OF MINISTER OF STATE

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, my question is for Senator Austin. Some time ago questions were asked about the Canada Development Corporation and the honourable senator's role on the board of directors as the representative of the taxpayers who hold 48.5 per cent of the shares. Senator Austin was concerned about the propriety of answering those questions. Has he now consulted with the various oracles involved, and can he now report to us on the propriety of answering such questions?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State): Honourable senators, I have considered the matter and am satisfied that it would not be proper for me to comment, on a day-to-day basis, on the business of the Canada Development Corporation. I believe that would be an assertion of an authority which is properly that of the board of directors.

Senator Doody: The senator is saying that it would not be proper for him to report to the Senate on the activities of the corporation, although he represents the Canadian taxpayers who hold 48.5 per cent of the shares. Is there something improper about the activities of the CDC that would cause the honourable senator to be so reluctant to describe its activities to us?

Senator Austin: Senator Doody well knows that the Canada Development Corporation is not a crown corporation and is not an agent of Her Majesty. It is a corporation in the private sector, and my role is that of shareholder. My role is not, in any way, that of a director who decides on the day-to-day activities of the corporation. The principle I have stated would apply if Her Majesty owned shares in the Hudson's Bay Company, Dome Petroleum, Noranda Mines, or any other private Canadian company.

If questions directed to me are relevant to the role of the Government of Canada as shareholder, I will be pleased to respond, but I cannot comment on the day-to-day conduct of the business of the Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Doody: If the honourable senator would refer to Hansard, he would see that he was not asked to comment on the day-to-day activities of the corporation; he was asked to comment on one specific purchase by the CDC of Savin Inc. The question dealt with the purchase of a rather large American organization which, in my opinion, was not going to help the Canadian economy or the Canadian shareholders. The honourable senator represents 48.5 per cent of the shareholders and we, as Canadian taxpayers, are those shareholders.

If the activities of the Hudson's Bay Company and Dome Petroleum were as weird-looking as the activities of the CDC in regard to the Savin purchase, and if the honourable senator were representing 48.5 per cent of the shareholders of those companies, I think he would be called upon to account to, and discuss it with, the shareholders.

As a Canadian taxpayer and as a member of the Senate, I ask the honourable senator to describe exactly what the objectives were in regard to the acquisition of Savin by the CDC.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I think the issue between us is clear, and I thank the honourable senator for his question, inasmuch as it makes it clear.

I will not comment upon the wisdom of the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation in making any purchase it might make. I will answer questions as to whether the purchase of Savin is within the objectives and powers of the board of directors of that corporation. I can certainly tell honourable senators that it does fall within the authority and powers of the board of directors of the CDC to acquire Savin Inc.

[Senator Doody.]

It must be made very clear indeed that if I were to respond to questions about the specific assets of the Canada Development Corporation, I would be commenting on the day-to-day conduct of the business of that corporation. I do not believe that members of this chamber would like to see me assert any kind of authority over the day-to-day business of the Canada Development Corporation.

• (1435)

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if I may impose on your good will for just another moment, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Whether or not the members of this chamber would like to have the honourable senator report on the activities of the CDC is not the matter that I am concerned with. What I am concerned with is the consistency of the objectives of the CDC—and the minister has just said that he would be quite willing to report to this chamber on that—in their purchase of Savin, which is a United States copier firm, wholly operating within the United States of America, which adds nothing to the Canadian economy, to the Canadian employment scene, or to the objectives of the Canadian government, as I understand it.

I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as he was then called, described some of the objectives of the CDC, and they do not seem to be consistent with the purchase of Savin. Can the minister report on the consistency of the objectives as described by Mr. Gray?

Senator Austin: In my responsibility as a shareholder of the Canada Development Corporation, what I am prepared to do is advise this chamber with respect to an activity of that corporation, that activity being within the objectives and the powers of the board of directors. The purchase of Savin is within the objectives and powers of the board of directors.

Whether that was a wise business purchase is a matter for the board of directors to determine. I suppose that if I, as a shareholder, believe that the board of directors is not making good business decisions, I could recommend to the government that we sell our shares and not go along with the risks which the board of directors finds acceptable.

I am not prepared, as I have stated, to sit in public judgment on the discretion of the board of directors to run the business of the Canada Development Corporation.

I might simply add that the board of directors has itself explained to its shareholders the purchase of Savin. That was done in a press release issued by the chairman of the board of directors. That purchase was explained as a business judgment and, as the honourable senator knows and as I am sure other honourable senators know, the Canada Development Corporation is a private-sector corporation with the principal purpose of making a profit within the context of its shareholdings being restricted to Canadian investors. I am sure that the board of directors believed that it was being consistent in developing the profit potential of the Canada Development Corporation when it made that purchase.

If my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has a view of any Canadian corporate activity conforming or not conforming with some postulate of public policy, then he will express that in the context of a business development environment, but that, as Senator Doody knows, is not my role in representing the shareholders of the Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Doody: I think the honourable senator has raised several new areas for discussion and has entered into several new areas worthy of more exposure. One of those areas is the business judgment exercised by the board of directors.

Whether this corporation is a crown corporation, by definition, or whether it is a crown corporation in terms of the crown participation of 48.5 per cent is really academic. The actual fact of the matter is that 48.5 per cent of the corporation is owned by Canadian taxpayers. I think that is the gist of the matter.

Bearing that in mind, is there not some responsibility for a major shareholder of that corporation to ensure that the business objectives of that corporation are carried out? The business decisions taken by the board of directors surely must be consistent with the Canadianization objectives of the Government of Canada, or else they are on a divergent path which will create havoc. If the Government of Canada can spend billions of dollars on a Canadianization effort on the one side, and then allow the Canada Development Corporation, without murmur or discord from its board of directors, to go down another path and help the American investment community, then there seems to be a great deal of divergence being allowed. The board of directors may very well report to their shareholders in a press release, but I am asking the representative of 48.5 per cent of the shareholders to tell us if, indeed, the objectives of the CDC are consistent with the objectives of the Government of Canada in terms of the Canadianization policy.

● (1440)

Senator Austin: Is the honourable senator presenting his personal views in the question that he poses to me?

Senator Doody: I always do.

Senator Austin: Then the honourable senator is in disagreement again with Senator Smith—and I suppose that is not remarkable—with respect to the nature of the government's role as an investor in a private sector corporation. Senator Smith, in his line of questioning, urged me not to intervene in any way or to comment on the conduct of the business of the Canada Development Corporation by the board of directors. But I say that it is not my business, as representative of those shareholdings, to comment on the day-to-day business conducted by the board of directors. It is my business to ensure that the board of directors conducts its business in accordance with its authority under the Canada Development Corporation Act.

Senator Doody: I do not think I am getting through at all. I am not really asking Senator Austin whether or not he should intervene in decisions made by the board of directors. Obviously, ly, a 48.5 per cent shareholder not only has the right but also the duty to intervene in decisions made by the board of directors. Otherwise, why is he on the board?

Apart from that, I am asking him to explain to us, or to me in particular—because, as the senator has pointed out, these are my personal views, and that is why I was appointed or asked to come here—I am asking him to explain to me the consistency between the expressed policies of the Government of Canada in terms of Canadianization—the purchase of Petro-Canada, the pouring of billions of dollars of Canadian money overseas, the devaluation of the Canadian dollar as a result, the impact on the economy, the interest rates and all of the things which flow from it—and the policy governing CDC's purchase of this American company. I am simply asking the senator for his opinion as a director, or as a senator, or as a member of cabinet.

Senator Austin: I will try to answer it in this way: Under the Canada Development Corporation Act, that corporation is not made an instrument of government policy on a continuing basis. It is made an instrument of a specific policy, and that policy is declared in the statute, namely, to put the corporation in the private sector, to give it a profit motive, to be at the direction of the board of directors, and to restrict its share ownership to Canadian investors.

To repeat what I have said, the Canada Development Corporation is not an instrument of current government policy or government guidance. Its business judgments are made by its board of directors in terms of where they see opportunities within the Canadian business environment. As Senator Doody will be aware, investments have been made outside Canada where, in the opinion of the board of directors, they enhance Canadian business opportunities of the Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Doody: Is the honourable senator then telling us that a 48.5 per cent shareholding of the people of Canada is not being directed at all by Canadian government policy and, if that is so, why do we have a cabinet minister on the board of directors?

Senator Austin: The statute requires a minister of the Crown to hold shares in the Canada Development Corporation. Therefore, we have a minister holding those shares—who happens to be me. As far as the policy of the corporation is concerned, it is embodied in the statute itself. If Senator Doody wishes to quarrel with the statute, that is his privilege.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, there are many statutes of this great country of ours that I should like to quarrel with, and that certainly is not the most important of them. What I am saying is that we now have a minister of the Crown, who represents the taxpayers of Canada on the board of directors, who is telling us that his only purpose in being there is as a token gesture because somebody has to hold the shares. Is that correct?

Senator Austin: I am glad that Senator Doody has given me this opportunity to respond. I do not consider my holding of the shares to be a token holding. I have said, in answer to questions from yourself, Senator Nurgitz, Senator Smith and Senator Roblin, that I have an important legal responsibility, but I do not have a responsibility to intervene in the day-to-day conduct of the business of the Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to pursue this matter further because it is a fascinating topic, but since it is March 17 I cannot find it in my heart to go any further.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I will act as Senator Doody's proxy because I should like to go into it a little further.

The minister has completely puzzled me by his series of answers with respect to his responsibilities. The other day he became a privy councillor; he was appointed to the cabinet. The justification, among other things, for that interesting appointment was the fact that he was to have special responsibilities for the Canada Development Corporation. I believe that is the expression that was used.

I think what we are trying to find out from the minister is what those special responsibilities are. He tells us that the Canada Development Corporation is not an instrument of government policy. That comes as a bit of a surprise to me because this corporation was called into being, if my memory serves me correctly, as a result of suggestions made by the Honourable Walter Gordon that we should proceed to Canadianization of certain aspects of our economy. That is why the Canada Development Corporation was brought into being—as a measure of government policy. Since when has it been turned loose to become a private corporation with no responsibilities of that kind? If it is not an instrument of government policy, I should like to know exactly what the special responsibilities of the minister are with respect to this corporation. Is he a director? Perhaps I could get a response to that question before continuing.

Senator Austin: No, I am not a director.

Senator Roblin: If he is not a director but he has special responsibilities, I presume they involve attending shareholders' meetings. Are there other responsibilities? Does he attend other meetings? What other shareholders have the right to do anything else but attend shareholders' meetings in connection with companies?

If he can, I should like my honourable friend to explain to me just what his function is, because that, I think, is the root of the problem that is distressing Senator Doody, and I must say it has confused me over the past little while, and I should like my honourable friend to enlighten me.

Senator Austin: The Canada Development Corporation is a reflection of policy contained in an act of Parliament—the Canada Development Corporation Act—and the policy of Parliament is expressed in that act, and it includes, in summary, that this corporation will not be an agent of Her Majesty; that this corporation will operate in the private sector; that this corporation will operate for the benefit of its investors; and that private Canadian citizens shall be investors in this corporation—indeed, I have told this chamber that there are some 50,000 Canadians who are investors in the Canada Development Corporation—

Hon. Martial Asselin: So what are you doing there?

Senator Austin:—and who hold approximately half of the shares—that a minister of the Crown will hold the government's interest in the shares; that a minister of the Crown will be represented on the board of directors by the Deputy Minister of Finance, or alternate, and by the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or alternate, who are ex officio directors—they do not vote but are entitled to be present at directors' meetings—and so the statute goes.

The result is that the statute has created the Canada Development Corporation as a private corporation operating in the private sector of Canada. It is not a corporation which entitles a minister of the Crown to direct its affairs in any way, shape or form. It is true that the shareholder representing the government's investment has an unqualified right to vote the government's shares at an annual meeting. At all times the government has exercised its right as a shareholder to vote at an annual meeting in support of the management information circular. That is not legally required nor is it necessary that it always be done. The government is entitled to vote using its best judgment with respect to the conduct of the affairs of the Canada Development Corporation.

I am sure that Senator Roblin, Senator Doody and other honourable senators can quickly look up the statute and make themselves more specifically familiar with it, should they choose to do so.

● (1450)

Senator Asselin: What are you doing there?

Senator Roblin: The minister, in replying on another occasion to questions on this subject, went far beyond the statement he has given us today. If I understand his statement today correctly, he is telling me that he is acting as a person who holds shares, attends shareholders' meetings, and votes thereat. That is all right; I understand that. But he has been given a special role by the Prime Minister, a special responsibility for this corporation, and I am trying to find out what that special responsibility is. The minister told us the other day that he has met not only with the directors but also with the management of this company, but he refuses to report to us with respect to the decisions management has made. I want him to rationalize his position, if he can, and tell us exactly what his special responsibilities are, and what authority he has to do the things he is doing. If he says that this is a private corporation, that it is not a crown corporation, that it is not an instrument of government policy, what makes him think that he, as a shareholder, no matter how big a shareholder, has the right to have special access to the directors and the staff of this company? There must be something more to it than what he is telling us, and I am asking him to tell us what that something is.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have the same authority, as a shareholder of Canada Development Corporation, as the Minister of Finance held prior to me, no more and no less, and there are no words in the order in council that enhance the authority which the minister of the Crown, as a shareholder, has under the statute.

Concerning my access as shareholder to the board of directors and the management of CDC, I have it only in the same way as any shareholder or other person has access to that corporation. Yes, I have held discussions with the chairman of the board and with the president and chief executive officer, at their request and mine, in order to familiarize myself with the business affairs of the company. I have received no objection from anyone to that usual form of procedure, and I doubt that Senator Roblin is telling me that I should bar myself from discussions with the board of directors or with the president and chief executive officer.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, the impression that my honourable friend leaves with me is that he is trying to persuade me that he had nothing to do with the policy of the company; yet, if he has been talking to the directors, I would ask him point blank whether he has discussed matters of policy with them, because no other shareholder would have the influence that he has. He is trying to tell us that he has no new powers, but what right has he to intervene in matters of policy, if he has done so? And I am asking whether he has.

Senator Austin: I have not in any way interfered with the business conduct of Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Roblin: Has the minister advised on matters of policy?

Senator Austin: I have not advised on any specific business matters.

Senator Roblin: Has the minister been consulted on matters of policy by the board of directors?

Senator Austin: I have not had any discussions of any kind on matters of business policy with the board of directors or the president and chief executive officer, aside from information that would enable me to properly support my knowledge of the values and debt structure of Canada Development Corporation.

Senator Roblin: If that is right, then so much for "special responsibilities for the Canada Development Corporation." It is nothing but a sham.

Senator Austin: I thank the honourable senator, but his judgment will not be guiding me in any way.

Senator Roblin: If it did, it would benefit my honourable friend considerably.

Senator Austin: That is a matter of opinion.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

MANPOWER TRAINING AND JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

On March 11 the Leader of the Government announced in this chamber the federal government's manpower training and job creation expenditures for the next five years. In particular, he stated that continuing shortages of some 9,000 skilled workers were predicted each year for the next five years. Can the minister tell us what policy he has prepared to meet the shortage of 9,000 skilled workers in 1982?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, there is no policy in effect at present that would adequately meet all of the specific technical skills required for 1982.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. Did the minister consider bringing in immigrants possessing the required skills from various countries to fill this shortage? I refer particularly to refugees from Poland who are now in Eastern Europe, particularly in Vienna. Other countries, such as Australia and South Africa are now in Vienna selecting skilled labour for their own industries.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is responding to that; but, as my honourable friend knows, there are a number of other considerations which have to be taken into account when considering immigration, one of them being that Canada, in responding to the needs of those refugees, is probably doing far more on a per capita basis and as a nation than any other country in the world.

LEGISLATION

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT BILLS IN SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Donahoe on March 3, 1982, concerning the number of bills introduced in the Senate since the Christmas recess.

Since the Christmas recess there has been one Senate bill introduced in this chamber, namely, Bill S-24, the Canada-Germany Tax Agreement Bill, 1982. In addition, there have been three bills received from the other place and dealt with in the Senate. They are: Bill C-45, to amend the Pest Control Products Act; Bill C-11, the Electricity and Gas Inspection Bill, which technically received first reading on December 18, the last day the Senate sat before Christmas; and Bill C-78, the Labour Adjustment Benefits Bill.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That has nothing to do with the question.

Senator Frith: Does the Leader of the Opposition wish me to give additional information?

Senator Flynn: You are only filling in time. The short answer is "one".

Senator Frith: Do I have the floor?

Honourable senators, the short answer is one—but I am not giving the short answer.

An Hon. Senator: Bravo!

Senator Frith: Also, it must be noted that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is conducting a pre-study of Bill C-90, the Customs Tariff Bill.

Senator Flynn: That has nothing to do with the question.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we hope to receive more legislation in the near future. However, as I mentioned before, most of the bills that the government has ready for introduction in Parliament are money bills which must be first introduced in the other place.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Haidasz on March 11, 1982, concerning possible U.S. weapons testing in Canada.

Discussions are presently under way to reach agreement with the United States on weapons testing in Canada. Our role will be to provide the facilities to enable such testing to take place. However, since an agreement has not yet been concluded, it is difficult to say what the final package will consist of.

There will be no cost to Canada as a condition of the agreement. The project is considered to be fully cost-recoverable with no out-of-pocket expenses to be incurred.

EDUCATION

COMMITTEE TO STUDY GOVERNMENT POLICY ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Tremblay on February 10, 1982, concerning the Secretary of State Working Group on Federal Support for Post-Secondary Education.

During 1981, the government concluded that it would be desirable to review the mechanisms and objectives of its support for post-secondary education in Canada. Of particular concern were questions of accountability to Parliament for the funds provided to provinces and the extent to which this support was serving national objectives in the field of post-secondary education. Such objectives were enunciated by the Secretary of State in his remarks to the Parliamentary Committee on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements in June 1981.

In order to assist in the process of review, an internal working group of officials was formed within the Education Support Programs Branch of the Department of Secretary of State. This group, which commenced work in September 1981, is led by Peter Hicks from the Temporary Assignment Pool of the Treasury Board Secretariat and includes both regular staff of the Secretary of State and others brought in for their expertise from Statistics Canada. Of the seven officers working full-time as members of the group, two are francophone and several others are officially bilingual.

[Senator Frith.]

The task of the working group is to develop data on issues related to federal support for post-secondary education and to identify policy and programs options for consideration by the federal government. Present plans are for the group to be disbanded in the fairly near future, once its basic work has been completed, and for continuing requirements in this area to be met as a regular part of the responsibilities of the Education Support Programs Branch.

● (1500)

The formation of this working group is regarded as a normal response to a need on the part of the government for a relatively short, intensive study of a particular area of policy. Contrary to the impression created by the article in Le Devoir of February 10, 1982, it does not represent "un appareil d'intervention dans le domaine de l'enseignement supérieur".

With respect to the transmission to provinces of the offer made by the Prime Minister at the first ministers' conference in early February, I have a statement of concessionary position which was sent by the Secretary of State to provincial education ministers. A copy of this text had previously been sent by telex by the Under Secretary of State to the provincial deputy education ministers. It is somewhat lengthy, and for the information of honourable senators I would ask that it be printed as an appendix to Debates of the Senate of this day.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of statement see appendix, p. 3851.)

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science on Bill C-78, intituled: "An Act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code".

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity that was given to me to look this matter over during the adjournment. I hasten to say that I consider that the committee has done a very careful job in cleaning up the language of the statute. We sometimes fall far short of the mark, I think, with regard to the language of statutes these days, and it is good that the committee took this interest in the matter.

I was curious to see the proposal that, instead of making amendments to the statute now, we have them included in the next revision of the Statutes of Canada. The argument is that since the proposed changes do not affect the substance of the bill, but simply deal with matters of draftsmanship, this would be an acceptable course to follow. That may well be the case, but perhaps the Honourable Senator Bird could tell the Senate, if she will, what the date is for the next revision of the Statutes of Canada. My off-hand guess is that such revisions are rather rare events. I do not think they are done annually, for example, although they may be.

Hon. Florence B. Bird: Honourable senators, the Statute Revision Commission is sitting at the present time. It is made up of three members of the Department of Justice. They are going through the statutes. Of course, I do not know when the amendments we are proposing will be dealt with, but it would seem to me obvious that a recommendation by a Senate committee would not be ignored.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): May I speak to that, honourable senators?

I think we have to know whether we are talking about the regular statutory revisions, which normally take place only every ten years, or whether we are referring to those statutes that, as we know, we receive every once in a while, containing what are referred to as non-controversial amendments. These are interim clean-up projects and, as I understand it, the present bill falls into this latter category. Presumably, we may expect to see these amendments embodied in one of these omnibus bills—if you will pardon the expression—as soon as the committee that deals with such matters sees them.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, the last revision of the Statutes of Canada was more than ten years ago, so a new consolidation and revision is already past due.

Senator Bird: Honourable senators, I understand that the Statute Revision Commission was set up in 1974. It is currently sitting and working on statutes. Instead of recommending the one that Senator Hicks mentioned, we did not do so because this other one is now sitting.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will not labour the point, but I would be interested in knowing for sure which particular revision we are dealing with, because my clear recollection is that the general revision is a very some-time thing—every heaven-knows-how-many years. It is true that other amendments come through, as my honourable friend the Deputy Leader of the Government has said, that bring in changes of a non-controversial nature, which I think probably come along first. All I am saying is that I hope we will be able to arrange for this matter to be attended to in the near future. Apart from this, I have no objection to what I see in front of me.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on this point I am not entirely in agreement with the conciliatory attitude of my good friend Senator Roblin.

Because this matter is non-controversial, I do not see why we cannot send the amendments to the other place. They could deal with it in no time. My honourable friend mentioned that the annual bill dealing with non-controversial matters arises from the initiative of the Department of Justice with, of course, the co-operation of the other departments involved; but here we have the initiative of a committee of the Senate—indeed, of the Senate itself. It seems to me, therefore, that to send these recommendations to the department to be included in that annual bill is certainly not in keeping with our responsibilities in the job we have to do. We should not hesitate, especially when the matter is non-controversial, to send a bill back to the House of Commons and tell them that we think that certain amendments should be made. When I say “non-controversial”, I hasten to add that even if this were controversial we should not hesitate to do our job properly. I certainly resent the idea that because we do not dare ask the House of Commons to accept amendments from the Senate, we should go by the back door, namely, through this annual bill, or through the revision of statutes which takes place only every ten years.

Senator Bird: Honourable senators, I think the committee was unanimously in agreement—

Senator Flynn: I am not accusing you.

Senator Bird:—that the bill could not be held up any longer. It has been in the hopper for nine months, and in the meantime these poor people who have been fired are not getting the money they should be getting. We felt very strongly that, in all conscience, in view of what has been happening in the other place of late, since not very much legislation has been passed there, it would be wrong, inconsiderate and almost cruel to deprive these people of this money any longer. This is one of the reasons we drew up the report in that way. We feel we have done our duty by drawing this matter to the attention of the Statute Revision Commission, and I hope the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition will understand that we were trying to do what the Senate should be doing, which is to see that legislation is carried out.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am not being critical of the chairperson of the committee at all. I can understand how these things happen. It seems to me, however, that if these points are non-controversial we should be able to get the co-operation of the other place and have the bill passed in a few days. Perhaps last week, because of the ringing of the division bell in the other place, there was a possibility that the legislation would be delayed; but normally I think we should be, let us say, optimistic enough to think that the House of Commons will agree to adopt quickly amendments of this kind. If we do not do that, the House of Commons will always consider everything that comes from the Senate as being in opposition to its superiority, or something like that, and I do not like that attitude.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of Senator Bird? The custom in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, at least, is that when these kinds of things come up, and we do not want to have the legislation delayed, we obtain an undertaking from the minister concerned that these non-controversial amendments will be included in other legislation as soon as possible. Was any such undertaking obtained by the committee in this case?

Senator Bird: No.

Senator Frith: The report stands adopted, because the bill was reported without amendment, so we can now ask for third reading.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Neiman, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 10, debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces," tabled in the Senate on February 10, 1982.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, although I was an artillery officer—a gunner—for some five years during World War II, I do not normally regard myself as a person who is particularly oriented militaristically. Nevertheless, I have to say that I believe I derived more satisfaction from my participation in the work of the Subcommittee on National Defence than, perhaps, from any other single activity in which I have engaged since I came to the Senate. I think that the work done by the committee is extremely interesting. I think that the conclusions of the committee are important, and I hope that they will have some influence on the policies of the Government of Canada.

Before I make a few comments about the work of the subcommittee, I cannot help but refer to the late Senator A. H. McDonald, who, during all of the years we served together in this chamber, tried so hard to establish a committee which would concern itself with matters of national defence. I am certain that Senator McDonald would have been pleased, indeed, if he could have seen the formation of the subcommittee and could have had a look at the first report of that subcommittee.

I also want to congratulate and pay tribute to Senator Paul Lafond, who, with a great deal of skill, directed the work of this committee as its chairman. He worked in close co-operation with the officers and staff of the committee, who served it well.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear!

Senator Hicks: A number of recommendations were made by the committee. They occupy only three or four pages at the beginning of the report, and I hope that every honourable senator will read those recommendations and will acquaint himself or herself with them. By far the most important of them is recommendation No. 1, which recommends that a new white paper on national defence policy should be prepared. The last such white paper was prepared in 1971 and is, to say the least, substantially out of date in the light of our present circumstances.

Virtually all of the recommendations which are set out in this report underline the necessity for a new white paper. Our report, in itself, may not be able to justify all of the recommendations we made, because it is a relatively short report. We believe, however, that a new white paper, carefully prepared, as it should be, will verify and underline the validity of each and every one of the recommendations that were made by this committee. I am aware that white papers sometimes result in an inflexible attitude, or in the adoption of fairly inflexible policies, on the part of government. Nevertheless, we feel that a new white paper is long overdue.

I should like to call attention to one or two things contained in the report. Canada's involvement in NATO is graphically illustrated—and I use the term both literally and figuratively—on page 17 of the report. As a Canadian, I do not feel very pleased to see the black mark which indicates Canada's position as the lowest contributor, in relation to our gross national product, to the NATO Alliance. Our contribution is the least of any member of NATO, save only for the little country of Luxembourg. Canada contributes only 1.7 per cent of its gross national product towards defence efforts. I think we should look to our position and should try to improve it. I am glad that there is some evidence that the government is now attempting to do just that. The figures on that table range up to a high of 5.5 per cent of gross national product, which represents the contribution made by the United States. When we remember that our Russian friends—and I hope they are our friends—are spending between 14 and 15 per cent of their gross national product on national defence, we can see how out of balance the NATO alliance is. As well, we can see how unfortunately out of balance is Canada's contribution within NATO.

While talking about our involvement in NATO, I should also like to call attention to the Canadian air-sea transportable force which is committed for use in northern Norway. This force, which is usually referred to as CAST, is to be transported to northern Norway to assist our Norwegian friends in the event of an invasion of that country by the Warsaw Pact powers. It seems to me—and I am not speaking for the committee now—that this is totally unrealistic and that the best thing we could possibly hope for would be that the Canadian force would not arrive until the action was over. Surely there is a better way to deploy our forces in support of NATO than to engage in this rather fanciful operation known as CAST. I hope that, in any white paper which is produced by the government, the role of Canada in connection with the CAST force will be examined very carefully. It might be much more useful, for example, to augment the troops that we have at Lahr or elsewhere in West Germany. This force would thus be more readily available as a reinforcement to the NATO alliance in Europe. To my way of thinking, such a plan is more reliable than the fanciful possibility of air-sea transport to Norway, which would mean that we probably would not get there until the fighting was over.

In recommendations Nos. 4, 5 and 7 the committee has advocated a substantial increase in the level of our troops in Europe and in Mobile Command. I do not need to go over those recommendations in great detail. We think that the levels recommended by the subcommittee are not unrealistic, and that it is of vital importance that these levels be attained within the next several years. As a matter of fact, the report of the committee has recommended that the increases in troop levels of Mobile Command should take place in two categorical jumps: an increase of 2,500 men by 1985 and an increase of 4,000 men by 1987. Quite obviously, the committee would be well pleased if these increases took place on a more gradual basis but, for the sake of our calculations and cost estimates, we developed them in the two steps to which I have referred.

In my opinion, the report of the committee did not focus enough attention upon the militia and the supplementary reserve. The reason why we did not devote more attention to those two categories is because the House of Commons committee has just published a report called "Action for Reserves," which deals with this matter much more thoroughly. I would like to think that our report should be read in conjunction with the recommendations which we knew were being made by the committee in the other place on this subject.

I shall read recommendation No. 14, which has to do with the cadets, because I think it contains a point of view which is especially important and which, perhaps, is not often thought of or understood by Canadians.

The Sub-committee recommends that the cadet movement, in view of its great contribution to Canadian youth, should be given fuller recognition and all possible material and moral support by the government and the people of Canada.

It is this phrase that I commend to your attention:

Everyone should bear in mind the great services the movement performs in forming good citizens, developing qualities of leadership and discipline, and encouraging positive attitudes towards enrollment in the armed forces.

In other words, honourable senators, we believe that the cadet movement has many facets which are of interest to a country like Canada in the development of its citizens and in the development of good attitudes towards citizenship.

You will also note, if you read the report carefully, that we could not recommend at the present time that there be increases in manpower in Maritime Command, which is dealt with in recommendation No. 9, or in Air Command, which is dealt with in recommendation No. 12. The reason for this is that we felt that the equipment situation is so deplorable that further manpower could not be gainfully employed until something is done to improve the equipment resources of both of these important commands. Fortunately, there are now some prospects of these equipment deficiencies being met. This is long overdue, however, and the resulting time lag which we now face is painfully long.

I do not think that I need speak much longer, honourable senators. The Subcommittee on National Defence is now examining Maritime Command and will give attention to the equipment aspects to which I have just referred.

I should like to end on this note, that, notwithstanding the deplorable shortages in manpower and equipment in our armed forces, I, as one member of the committee—and I think my colleagues would agree with me—was agreeably surprised at the evidence of good morale and determination which we found on the part of the officers who came before us. It may be that these attitudes of morale and determination are not as high among the non-commissioned officers and other ranks as they are among those of the higher echelon, but we were agreeably impressed with the calibre and quality of the men of the armed services who came before the committee, and with the high state of morale and determination which they showed.

• (1520)

Honourable senators, I think this report says something about our armed services which badly needed saying, and I hope, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, that our recommendations will not go unheeded by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, although I do not intend to speak, I want to hold the debate open for anyone who may wish to, and I so advise the chairman of the subcommittee. In that event, I will be glad to yield. I think we should wait for at least a week and, if no one wishes to speak, then Senator Lafond may wish to close the debate.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that Senator Thompson intends to participate in this debate, although he is not present in the chamber at the moment.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Thompson, debate adjourned.

HOUSING

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Honourable Salter A. Hayden, pursuant to notice of March 16, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill C-89, intitled: "An Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Honourable senators will recall that notice of this motion was given yesterday, that leave was asked to proceed with it yesterday but that Senator Smith and others wanted an opportunity to have a look at the bill because, for some reason, it was not in our desks, although, after prompting an inquiry to the Distribution Office, I understand that the bill was circulated some time ago in the usual way—that is, it was placed in senators' mail boxes and then distributed to their offices or picked up by their secretaries. Of course, this is no answer to the problem when it was raised, but I think it may be an answer to the problem now. Therefore, I ask for adoption of the motion authorizing Senator Hayden's committee to proceed with the pre-study of this bill. The actual vote on the motion is simply to give him authority to do so. I know that Senator Hayden would be pleased to hear from honourable senators as to the timing of that consideration and as to furnishing adequate opportunity for honourable senators to examine the bill in advance of that consideration, if they wish.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to offer a brief comment, not to oppose the motion but to observe that the bill itself has received second reading in the House of Commons and is now in committee. My concern, and I have expressed it privately to the chairman of the committee, is that we somehow give adequate notice that the Senate is holding hearings on this bill, because the financial institutions, the building trades, the co-operatives which are covered in it and consumers, in general, might be interested in offering some comments to us on it. I merely wanted to formalize that suggestion so that it would not be overlooked.

I wonder if I could have the indulgence of the Senate to make a brief remark about Bill C-93, which I had supposed was in the same category of being held over, but it is not. Bill C-93 is a finance bill, which means that it cannot be introduced in this house; it has to be introduced in the House of Commons. I also observe that it has only received first reading there, so we do not have the benefit of the reasoning behind the introduction of this bill, on the part of its sponsors, in respect to government policy. It seems to me that we should reflect on just how far we should go in the pre-study. It may be advisable to consider whether or not financial bills in particular and, indeed, any bill should at least receive second reading in the House of Commons, so that we know that it has been approved in principle by that body, before we proceed. Perish the thought that it might not be, if it is a government bill; nevertheless, it is always a technical possibility.

This should be the case particularly when it is a bill that requires explanation on the part of the government as to its merits and why it should be accepted. I offer that observation, and I shall probably repeat it in the committee when it studies this matter. Certainly, in my opinion, we cannot initiate in this house finance bills, for which the House of Commons has a particular responsibility we do not share, and we ought to consider whether we should proceed with pre-studies before second reading, at the earliest. We may get ourselves into trouble by using this pre-study procedure so freely as to deal with bills that have only had first reading in the House of Commons. So I offer those cautionary words.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I take the point raised by Senator Roblin, and I am sure that it will be taken into consideration by the chairman of the committee. I understand precisely why he wished to put it on the record here in addition to having spoken to the chairman.

I add a comment. I believe Senator Hayden has often insisted that his pre-study is merely of the subject matter and not a detailed examination of a bill. But Senator Roblin, as a member of the committee, knows that examination of a subject matter does in fact get quite detailed, and I imagine that is the basis for his caveat concerning any dangers there might be in excessive use of this device of pre-study, a device which has in the past, when used judiciously, been an extremely effective legislative tool.

Senator Roblin: May I just offer one correction to my honourable friend? I did not speak to the chairman of the committee respecting Bill C-93. Those thoughts were not in my mind at the time, and I spoke only with respect to Bill C-89. I do not oppose this procedure. I think it has much merit, and I agree with my honourable friend that when we get a pre-study going in committee we go into every nut and bolt.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to say a word on the subject. As the joint chairman of a committee, I sent a letter out a few weeks ago suggesting that the committee chairmen have a meeting dealing with the whole subject of pre-study in an attempt to arrive at some kind of general policy, because there does not seem to be any clear policy and everybody goes off on a tangent. I suggest that the practical method of handling this matter is to have a meeting of committee chairmen to agree on a general policy or guidelines, which could include the very sensible suggestion made by Senator Roblin.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators will remember that this is perhaps the second or third occasion when reference has been made to an ad hoc group called the Committee of Committee Chairmen. I thought we did some very valuable work at our inaugural meeting, though we did not want to formalize the committee much more than to call meetings when they were felt necessary. However, I believe that all the committee chairmen agreed with the point raised by Senator Godfrey and implied in the point raised by Senator Roblin—namely, that the pre-study procedure merits some study by that committee and that it should explore ways of making it even more effective.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 3846)

STATEMENT OF CONCESSIONARY POSITION ON EPF/FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR FIRST MINISTERS CONFERENCE

In return for full provincial endorsement of the federal offer with respect to other aspects of fiscal arrangements the federal government offers to continue the current EPF transfer mechanism including both base year and escalator arrangements for post-secondary education programs through fiscal year 1983-84 subject to the following stipulations.

1. Provincial governments undertake to increase overall funding for post-secondary education in each of the next two fiscal years at a rate at least equal to the rate of increase of EPF cash and tax transfers*;
2. Provincial governments undertake to discuss with the Secretary of State mechanisms by which the achievement of the major national objectives with respect to the overall support of post-secondary education may be assured with a view to defining these objectives in federal legislation governing EPF post-secondary transfers and implementing such legislation by the end of fiscal 1983-84; the federal objectives include:
 - a) Mobility—no discrimination of preference for students or faculty on the basis of province of origin;
 - b) Accessibility—the assurance of reasonable access to post-secondary education and adult training programs for all qualified Canadians;
 - c) Accountability—the provision of adequate information on the post-secondary education programs, to enable Parliament to assess the efficacy of its funding programs and for national and international planning;
 - d) Cooperative Planning—agreement to joint federal and provincial planning for the implementation of means to achieve national objectives in post-secondary education and training;

* EPF escalator
1983-84—11.9%

e) Language—agreement to provide full opportunity for the people of Canada to increase their knowledge of Canada's official languages through formal learning and for members of minority official language groups to receive post-secondary education in their own language.

The federal government is aware that among the actions necessary to achieve mobility and accessibility objectives for Post-Secondary Education, it may be necessary to improve loan and assistance programs available to needy students.

3. Federal-provincial discussions among ministers responsible for training programs will continue with a view to arriving at new training agreements by August 1982.
4. With respect to health insurance and extended health care programs the federal government will continue to provide transfers to provincial governments under EPF arrangements through fiscal 1982-83 and at comparable levels thereafter. In order to more clearly define the national conditions and standards by which those transfers are made and the mechanisms by which those standards may be achieved, the federal Minister of Health and Welfare will undertake to begin discussion in the immediate future with her provincial colleagues leading to the development of new federal health legislation for implementation by April 1, 1983 with basic funding under that legislation to be subject to the guarantee outlined above.
5. Federal and provincial program ministers in the sectors referred to above will include in their forthcoming discussions consideration of mechanisms to assist in improving accountability to legislatures and particularly the federal Parliament for the expenditures involved and for assuring that Canadians are aware of the sources of funding for the programs involved.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 23, 1982, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since we are so busy here in the Senate that we have to come back next Tuesday, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether we can expect some relief in the near future, because a number of people here seem to be exhausted by the pace.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition is, of course, referring to a problem we are having with legislation, namely that we probably cannot expect to receive a large number of bills from the other place. Although there certainly are a number of bills over there, they are not, however, ready to come to the Senate. On the other hand, there is still our usual question period and there are committee meetings. In fact, I noticed that five meetings are scheduled for Tuesday, two for Wednesday and six or seven for Thursday.

I also believe that we can expect a number of interventions on inquiries, etc., and I feel that although we are not sure of getting a large number of bills, there are other aspects of our work which, in my opinion, are ample justification for sitting next week.

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Is that too much for you?

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I am sure that the list we have just been given by the Deputy Leader of the Government to justify our return next week will probably look very impressive in Hansard, but to anyone who knows what is going on, it is not very convincing.

[English]

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, a couple of weeks ago the deputy leader was all gung ho about ignoring the Lamontagne report—

Senator Frith: Ignoring?

Senator Marshall: —or putting it aside. He stressed the importance of senators spending more time discussing Senate reform themselves.

Keeping in mind what has taken place in the other place, and the importance that has been projected over the past two days with respect to reform of the House of Commons, would the deputy leader not agree that, instead of using the Senate as a scapegoat, parliamentary reform should start in the other place and not here in the Senate, where all we need is a little independence and enough guts to stop certain legislation, for the good of the people of Canada.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I agree with some things that have been said and disagree with others. I certainly agree that we should not talk of Senate reform with a view to having it replace the need for reform in the other place.

I do not wish to comment on whether the other place needs reform or not—I have my views on that. It is not up to me to tell members of that house how I think it should be reformed. Certainly, if parliamentary reform is needed, then the question should be approached on the basis of reform of Parliament and not one house of Parliament.

I do not feel at all that we are talking about ignoring the Lamontagne report. I hope that the two items on the Order Paper dealing with Senate reform will be addressed next week by the senators in whose names they stand.

As Senator Marshall and other honourable senators know, I strongly support both Parts I and II of the Lamontagne report. I hope that we will continue, in our customary reflective and thoughtful way, considering the question of Senate reform. To the extent it is any of my business, I hope that the members of the other place succeed in bringing about some reform there too.

Senator Marshall: In the event that a resolution or motion is put forward in the other place with respect to parliamentary reform, by whatever party, and that resolution or motion makes reference to the Senate, will the deputy leader watch it with a view to insisting, if there are references in it to the Senate, that the Senate have representation on whatever committee is formed to study the matter?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ROBLIN

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Question Period is called I hope that I can bootleg in something that is perhaps a question of privilege. After reading yesterday's Hansard, and particularly my exchange with the Honourable Senator Austin, who I regret is not present to hear what I have to say this afternoon, I have come to the conclusion that perhaps I was unnecessarily offensive regarding his activities when I referred, as reported at page 3845, to his appointment as being a "sham".

On reflection, I have decided that that is a term I should have not have used and need not have used, so I should like to withdraw it and express to the honourable minister my regret at using such an ill-advised expression that might have caused him pain or discomfort.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In a reply given yesterday by the Honourable Senator Frith, the Deputy Leader of the Government, to a question raised by Senator Haidasz on March 11, the deputy leader confirmed that talks are under way to facilitate U.S. testing of weapons on Canadian soil.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs also admitted yesterday that the Canadian government has already given its approval in principle to the weapons.

My first question to the Leader of the Government is: Can he confirm that the tests which the Americans have requested, and which the Canadian government has approved in principle, are to take place in northeastern Alberta?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

As the reply of yesterday indicated, discussions are under way on the point raised by the honourable senator.

Senator Bielish: I have a supplementary question. Would the Leader of the Government inquire as to whether, if they are going to be tested in Alberta, the Alberta government, the native associations, the wildlife people and others were consulted before approval in principle was given?

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice as well.

• (1410)

Senator Bielish: As a further supplementary, would the leader determine if any studies were conducted on the potential impact of such testing on humans, livestock and wildlife before approval in principle was given and, if such studies were undertaken, would the leader table them in the Senate?

As a final supplementary, if no such studies have been done, will the leader assure us that they will be initiated and completed, and that full consultation with those likely to be affected will take place before any final approval of tests is given.

Senator Perrault: As complete a reply as the department's research department is able to assemble will be brought to the Senate.

ENERGY

ALSANDS PROJECT—WITHDRAWAL OF PARTNERS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to respond to a supplementary question raised on March 2 by Senator Murray concerning a revised energy demand forecast.

I can inform the honourable senator that supply, demand and pricing forecasts are under continuous review by officials within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In due course, new departmental forecasts will be made available.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question with respect to that answer? Would my honourable friend include in that the department's analysis of where the Cold Lake development and the Alsands development come in with respect to our energy self-sufficiency program?

Senator Olson: I can do that, but that is really not a supplementary question although it might be related. That, of course, deals with the supply side, not the demand side, and my honourable friend will recognize that at once. In any event, I will refer that to the minister as well.

Honourable senators, I should like to respond to another supplementary question under this heading raised on March 2 by Senator Balfour which concerns drilling rig activity in western Canada.

Earlier this year, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors had forecast that 5,500 wells would be drilled in Canada during 1982. Subsequently, the association revised its estimate upward to 6,000 wells drilled, while the Canadian Petroleum Association is now forecasting the drilling of 6,200 wells for this calendar year. In view of a recent decline in drilling activity in the United States and a return of some drilling rigs to Canada, the CPA estimate could be considered as a minimum. In fact, some industry sources are forecasting a total in excess of 7,200 wells for 1982, which would be 5 per cent above the 1981 total.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has not made a forecast of the average level of drilling activity for 1982.

With regard to drilling activity, it can be noted that in March there were 470 drilling rigs in Canada, of which 390 were active. The customary decline in drilling in late March through mid-May, due to the spring breakup, will, of course, lower the drilling activity during that period. However, a resumption of higher level of drilling is expected in the third quarter of 1982.

OIL—REDUCTION IN EXPLORATION ACTIVITY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to respond to a question raised on March 11 by Senator Bielish which concerned drilling rig activity.

In a report submitted to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and distributed to its member companies, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors reported that since the announcement of the NEP on January 14, 1982, 226 drilling rigs and 107 service rigs have left this country. It is important to note, however, that of the 226 drilling rigs, 39 are classified as "flowthrough" rigs, meaning that they had never operated in Canada and were not part of the Canadian fleet. Twenty-four of the 107 service rigs can be classified as "flowthrough" rigs as well.

There has been a tendency over the last 18 months or so to attribute any problem within the drilling sector to the National Energy Program. This ignores the fact that since approximately 1960, the petroleum industry has operated in cycles lasting about five years, that have culminated in peak periods of production and oil field activity. The last peak period ended in 1980, coinciding with the release of the NEP report.

• (1415)

Historically there has been substantial movement of drilling rigs between Canada and the United States. There is evidence of a moderation in the flow of rigs to the United States and an increase in the return of some of those drilling rigs to Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a few moments ago Senator Bielish requested information on the use of Canadian ranges for the testing of U.S. defence systems, and I said that I would make an effort to obtain as much information as I could as soon as possible. I now have some preliminary information.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: We hope that this short time lapse establishes a new standard of excellence in the early production of information.

Canada and the United States are currently studying the possibility of concluding a framework agreement to regulate any testing by the United States of defence equipment using Canadian test sites and airspace. In the past, such projects, for example cold weather testing, have been dealt with on an ad hoc basis.

Details of such an agreement, which are still being worked out between the two countries, would be made public on conclusion of negotiations following agreement by both sides.

[Senator Olson.]

Bilateral discussions to date have included the possibility of unarmed Cruise missile testing in Canadian airspace over the kind of terrain we have in the north. It does not specify at this point the exact areas, honourable senators. Cruise missiles are small pilotless aircraft propelled by a jet engine and can be used to carry either conventional or nuclear weapons. Of course, no warheads would be involved in any test flight in Canada.

Canada has never advocated the placing of unilateral restraints on the testing or development of U.S. defence systems, because such unilateral restraints could upset the balance of deterrence on which western security depends. The proposed testing of unarmed Cruise missiles in Canada will not interfere in any way with Canadian support for efforts to negotiate balanced and verifiable arms control agreements.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—ELECTION—CONDITIONS GOVERNING OBSERVERS—STATEMENT BY GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have information on the subject of El Salvador, a subject on which several honourable senators have asked questions in recent weeks. Some of those questions related to the conditions governing election observers in El Salvador which the Government of Canada found unacceptable.

The Government of El Salvador did not lay out any structured format under which election observers would function. There were, for example, no specific terms of reference as to what the observers were expected to do, no specific arrangements for co-operation with other international observers, no concrete mechanisms put in place through which observers could report their findings, and no clear indication as to what observers should do in the event that they did find irregularities. In short, the observers would, apparently, be left strictly to their own devices in El Salvador, which would, I suggest, pose some problems. That kind of arrangement was found to be inconsistent with our previous experience in observing electoral processes, for example, in Zimbabwe.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

MANPOWER TRAINING AND JOB CREATION EXPENDITURES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, questions were asked by Senator Leblanc and Senator Muir with respect to the $208 million to be spent on manpower training and job creation programs. The question was asked as to whether the enabling legislation would provide for specific amounts for each province or whether it would be distributed according to some other system; how would the $208 million be divided; and what might be available for Quebec and the Atlantic region?

The answer is that the enabling legislation will not provide for specific amounts for each province. The $208 million includes $188 million to be used for training and to support expansion or modernization of training facilities. The funds are for a two-year period and, in the case of training, are in addition to those already proposed.

● (1420)

The training funds will not be distributed on a quota basis, but will take into account labour market needs, industry's ability to participate, and current training activities. The amounts available for Quebec and the Atlantic region have not yet been approved.

The criteria for the distribution of the occupational growth and adjustment funds are in the process of development. The amounts available for use in individual provinces will not be determined until the criteria are approved and negotiations with the provinces and the private sector completed.

GARRISON DAM PROJECT—PROPOSED REVISION—CANADA-MANITOBA CONSULTATIONS—STATEMENT BY GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have further information on the subject of the Garrison dam which will be of interest especially to Senator Guay, Senator Roblin and a number of other senators.

According to press reports of March 17, a North Dakota official has expressed surprise and anger that the federal and Manitoba governments have not informed the Canadian public of the proposed United States revised Garrison project.

As indicated in recent press reports, the United States is considering possible revisions to the Garrison plan.

United States authorities have given federal and Manitoba officials a general briefing on these proposed revisions. The briefing was based on a Department of the Interior preliminary study which has no formal standing in the United States. Time is needed to assess the implications of this new development, and more concrete information, such as engineering design, will be required before Canada can determine its acceptability. The proposed revisions are expected to figure in our ongoing consultations with the United States on the Garrison issue.

Since these proposals represent an internal United States development, and are at a very preliminary stage with no formal endorsement in the United States, it is not for the federal or Manitoba governments to take the initiative in publicizing them or to comment in advance of their being made public in the United States.

As announced on March 2, federal and Manitoba ministers have agreed that our governments will collaborate even more closely than in the past to protect Canadian interests relating to Garrison.

To this end, a number of steps are going to be taken. The dialogue and consultation between federal and Manitoba ministers on this issue will be continued and a joint ministerial committee will be established to meet as required to determine strategy for the continuing joint effort on Garrison. Committee membership will include, from the federal government, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, co-chairman, the Honourable John Roberts and the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy; and, from Manitoba, the Honourable Alvin Mackling, co-chairman, and the Honourable Jay Cowan.

Officials from Ottawa and Winnipeg will also continue to collaborate very closely. One important element will be the loan of a Manitoba official to the Canadian embassy in Washington. This official will work under the direction of the Canadian ambassador, who will continue to lead the Canadian governmental effort on Garrison in the United States.

Finally, the Manitoba government has decided to retain a Washington legal firm to provide advice, information and analysis on the Garrison question, also in close consultation with the embassy.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I say that I think the measures announced seem to be positive in respect of joint action on the part of the provincial and federal governments; but I offer the warning, if I may, that while it is apparently quite agreeable to the American administration to deal with the Garrison project in a manner that would be compatible with Canadian interests, the real problem seems to be with the Senate and House of Representatives. I would urge our representatives, whoever they are, to keep in mind the fact that having made a deal with the administration simply is not good enough. They are going to have to convince the senators and representatives from North Dakota, or their allies, of the desirability of moderating their ambitions on Garrison.

● (1425)

Senator Perrault: I thank the honourable senator for his observations. I think that all Canadians share the concern of Senators Roblin, Yuzyk, Bielish and others. It may be that, upon the establishment of this committee, an opportunity will arise for a special briefing in Ottawa so that the members of the Senate can better understand what is involved.

Senator Roblin: The briefing will be held in Washington.

Senator Perrault: I am speaking, in the first instance, of an information session for honourable senators so that they will be brought up to date, as much as is possible. I will make that suggestion to the minister.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

ANNUAL SEAL HUNT—RESOLUTION OF EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT—STATEMENT BY GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have, finally, a report on the seal hunt, which may be of interest to honourable senators from Newfoundland.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Too late!

Senator Perrault: No doubt, but perhaps I should make the report anyway.

Since hearing of the draft resolution last fall, the Department of External Affairs, in close co-operation with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, mounted a campaign to provide objective and balanced information on the seal hunt. Special efforts were made to provide these facts to members of the European Parliament, journalists, and officials of the commission in Brussels.

Scientific experts, public relations specialists and other officials met with parliamentarians, the press and our own information people in the European countries to provide factual information on the seal hunt. These efforts led to a postponement of the European Parliament's consideration of the resolution when its backers realized that many of their arguments were unfounded. Individual letters went to every member of the Parliament to set out the facts of the seal hunt and to underline its importance to Canada.

Despite these efforts and despite two all-party parliamentary missions and the presence of Mr. Rompkey in the days preceding the vote, the European Parliament responded to the pressure of European public opinion and adopted the resolution on March 11.

Our mission to the European community in Brussels made a formal démarche to the commission several months ago to present the government's position to the authorities in Brussels. We are now impressing on the Commission that the vote of the European Parliament, which was based on emotion and incorrect information rather than scientific fact, does not change that position. Any unilateral decision that interferes with this important Canadian activity would raise the prospect of an appropriate response to protect Canadian interests.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to direct to the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question which has to do with the questions posed by Senator Bielish and the partial response that she received. May I ask whether the tentative agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to testing the Cruise missile will involve Canadian forces? Will our forces be permitted, by the Canadian government and that of the United States, to take part in this operation?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I am sure the honourable senator understands, this is a sensitive issue and one upon which I do not want to speculate at this time. The question will, however, be taken as notice.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Joan Neiman moved the third reading of Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code.

[Senator Perrault.]

She said: Honourable senators, the Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science has reported this bill without amendment, but with a recommendation concerning certain changes which she felt should be made to the English version to make it conform to the French version, which our legal counsel felt was more appropriate.

I listened to the comments by both the Leader and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition yesterday. As a result, I spoke to Mr. Caccia, the minister responsible for this bill, and explained to him what had been recommended with respect to it. I told him that, because of the minor nature of the changes, I felt that it would not be necessary to have from him an undertaking in the normal sense. The minister wrote me a letter confirming our telephone conversation and saying that he would undertake to have the proposed changes included in the next miscellaneous statute law amendment bill.

● (1430)

As honourable senators know, this type of act is put together about once a year to gather together the anomalies and non-contentious mistakes found in the statutes, and to correct them. The minister is more than willing to ensure that when the next bill of this kind is put together he will include the changes recommended by our standing committee.

This bill was considered very thoroughly in the other place by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, which held a total of 9 meetings. Substantive amendments to the bill were proposed at the report stage, many of which were adopted and included in the bill now before us.

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science held three meetings on the bill. Although I am not a member of that committee, I attended all the meetings and am satisfied with the scrutiny the bill received from the committee. I am very happy now to recommend that this bill be passed on third reading.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to clarify something that arose when the bill was reported. You will remember that rule 78(2) reads:

A report presented to the Senate shall be received without debate.

You will also remember that rule 78(4) reads:

When a committee reports a bill without amendment, such report shall stand adopted without any motion, and the senator in charge of the bill shall move that it be read a third time on a future day.

And rule 80 provides:

On every report of amendments to a bill made from a committee, the senator presenting the report shall explain to the Senate the basis for and the effect of each amendment.

To prevent what took place in this case being considered a precedent, it should be made clear that we mistakenly treated the committee's report as one with amendments when, in fact, the committee was reporting the bill without amendment.

When a bill is reported without amendment, as is the case with Bill C-78, and comments are to be made by the chairman of the committee, such comments should be made at the third reading stage, rather than the report stage.

Granted, the comments made by the deputy chairman of the committee were relevant, and it was important that the matter be discussed.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: She had leave.

Senator Frith: Yes, Senator Bird did ask for leave to give an explanation, and leave was given. We then proceeded to discuss it. In any event, our rules provide that when a bill is reported without amendment, it stands adopted without debate. All discussion should take place at the third reading stage. This is the procedure we should have followed, and I want to note on the record that we were not establishing a precedent by doing what we did in this case.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I was at the final meeting of the committee, and as I recall—Senator Bird can correct me if I am wrong—the Law Clerk gave advice to the effect that we were completely in order to follow the procedure we did. Is the deputy leader now saying the Law Clerk was wrong? If so, I am wondering why we followed the procedure we did. There seems to be something wrong with the system.

Senator Frith: The only explanation that comes to mind is that the Law Clerk was giving advice that it was in order for the committee to report a bill without amendment and also to give an explanation, as in this case, of some minor changes that were being recommended. Personally, I do not feel that in such a case it is advisable to have that type of explanation actually put in the report. I think it would have been much better to report the bill without amendment, and then at third reading have the committee chairman say that the committee also considered such and such, and then report the other matters. But, in my view, it is not out of order to add the kind of things that were added, although I think it is not the preferred procedure. Certainly, leave was necessary before the explanation could be given.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I think there was great advantage in following the procedure we followed yesterday because, in doing so, we were able to obtain from the minister an undertaking which we would not otherwise have obtained. As you know, I asked the question which resulted in the undertaking. So I do not think we should be too inflexible with regard to this procedure.

Senator Marshall: I would expect the minister to give such an undertaking, to pass the buck by saying, "Okay, pass the bill as it is, and we will change it next year." That minister might not be in power next year and the changes will not be made. The honourable senator knows that.

Senator Godfrey: Being a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I can say that we have received such undertakings from other ministers and that they have been carried out within a reasonable time. I believe that such undertakings do have real value, and that this procedure is not as well known in the Senate as it might be.

Senator Frith: I agree that in this case there is that advantage, but I do not think that is any reason for us not to proceed in the normal way.

Senator Marshall: If we had had the guts, we would have amended the bill as required.

Senator Frith: I do not want the procedure we followed yesterday to be considered a precedent.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE ESTIMATES

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (E) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Wednesday, March 24, 1982, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Honourable senators, if leave is granted, I will explain why I ask the Senate to support this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as you know, because of the events in the other place, we have received supplementary estimates (E) later than usual. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is currently dealing with the main estimates. The chairman, Senator Everett, and the committee have arranged to hold two committee meetings each week until at least Easter to consider these estimates.

For these reasons, I have asked for leave for that committee to sit while the Senate is sitting on Wednesday afternoon next.

You will remember our decision that we should have no more than one committee sit while the Senate is sitting on Wednesday afternoons. No other committee is scheduled to sit at that time next week. Therefore, I ask that leave be granted that this committee may so sit.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 23, 1982, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 23, 1982

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL REPORT TO SENATORS

On Presentation of Petitions.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I wonder if the leader is going to table a copy of the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs, which has already been delivered to our offices. It seems there is never any consistency. We either get the report before it is tabled, or we get it two days after it is tabled.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Look in your mail more often.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I hope the honourable senator checked his mailbox.

Senator Marshall: I did, but you did not table the report tonight.

Senator Perrault: Admittedly, it is not on the list of documents to be tabled this evening.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FORESTRY

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the concerns expressed recently by representatives of the forest industry, would the minister advise how he treats those concerns which are due, primarily, to the added capacity which is coming on stream in the United States? This will deny the sale and export of pulp and paper from Canada.

What action is the minister and his government taking to combat the fact that the reforestation period in the United States is three or four times faster than it is in Canada, and labour costs and taxes are lower?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the forest industry and its various sections, including pulp and paper, is one of the largest and most important sectors of our whole economy.

Without agreeing with all the assertions made by the honourable senator, I would be glad to consider his question to see if I can give some factual response. I think my honourable friend was asking me to express an opinion on certain assertions that he attributed to someone else. Perhaps I can do that, but I prefer to deal with facts.

Senator Marshall: Canadian pulp and paper officials said yesterday in Montreal that provincial governments across Canada must double their contributions to forest management and reforestation. Would the minister advise what leadership his government is giving towards inducing provincial governments to support this industry, which is the only one we have left in Canada?

I am particularly concerned with the pulp and paper industry in Newfoundland. If the forest industry in that province is lost, it will cause major problems. Is the minister taking any initiative, in consultation with provincial governments, in an attempt to provide more support to that industry?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, who is also responsible for the forest industry at the national level, has had a number of discussions with industry officials and with representatives of provincial governments respecting reforestation so that this will not be a depleting resource in the future. The minister has received positive responses in that regard.

I do not have the exact figures with me this evening, but since this government came into office it and the provincial governments have made a significant advance in the amount of resources allocated to the forestry sector.

Senator Marshall: Keeping in mind that sales in the pulp and paper industry and in the forest industry amount to $22.5 billion, with exports of $13 billion, that the forest industry provides, directly or indirectly, one job in ten—which amounts to millions of jobs—and the present difficult economic situation, will the minister take steps to ensure that we do not lose this industry which is vital to Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to repeat, perhaps in different words that will be even more capable of carrying communication, that the government in the past, now, and in the future, fully recognizes the size and importance of this industry. I have undertaken to bring some figures to this chamber to indicate that there has been a significant upswing in the federal government's financial contribution to this sector although, of course, the resources are owned by the provinces. Reforestation and the management of that resource is not only primarily but almost entirely a provincial responsibility. We have done some research which is useful to the industry on an interprovincial basis.

In addition to giving Senator Marshall that assurance, I should like him to know that I will try to bring some figures to this chamber which will indicate a very significant percentage increase, even up to this period. The minister responsible may be able to provide me with more figures that would indicate an accelerating trend in this direction.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Economic Development.

In view of the tremendous importance of the forest industry to New Brunswick, a province that is 84 per cent forested and has 10 pulp and paper mills, and in view of the tremendous effort being made by that province and the industry in both conservation and redevelopment of the forests, would the minister determine from his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, when the Government of Canada will make its financial commitment to the Forest Research Centre, a centre of excellence, proposed for the city of Fredericton, to provide advanced research in forestry for the whole of the Atlantic area?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall also refer that question for a reply.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON CURRENT SITUATION

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government or the Deputy Leader of the Government with respect to the coup d'état in Guatemala. While a great deal of time has not gone by since that event, could we be made privy to such information as the government may have received, and, in particular, as to what, if any, social disturbance or violence may have followed that coup d'état in Guatemala? I should also like to ask how many Canadians were in Guatemala at the time of the coup d'état.

If the honourable senator does not have that information at hand, which is quite possibly the case, he might undertake to advise us tomorrow on this important event that has taken place in such a volatile area.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, shortly before this evening's sitting, I was advised that there appeared to be no detailed information as yet with respect to the purported coup d'état in Guatemala. As full a report as possible will be brought to the Senate tomorrow afternoon.

INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE AUTOMOBILES

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic and

[Senator Olson.]

Regional Development. My question has to do with the importation of Japanese cars into Canada.

Can the minister give the Senate the figure representing the total number of cars imported into Canada from Japan in this fiscal year—that is, the fiscal year which will end in a few days' time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not think I can give that figure from memory, although I have seen it within the last few days. I shall try to bring that answer to the Senate on Thursday.

Senator Smith: I thank my honourable friend for his reply.

I wonder if, at the same time, he could bring figures to indicate the total percentage of the Canadian market represented by those cars imported from Japan formed in this fiscal year.

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Smith: I have a further supplementary question. Could the minister also provide us with the percentage of the Canadian market represented by imported Japanese cars in the fiscal year ending in 1979?

Senator Olson: Yes, I think I can give that undertaking, too. Looking up more statistics may take a little longer, but I think that I will have that information for the honourable senator on Thursday.

Senator Smith: If the minister's inquiry reveals there has been a substantial increase in the percentage of the Canadian market taken up by such imports from 1979 to the present, would the minister indicate how many extra Canadian jobs would have been created had that increase not taken place, and had the same number of cars been manufactured in Canada?

● (2020)

Senator Olson: I could do that, although Senator Smith understands very clearly the path he is trying to lead me down—and I am probably going to go down it—but I think that I may also make some comments on what the alternatives are.

Senator Smith: I am sure the honourable gentleman will, as is his usual custom, make whatever comments occur to him as useful to diffuse the answer he has to give to the question.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Let's not get political.

Senator Smith: Whenever the Leader of the Government determines that he will not get political, I will gladly follow in his footsteps. However, I think I shall probably live quite a while before I have to make that great conversion.

[Later:]

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. When providing the answer to Senator Smith's question would the minister also indicate the extent of trade between Canada and Japan, and whether we have a deficit or a positive balance of trade with that country.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice and provide that information as well.

UNITED NATIONS

OUTER SPACE TREATY—CANADIAN INITIATIVE

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government, but first I want to thank him for his reply given on March 16 to a question I had asked concerning international verification through the International Satellite Monitoring Agency.

I should like to draw to his attention the fact that I asked two questions on March 9, the second one concerning the initiative the government was taking to make the outer space treaty more effective. I hope that I will also get a further answer to that.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, an earnest endeavour will be put forward in order to secure that reply as soon as possible.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is something new.

NEWFOUNDLAND

LOSS OF DRILL RIG OCEAN RANGER—ALLEGED WARNING AGAINST WINTER OFFSHORE DRILLING

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government which has to do with the tragedy of the Ocean Ranger. Evidently, more than two years ago the Department of Fisheries and Oceans gave a warning about, and called for a halt to, winter oil drilling off Newfoundland's east coast for fear of storm-induced accidents. This warning was disregarded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the Leader of the Government table in the Senate, or provide us with, a statement from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources confirming or denying their ignoring of the warning of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans so that we can determine who was right and who was wrong, and if those lives could have been saved?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will inquire into the statement made by Senator Marshall. If the honourable senator has some form of documentation which might assist in a search for further information, I would be very pleased to receive it from him. I want to ask Senator Marshall whether part of this information comes from a member of the Conservative Party in the other place, because there were some press reports of some correspondence involving two Conservative members of Parliament. Is this the correspondence he is referring to?

Senator Marshall: No, it arises from an article in today's newspaper stating that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans gave a warning and that it was disregarded by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I am wondering why it was disregarded.

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers. I should like to respond to a question asked by Senator Phillips on February 24, at which time he asked if I would provide a list of the mega-projects planned for Atlantic Canada, and if I would also provide the number of man-years for each project.

Eight projects are listed, namely, the TQ&M Pipeline, investment estimated at $2 billion over the next five years with approximately 1,600 person-years of construction for both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and 50 permanent jobs created in both provinces; the Offshore Labrador Development, investment estimated at approximately $1 billion; the Point Lepreau Generating Station No. 1 for New Brunswick, investment estimated at $1.3 billion with an estimated 10,500 person-years of construction and 231 permanent jobs created; the CF-18 offset program, investment value estimated at $2.9 billion, with 60,000 to 70,000 jobs by 1995—that is for the whole country. There are some examples of the contracts that have already been awarded, with one going to Halifax, 60 jobs and $1.7 million of investment.

Next come the offshore Sable Island gas development, investment estimated at about $2 billion; the Hibernia oil development, investment estimated at $4 billion; the Lower Churchill Project Phase I, at Muskrat Falls, Newfoundland, investment estimated at $1.54 billion, with approximately 6,500 construction person-years and 140 permanent jobs created; and the Lower Churchill Project Phase II, at Gull Island, Newfoundland, estimated investment of $1.85 billion, with approximately 9,800 person-years of construction and 75 permanent jobs created.

Honourable senators, that information needs to be read in conjunction with a delayed answer to a question by Senator Muir, who asked: How much has the federal government invested in economic development in the Atlantic provinces and how many jobs have been created? It depends on how far back one goes. I have in my hand a rather long list of three pages, which I could read, if necessary.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Read it three times.

Senator Olson: There is a recapitulation at the end of the jobs created in 1980-81 and 1981-82 and the funds allocated. The total for the Atlantic region in 1980-81 was 28,842 jobs, and, in 1981-82, 27,002 jobs. The funds allocated for 1980-81 totalled $60.8 million, and, in 1981-82, $71 million.

If honourable senators wish me to read the list, I shall be happy to do so. However, I would ask that the full text of these two answers be printed as an appendix to today's proceedings.

Perhaps, after all the information has been digested, Senator Muir might wish some fleshing out of further details.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of answers see appendix, p. 3865.)

MEGA-PROJECTS—TQ&M PIPELINE

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, with regard to the answer just given listing the mega-projects in the Atlantic provinces, I thought I heard the minister mention the TQ&M pipeline. I simply wish to have confirmed that by including that project in the list there is no doubt whatever as to the extension of that pipeline into the maritime provinces.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): My honourable friend can read that into it if he wishes, but that is not what I said, and that is not what the question was based on. The question was: Would the minister provide a list of the mega-projects planned for Atlantic Canada and would he provide the number of man-years for each project? We obtained the mega-projects from the Blair-Carr report on the major projects in Canada, which my honourable friend is aware of. I did not intend anything more than bringing to this chamber information in response to a question that was asked. The government's stated policy with respect to the TQ&M pipeline has not changed.

Senator Murray: Then there is no doubt whatever as to the extension of the TQ&M pipeline into the maritime provinces?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have anything to add to what I have already said.

● (2030)

Hon. G. I. Smith: I wonder if the honourable senator could add something having to do with the same problem.

Is there at present an estimated time of commencement of construction of TQ&M pipeline in the province of New Brunswick and also in the province of Nova Scotia? Is there similarly an estimated time of completion in the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia?

Senator Olson: I am not sure if the project's sponsor has filed those estimates with the National Energy Board in connection with seeking a permit to proceed with construction or not, but I could make some inquiries and find out.

Senator Smith: And is there, in relation to the Sable Island gas find, an estimated time when it is expected it will be determined whether or not the gas there amounts to a commercial quantity, and whether it can be exploited commercially.

Senator Olson: That is an even more difficult question to answer, because I expect no one can predict when a find is going to be made. That, of course, is what exploration is all about. I would express the hope that even the wells that are in operation now, and the ones that are planned, will turn into commercial discoveries of gas, producing the benefits that I know all Canadians, and particularly Canadians in Nova Scotia, would like to have result from that exploration. Perhaps I could also add that this hope is shared by the private sector companies, who are putting their funds forward in that connection. My friend, however, surely does not want me to try to predict when a find in sufficient commercial quantities is going to be made to warrant the kind of gathering system that would bring that gas ashore.

Senator Smith: The honourable gentleman should not be so sure of what I do not want.

Senator Olson: I want to be sure as to what you asked me, though.

Senator Smith: In view of the continually changing dates of such estimates—that is, when the find will reach the point of being commercially exploitable—I would have thought the honourable gentleman and his staff would have been keeping very close tabs on that, and would be able to say what the latest news is.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend knows as well as I do—in fact, he ought to know better than I do—

Senator Smith: I probably do!

Senator Olson: You probably do. You should, however, listen to the last part of the comment before you make that kind of assertion.

The reason I said that is that he will know, perhaps, that the Province of Nova Scotia has recently entered into some joint venture arrangements for the acceleration of the exploration that is going to take place in that area. That is a decision that they have made with a desired end result, I am sure, but I am still not in the business, and in the part of the country I come from we know better than to try to predict when anybody is going to make a major find.

Senator Smith: Since the honourable gentleman has been kind enough to direct attention to the fact that Nova Scotia is reported to have entered into a joint venture arrangement with some private or other kind of company with regard to drilling for gas, perhaps he will be ready to tell the house why it is that the drilling to be done under that joint venture has been delayed until October, rather than taking place in May or June of this year.

Senator Olson: I do not care to comment on that, because I do not know the reason.

Senator Smith: Perhaps the honourable gentleman will be kind enough to find out.

Senator Olson: I could, but it reduces itself to what happens in a number of cases. I expect the honourable senator can do that homework himself better than I would be able to do it for him.

Senator Smith: Except, of course, that while it is this honourable senator's desire and hope to learn all he can, it is the minister's responsibility to know all he can, and I am asking him to discharge that responsibility by trying to discover what the reason is.

● (2035)

Senator Olson: I will carefully read the phrasing of the question when it appears in Hansard tomorrow to see whether we have a responsibility to answer it in that way. It may require an inquiry directed to the Government of Nova Scotia.

Senator Smith: It may also require an inquiry directed to the Government of Canada, which is what I am doing.

UNITED NATIONS

OUTER SPACE TREATY—INTERNATIONAL SATELLITE MONITORING AGENCY—CANADIAN INITIATIVE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on a point of clarification, earlier this evening Honourable Senator Thompson asked whether further information was available regarding the International Satellite Monitoring Agency and the Outer Space Treaty. Both questions have received preliminary replies.

I asked the honourable senator whether he was seeking additional information on these points. I should like to draw to his attention that the first reply regarding the Outer Space Treaty is to be found on page 3811 of Debates of the Senate of March 11. The answer to the question regarding the International Satellite Monitoring Agency, Canadian Initiative, is provided on page 3834 of the Debates of the Senate of March 16.

If further information is required, it certainly will be secured.

THE ECONOMY

INTENTIONS OF GOVERNMENT RE 1980 POVERTY LINE UPDATE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question which was asked by Honourable Senator Marshall on November 18, 1981, concerning the poverty line update with regard to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

On November 18, Senator Marshall asked what action was being taken to bring income support and pension payments to the poverty level. I should like to provide the following information insofar as veterans' benefits are concerned.

While it is recognized that improvements can be made to benefits provided to our veterans and their dependents, war veterans allowances and civilian war allowances compare favourably with Statistics Canada indicators of the income requirements of the average family. Married recipients currently receive income in excess of the Statistics Canada mid-range low income cutoffs, and single recipients should also reach that level with the full implementation of Bill C-40.

With the full implementation of Bill C-40, the government will have met its first objective insofar as the rates of allowances are concerned. The second objective, which is seen as addressing the most pressing need, is to enhance the health and personal care programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs to meet the special needs of the aging veteran. It is to this problem that the government will be devoting the highest priority.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS

REQUEST FOR STATISTICS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question that was raised by Honourable Senator Godfrey on March 11 relating to the subject of fisheries.

It should be emphasized that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans mandate extends considerably beyond the fishing industry. For example, the Ocean Science and Surveys sector, which covers a wide range of oceanographic and other ocean-related research activity, as well as the Canadian Hydrographic Service, which involves navigation charts, tide tables and so on, accounts for a sizable slice of the budget—approximately $70 million—and 1,300 employees in 1981-82.

The $400 million Department of Fisheries and Oceans budget also includes the Small Craft Harbours program, which costs over $34 million and benefits many vessel owners other than fishermen; the Salmonid Enhancement Program in British Columbia, which cost $24 million in 1981-82, where present and future benefits will accrue to recreational fishermen and to the tourist industry as well as to commercial fishermen; and a vast range of research and development related to fish habitat and aquaculture of wide general benefit, such as the Department of Fisheries and Oceans stepped-up studies into acid rain. On the other side of the ledger, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans realizes approximately $20 million in revenue from the sale of licences, from fines and so forth.

The current number of fishermen in Canada is around 80,000 and there are some 54,000 employed in fish processing plants. It should not be forgotten that in dozens of east coast communities, fishing is the only industry. If fishing were to fail in these isolated communities, a terrific strain would be put on the nation's unemployment and welfare budgets. It has been estimated that fishing provides the sole economic base for 250,000 people in the Atlantic provinces.

Putting statistics aside, it must always be remembered that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has a mandated responsibility under the Fisheries Act to manage the nation's fisheries. That responsibility goes back to the days when Canada's first laws were drawn up by the Fathers of Confederation. If everyone played by the rules—and that includes Canadian as well as foreign fishermen—the department could doubtless operate with a lot fewer staff and considerably less money. But, having to face facts as they are, the department is obliged to deploy and maintain a fisheries surveillance and protection fleet several hundred vessels strong to ensure that the rules are kept. In fact about one-fifth of the department's total staff is employed aboard ships, and, incidentally, these vessels also play an important auxiliary role as part of the federal government's search and rescue program.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans also has a responsibility to ensure that all fishery products that reach the consumer, both domestic and imported, are good and wholesome. That calls for a work force of around 400 to enforce health and safety standards throughout the industry. We are all familiar with the outcry that occurs if someone gets sick or dies from eating a can of contaminated food. It raises the perennial question: What is the value of a human life? The fact is the department cannot relax its inspection standards or let down its guard, however much it costs. And with more and more health hazards finding their way into the environment—mercury, PCBs, dioxin and the like—the scientists and lab technicians backing up the fisheries inspectors are hard pressed to keep ahead of the game. Incidentally, the ratio of fisheries inspectors to value of production is comparable to other food sectors, such as meat inspection.

With coastlines that front on to three oceans—Atlantic, Arctic and Pacific—Canada cannot avoid a heavy involvement in international fisheries and ocean-related affairs. To be credible and make our voice heard in these international forums, Canadians must be in a position to put forward arguments based on solid, scientific facts. This is particularly true in the case of our dealings with the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, known as NAFO, the U.N. Law of the Sea negotiations and a host of other treaty negotiations. Research is not a cheap commodity, according to the minister. And in the case of fisheries it is particularly expensive due to the fact that the object of the research mostly is out of sight in the ocean depths, involving the use of costly research platforms and equally costly equipment.

These days much of the research by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is conducted in the Arctic in connection with oil and gas exploration and renewable resource use, particularly by native people, and northern research usually costs about three times as much as research done in more hospitable climates. It is significant that more than $140 million of the department's current budget is devoted to research.

Finally, honourable senators, the last point to be made is that the value of fisheries production in 1981 in this nation is estimated at $1.9 billion. It should be added that the export value of Canada's fisheries products in 1981 is estimated at an all-time record high of $1.5 billion, keeping Canada in the No. 1 spot among the world's fish exporting countries.

Honourable senators, I apologize for the length of the reply, but there have been a number of criticisms about the amount of money invested in the program to assist the fisheries and allied matters. I see the Leader of the Opposition shaking his head. Obviously he is not interested in the subject, but I know that Senator Marshall, Senator Muir and other honourable senators who realize the importance of the fisheries will not adopt the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of privilege, honourable senators, to explain my laugh, I must say that it was only because the Leader of the Government said that it was owing to the criticisms that he had to give such a long reply, and I can understand that very well; but it amuses me, too.

STATUTE LAW (MILITARY AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES) AMENDMENT ACT, 1980

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981.—(Honourable Senator Thompson).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as you will notice, this order stands in Senator Thompson's name. He informed me earlier today that he had discussed it with the chairman of the committee, and the matter about which he was expecting to speak had been settled between him and the chairman. Senator Thompson now wishes to have this order stand in the name of the committee chairman, Senator Bonnell.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Guay, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Côtteau, for the adoption of the Second Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages.—(Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.).

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name. I adjourned it on behalf of my colleague Senator Murray because I thought it was a subject near and dear to his heart.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I ask that the order stand in my name.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS—ATLANTIC CANADA—TEXT OF DELAYED ANSWERS BY SENATOR OLSON TO ORAL QUESTIONS

QUESTION: Would Minister provide a list of the mega-projects planned for Atlantic Canada and would he provide the number of man-years for each project?

ANSWER: Honourable senators I would like to respond to a question raised on February 24 by Senator Phillips which concerned mega-projects planned for Atlantic Canada.

I will provide the honourable senator with a list of the mega-projects and where possible the list of jobs created by mega-projects in Atlantic Canada. I must point out, however, that in addition to the list I am providing today there are other mega-projects that have been proposed but not finalized that will create numerous benefits for our east coast.

The honourable senator can obtain further details on these projects by referring to a document entitled "Major Capital Projects Inventory," produced by the Office of Industrial and Regional Benefits. I would be pleased to provide him with a copy. This report outlines an inventory of hundreds of major projects that are currently on stream or expected to start before 1990. Many of these mega-projects are planned for the Atlantic provinces.

In addition to the mega-projects, which are projects with an estimated value of more than $100 million each, I would also refer the honourable senator to a delayed answer I have given to his colleague Senator Muir. The information included in this response lists hundreds of millions of dollars which this government has invested in Atlantic Canada.

The list of mega-projects requested by the honourable senator is as follows:

- TQ & M Pipeline, (Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec) investment estimated at $2 billion over the next five years with approximately 1,600 person-years of construction for both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and 50 permanent jobs created in both provinces.
- Offshore Labrador Development, investment estimated at $1 billion.
- Point Lepreau Generating Station #1 (New Brunswick) investment estimated at $1.3 billion with an estimated 10,500 person-years of construction and 231 permanent jobs created.
- CF-18 offset program, investment value estimated at $2.9 billion with 60 to 70 thousand jobs by 1995, an example of a contract already awarded was one to IMP Halifax, 60 jobs, $1.7 million investment.

—Offshore Sable Island Gas Development, investment estimated at $2 billion.

—Hibernia Oil Development, investment estimated at $4 billion.

—Lower Churchill Project Phase I, at Muskrat Falls Newfoundland, investment estimated at $1.54 billion with approximately 6,500 construction person-years and 140 permanent jobs created.

—Lower Churchill Project Phase II, at Gull Island, Newfoundland, estimated investment at $1.85 billion with approximately 9,800 person-years of construction and 75 permanent jobs created.

QUESTION: How much has the federal government invested in economic development in the Atlantic provinces and how many jobs have been created?

ANSWER: Honourable senators I would like to respond to a question raised on February 25, 1982 by Senator Muir which concerned economic development investment and job creation in Atlantic Canada.

I would like to provide the honourable senator with an example of some of the federal government's initiatives in Atlantic Canada. The list includes over 20 programs which have been created by the federal government for the benefit of Atlantic Canada. This should in no way be considered a complete list of all the public investment that is taking place in Eastern Canada. It merely provides a sampling of the kinds of initiatives that have been introduced in the Atlantic provinces by the federal government.

I would also include for the honourable senator's information a breakdown of the federal government's job expenditures and number of jobs created.

- Saint John, N.B. drydock—150 construction jobs, 280 permanent, 100 indirect, $12.8 million.
- MITEL, Bouctouche, N.B.—approximately 1,000 new jobs, $15 million.
- Zinc reduction plant, Belledune, N.B.—400 construction jobs, 400 permanent jobs, 400 indirect jobs, $21.75 million.
- Panamax Floating drydock for Halifax—$9.1 million.

- Michelin Tires Canada Ltd. in Waterville and Bridgewater, Nova Scotia—$42 million; 1,850 jobs created.
- Sydney Steel Corporation (SYSCO), Cape Breton—$96.2 million.
- Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program—up to $75 million available annually from 1980-81 through 1982-83.
- Coastal Labrador Development, $34 million in addition to $13.5 investment in Labrador's inshore fishing.
- Magdalen Island Development, $13.7 million.
- Southeast New Brunswick Development, $10 million.
- Prince Edward Island Development, $92.2 million.
- Strait of Canso Development, $30 million.
- Pulp and paper modernization—$30 million to Newfoundland, $17 million to Nova Scotia, $34 million to New Brunswick.
- Newfoundland Forestry Agreement, $52 million.
- New Brunswick Forestry Agreement, $30 million.
- Fisheries expenditures special increase of $42 million.
- Ocean Industries, $24 million.
- Point Aconi, Cape Breton—Prince Mine—estimated 440 direct jobs and estimated 660 indirect jobs, $54 million.
- Donkin-Morien Mine, Cape Breton, an estimated 150 jobs and could create 1200 new jobs, $55 million.
- Saint John, New Brunswick, potash terminal—$22.4 million.

- Newfoundland transportation—$67 million to the Newfoundland Railway—close to $180 million in Newfoundland on a wide range of transportation measures.
- Industrial Labour Adjustment Programme, funds to assist the community of McAdam, New Brunswick and its workers in the logging, veneer and plywood industry.
- Industrial Labour Adjustment Programme, funds to assist the community of Sydney, Nova Scotia and its workers in the primary metal industry.

JOHN CABOT

SEBASTIAN CABOT

UNVEILING OF COMMEMORATIVE PLAQUE IN VENICE, ITALY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege, to draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that on March 25, 1982, on the initiative of the Macdonald Stewart Foundation, an important event will take place in the city of Venice, Italy.

The Canadian Ambassador to Italy, Mr. J. E. G. Hardy, and the Newfoundland Deputy Minister of Culture, Recreation and Youth, Mr. S. F. Manuel, representing the Government of Newfoundland, will be presenting to the Naval Museum of Venice—

An Hon. Senator: Speak slowly. Some honourable senators wish to hear the interpretation.

Senator Bosa: I apologize.

—will be presenting to the Naval Museum of Venice a Coronelli Map dating to 1695 describing the discovery of Newfoundland by John Cabot.

In addition, a plaque, in English and French, will be unveiled. At the top centre there is written "CANADA", and, in Roman numerals, the date 1497.

On the left side, in English, it says:

John Cabot
Venetian and His Son Sebastian Discovered
Newfoundland
in the service of Henry VII of England

And on the right:

Jean Cabot
Vénétien et son
Fils Sébastien
Découvrirent
Terre-Neuve
au service
d'Henri VII Roi
d'Angleterre

In the centre below is:

Erected 1982 by the Province of Newfoundland.

Honourable senators will understand, I am sure, why I rejoice at this initiative, and will also understand why I cannot let the occasion pass without what I hope is not too academic a commentary on the manner in which the navigator's name has been spelled, particularly when this commemorative plaque will be affixed beside one erected by the City of Venice in which the navigator and his son are referred to as Giovanni Caboto and Sebastiano Caboto. I stress the fact that these two plaques are displayed mainly for the information and viewing of the Italian public.

Honourable senators, I stated on a previous occasion in this chamber that both the Hakluyt Society, in their work The Cabot voyages and Bristol discovery under Henry VII, second series No. CXX 1961, and Professor Samuel Eliot Morison, in his recent work The European discovery of America—The Northern Voyages A.D. 500-1600, (New York, Oxford University Press, 1971), support, with documentation, the assertion that the navigator wanted to be known by his name, Giovanni Caboto.

I am not saying that the anglicizing and francization of Caboto's name is totally inappropriate. There are several explanations of how this came about, but it is not my intention to analyze them at this time. I congratulate the Macdonald Stewart Foundation on its endeavours to focus attention on the history of Canada.

My reason for speaking on this subject from time to time is to underline the feeling of pride that will be generated in Canadians of Italian origin by the knowledge that they, too, have roots in this land that go back to the very beginning of the history of Canada. That is why I chose York Caboto as my designation in the Senate, and that is why I persist in making reference to the importance of this historical fact.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, not for a moment do I want to degrade in any way what has been said by Honourable Senator Bosa. I merely wish to say to the Senate that in my opinion, and the opinion of a good many people in the island of Cape Breton, this plaque simply perpetuates a historical error. Most historians now agree that John Cabot made his first landing in North America at a place called Cape North in the island of Cape Breton.

● (1410)

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, if I may address the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I think that this is a question which should be resolved between the two provinces.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): We will leave that to the provinces.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
TABLED

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table a report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States."

Honourable senators, may I have leave to say a few words relative to this report at this time?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, after the delightful interjection by Senator Bosa at the opening of our proceedings, I can only say that I hesitate to go into such a dull and mundane subject as economics. However, it is the lifeblood of a nation and is something that your committee has been wrestling with for some time relative to our relationship with the United States.

Honourable senators, although there were many recommendations contained in volume II of the committee's report on Canada-United States relations, I would draw to your attention the final recommendation, which stated:

The Committee urges governments in Canada, as well as the business and labour communities, to assess without prejudice Canada's present economic prospects, the alternative solutions and their consequences. The Committee recommends that they consider seriously the option of bilateral free trade with the United States.

Taking our own good advice, we then obtained a further order of reference from the Senate in May of 1980, since which time approximately 60 witnesses have appeared before the committee in Canada and, on a study visit to Washington which took place last year, some 20 or 25 Americans knowledgeable in that area also appeared before the committee.

If I may, I will take a moment to review the overall problem as we see it. Every Canadian knows that Canada lives by its trade. Approximately 26 per cent of our gross domestic product is exported every year, and a like amount is imported. Surely ours is one of the largest percentages of the gross national product of any country involved in trade.

Honourable senators will excuse me if, in these general remarks, I use ballpark figures, but it is difficult to avoid doing so since they change from month to month and from year to year. The 26 per cent of our gross national product amounts, in today's terms, to approximately $160 billion worth of trade, in both exports and imports on a world-wide basis. It is significant to note that almost 70 per cent of that amount, or $110 billion, per year is achieved through trade with the United States. In this trade, insofar as goods are concerned, we have a surplus of $5 or $6 billion. That surplus, however, is basically due to our huge exports in the resource field. In invisibles—that is, dividends, transportation, travel and all of the non-hardware goods that we exchange with our trading partners—we end up with a deficit of approximately $7 billion a year on a world-wide basis. This is a net ongoing chronic deficit which is very large when one considers the size of our nation in terms of its population.

The worst news that we must face is that, in end products, our deficit each year is in excess of $20 billion. I believe the figure for this year, although it is not yet confirmed, will be $23 billion. That is the imbalance of payments in our trade in end products.

It should be evident to any Canadian that our resources and resource industries are simply not able to pay both of these deficits—that is, pay for our large deficit in invisibles and also pay for the huge deficit in end products. Neither would it be desirable for us to operate an economy in which we looked only to our resource industries to pay for these huge deficits.

So what should we do? The committee recommends that we strengthen the manufacturing sector at least to the extent of balancing our current accounts deficit. That, from the figures I have just given you, would mean reducing our deficit in manufactured goods and end products by about one-half. If we could do that, with the surplus we have in our resource industries, we would approximately eliminate the balance of payments deficit in our current account so that we would be in a balanced position.

How would we do that? That becomes the problem we must address. The first question I put to you is: What is the real world we live in, in economic terms? Of our total trade we do approximately 11 per cent with the European Community, a conglomeration of approximately 350 million people; about 8 per cent with Japan, 100 million people; and about 70 per cent with the United States, 230 million people. Those areas account for close to 90 per cent of our total trade. So that the rest of the world, leaving Europe, the United States and Japan aside, accounts for slightly over 10 per cent of our trade, and that is if you include our wheat sales, enormous as they are, to China and to Russia. So the problem we have is in the western industrialized world—if I may include Japan when I use the word "western."

The next problem we must face, which presents itself as an ongoing statistic, is the fact that in our trade with Europe approximately 10 per cent of our exports are in manufactured goods; the rest are in resources. When we come to Japan, approximately 3 per cent of our exports are in manufactured goods and the rest are in resources. I come from the west so I am not knocking the resource industries. They are keeping the country going at the moment. But to the United States—you know, that "big, nasty, trading partner" we have immediately below us—68 per cent of our exports are in manufactured goods. So where should we intelligently look for the solution to our problem other than the place where we do 70 per cent of our business, and which takes infinitely more of our exports in manufactured form than our other trading partners, namely, the United States market?

[Senator Bosa.]

I should like to digress for just a moment because the auto pact has been in the news a little bit the last day or two, and it is common for people, when talking about free trade, to say, "Oh, yes, but look at the auto pact; it is not working." The share that Canada had of North American employment in automobiles and parts at the time of the signing of the auto pact was 8 per cent. We now have 11 per cent of the employment, slightly more than our share of the total for the United States and Canada, which has historically been about one-tenth. I would suggest to honourable senators that it is totally unfair to put the blame for the malaise, which exists in the whole industry on both sides of the border because of its non-competitive mode with imports from Japan and Europe, on the fact that the auto pact exists. The auto pact must be looked at in terms of what share Canada has of that North American market in automobiles, however inefficient it may be.

Under the GATT, of which Canada has been a staunch supporter over the years, there have been several negotiating sessions, one of which concluded recently. By 1987, according to figures relative to our trade with the United States, 80 per cent of Canada's exports to the United States will be free of duty, and 15 per cent will attract duty of less than 5 per cent. With our dollar at 80 cents U.S., a 5 per cent tariff is hardly significant enough to call a tariff. These two figures, the 80 per cent and the 15 per cent, total 95 per cent of our exports to the United States. By 1987, 65 per cent of America's products coming into Canada will be duty free and 26 per cent will be under 5 per cent, for a total of 91 per cent. So only 5 per cent of Canada's imports and 9 per cent of its exports will attract any tariff at all.

Therefore, by 1987, under the normal definition of a free trade area in legal and historic terms, we will be in a de facto free trade mode insofar as the United States is concerned. However, without an agreement, this situation will do nothing for us insofar as non-tariff barriers are concerned. We must remember that as tariffs go down, non-tariff barriers have the unfortunate effect of raising their ugly head higher and higher as the ingenuity of man is brought to bear, particularly in a time of recession such as right now, on protectionist measures that can be invented which are not of a tariff mode and which, therefore, escape the penalties of GATT.

So, in the assessment of the committee, by 1987 Canada will find itself in the worst of both possible worlds. We will be without the protection of historic tariffs and without free access to a large market such as our trading partners have in Europe, Japan and the United States. Thus, we shall suffer the costs of free trade without any of the advantages.

If I may just take a moment—and I shall try not to be too long, because I know you want to get on with Question Period—I would like to read a paragraph from page 18 of the report. It says:

The remedies are generally accepted and not particularly controversial: economies of scale are essential; the Canadian manufacturing sector must rationalize; it must specialize in particular product lines instead of a broad diversity of products; it must modernize its production processes and achieve economies of scale and higher productivity rates through long, efficient production runs; it must seek out the areas where Canada has natural advantages.

Where opinions differ is on how to accomplish these changes.

In answer to that question we posed, the committee goes on in the report to recommend that a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States be negotiated so as to gain access for Canadian manufactured goods to the United States and to get control of the non-tariff barriers existing between the two countries, plus what remaining tariffs there will be in 1987. So it is really not the problem it was years ago when people threw up their hands in horror about free trade; nor is it a question of tariffs collapsing and exposing our industry to a non-tariff protective mode, for that is already happening. We must strive to achieve a favourable position in North America. With a total population of over 350 million, every nation in Europe holds such a position.

● (1425)

The report goes on to deal with free trade. Unfortunately, even after many years of debate, this subject causes a lot of people a lot of trouble and, unfortunately, there are people in government, in the press and in the business community who do not readily understand it.

I will not deal at length with this section of the report other than to say that it goes into great detail in distinguishing between a free trade agreement, a common market and a customs union. Put succinctly, at page 27, the report states what free trade is not; that is, it is not a North American common market. People who speak on this subject often use the terms "common market," "customs union," and "free trade" interchangeably, often in one breath and sometimes in one sentence. They are quite different animals. It is not a North American common market; it is not a Canada-United States common market; it is not a proposal for a pooling of energy resources; it is not a proposal for political integration; and it is not a proposal for "continentalism," if that word is used in the pejorative sense rather than in the context of mutual co-operation. When reading the report, I hope you will address yourselves to what free trade is rather than what it is not. I might add that in Volume II we made it clear that such proposals would not involve agriculture.

The other major problem the committee addressed is dealt with in Part VI of the report, which is entitled "The Political Implications: Myth and Fact." We were very concerned with the emotional reaction that this subject often engenders. The report states:

The Committee is convinced that, economically, bilateral free trade is viable, that it would be of real benefit to all regions of Canada and that these advantages are widely recognized. What appears to deter many Canadians from the idea is a deep-seated fear of an erosion of Canadian sovereignty or eventual political integration. This ancient fallacy has dominated Canadian political life since the country was founded.

The government's 1972 'Third Option' paper represented a typical expression of the "inevitability of political union" point of view. It asserted that "free trade areas . . . tend towards a full customs and economic union" and that probably in a Canada-U.S. free trade area Canada would be obliged to seek political union. The claim was baldly stated and on this simple proposition the argument for closer economic ties was rejected. There was no analysis or examination of past experience in other parts of the world. A major Ontario government paper, Interprovincial Economic Co-operation. Towards the Development of a Canadian Common Market went even further:

—the pursuit of free trade with the United States at the expense of an erosion of our ties to the rest of Canada would inevitably lead to the disintegration of our nation.

The committee heard much evidence on this matter. One of the witnesses appearing before us, Professor Peyton Lyon, who has made a world-wide study of this subject, stated that both "history and logic refute the claim that free trade areas inevitably unleash economic forces that drive the participating nations, against their will, on to tighter forms of economic and political union." Documenting his case, Professor Lyon concluded that "far from being typical, there is no single, solitary case of this ever having happened.

The Honourable Robert Stanfield put it very well when he appeared before the committee and stated:

Some people who are strong economic nationalists will dismiss it immediately on, perhaps, emotional grounds; others who are traditional free traders will accept it on their faith and principles; but my belief is that most Canadians are not sufficiently informed on the subject today to have any firm opinion or to be at all certain as to what the indications are. I think there is a lot of educating and a lot of thinking to be done—

The objective of our report is to engender public debate on this subject.

[Senator van Roggen.]

The report goes on to state:

● (1430)

The strongest industrial areas in Canada, both in resource-based and manufacturing sectors, are those with no tariff protection; it is only the weaker manufacturing areas which are protected and if these industries are restructured and strengthened through free access to the U.S. market it could only strengthen the Canadian social and political fabric as well as its economy. Would anyone suggest that Ireland—

We are here speaking of Eire.

—had lost any of its political or cultural independence after it joined the United Kingdom in a bilateral free trade arrangement?

I might say that that was some 15 years ago.

It certainly became economically stronger.

I can go on at length about Finland and its three million people having a free trade agreement with the whole of the European Economic Community and its reasons for doing so, and I could go on at length about Sweden having a free trade agreement with the European Economic Community and not being a member of NATO, maintaining political independence and being a neutral state.

It is an economic matter we are dealing with, not a political question.

Honourable senators, I have taken longer than I should have, but I just wanted to say enough to whet your appetite so that you would indeed study the report.

A notice has already gone to members of the committee—and, of course, all honourable senators are welcome—that there will be a press conference in room 256-S at 4 p.m. relative to the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Honourable Senator Asselin, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—REPORT ON COUP D'ÉTAT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised by Senator Macquarrie yesterday regarding the coup d'état in Guatemala.

Reports from the Canadian Embassy in Guatemala City indicate that a coup d'état by members of the armed forces appears to have been successful.

This information was received just a few moments ago.

Key military and government installations, as well as radio and television facilities, are under control of the armed forces faithful to the coup leaders.

Initial indications are that the coup was bloodless and that it was carried out by a group of young officers who apparently have a wide base of support in military ranks. Their professed aim, in carrying out the coup was to put Guatemala "on the road back to democracy."

The coup leaders have charged that the elections held on March 7 were fraudulent, and they have promised to hold new elections. Meanwhile, they have appointed a three-man junta composed of senior military officers, one of whom was the Christian Democrat Vice-Presidential candidate in the 1974 elections.

The general situation in Guatemala appears to be calm.

With respect to injury to Canadians in the coup d'état, Canadian lives do not appear to be in danger. The situation is being monitored.

As far as policy is concerned, Canada's usual policy is to recognize a government which is effectively in charge and in control of a country, and which undertakes to fulfil its bilateral and multilateral treaty obligations and commitments. We are currently monitoring developments in Guatemala and will decide on our position in the light of these considerations.

While it is too soon to assess what specific political direction the new government will follow, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that he can only express the hope that they will take meaningful action to improve the human rights situation. Canada has repeatedly taken bilateral and multilateral action designed to encourage the Guatemalans to do just that.

EL SALVADOR—RECOGNITION OF GUERRILLA MOVEMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF VENEZUELA

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a media report today indicates that the Venezuelan government recognizes the guerilla movement in El Salvador. Some questions have been asked about Canada's position relative to that.

During recent discussions held in New York between the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, and the Foreign Minister for Venezuela, it was quite clear that Venezuela supports, as Canada does, the government of President Duarte.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that he can only assume that the press report in question is based on a misunderstanding or inaccurate information, but is "having the matter checked", to quote his words.

● (1435)

BANGLADESH—REPORT ON COUP D'ÉTAT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there was another coup d'état yesterday, this one in Bangladesh.

The military authorities, led by Lieutenant General Ershad, the army chief of staff, have taken control of the Government of Bangladesh.

The Bangladesh National Party Government, led by President Sattar, which won the national election held in November, has been dismissed by the military leaders.

Lieutenant General Ershad has said that the military have taken control because of the ineffectiveness and corruption of the previous government. There does not appear to be any particular ideological factor behind the military takeover.

Over recent months the military authorities have exerted an increasing influence within the governmental apparatus. The coup d'état was not unanticipated. An overt move to take power by military leaders has been regarded as a possibility for some time.

So far, there have been no reports of violence related to the military takeover. As far as we are aware, the small Canadian community in Bangladesh has not been adversely affected. However, persons planning to visit Bangladesh in the near future may wish to consider delaying their departure until the situation is clarified.

Canada has maintained good relations with successive military and civilian governments of Bangladesh. Since Bangladesh gained independence in 1971, Canada has maintained a very substantial aid program. Bangladesh is one of the world's poorest countries and continues to require substantial food aid and other forms of assistance.

Honourable senators, these are the only two coup d'états so far, but the day is not over.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I thank the government leader for his answer, which is a veritable plethora of information. I know that we all rejoice that the coup d'état in Guatemala was accomplished without bloodshed. I am sure we hope that the promise of today will be borne out in future months and years—if it lasts that long—but I think we have noticed that the early days of promise of unconstitutional, as in constitutional, changes of government are not always followed by days of fulfillment.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REPORTED ANNUAL RATE INCREASES

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I believe last week the Vice-President of Canada Post Corporation said the corporation would probably impose yearly rate increases through to 1986, with the next increase coming as early as January or February of 1983. Has either the Post Office or the government done a study of the amount of business lost as a result of these rate increases and, if so, could the Leader of the Government table a report?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question. While he is seeking that information, could the Leader of the Government inform us whether it is the philosophy of the government that it is proper for a monopoly like Canada Post Corporation to increase its rates annually at the same time as it appears to be flexing its muscles and threatening legal action against those who are seeking alternative delivery methods?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice. I do not have that information at hand, and I would not wish to comment until I have read the purported statement.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL REPORT TO SENATORS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I notice that Senator Marshall is not in his place this afternoon, but there was a suggestion that he had not received a copy of the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs. In fact, that report was tabled on March 11, and when Senator Marshall is back in his place—he may be out of the chamber temporarily—I will raise that matter with him.

AGRICULTURE

REGULATION OF RED MEAT INDUSTRY

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have a question I should like to direct to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, seeing that the rest of his governmental colleagues are not in their seats. Can he confirm that the Minister of Agriculture, one of his colleagues in the other place, has recently said publicly words to the effect that the government must impose supply management to regulate the red meat industry?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would not wish to answer that question in the absence of the very learned and expert Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The irony of that statement should appear in Hansard.

● (1440)

Senator Smith: Perhaps the honourable gentleman will undertake to make certain that his colleague, the minister to whom he referred, does, in fact, take note of the question.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government will also inquire whether or not the policy of imposing control on the red meat industry is, in fact, a policy of the government.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do know that the government remains concerned about the plight of beef producers in this country, and recognizes the fact that the industry is facing severe difficulties at the present time, having been caught in the cost spiral. However, the question will be taken as notice on behalf of my colleague, Senator Argue, and an answer produced as quickly as possible.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY—ALLEGED LOSS

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government also be kind enough to bring to the attention of his colleague, Senator Argue, the question of whether or not it is correct that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency has recently announced a loss of some $4.7 million during the last year?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that information will be sought.

GRAIN

CROWSNEST RATES—GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATOR—TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, to take note of a question for his colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, whose absence I personally deplore. I hope that he will be here tomorrow. I shall not ask all of my questions today, but there is one that I should like to put.

What instructions has the government given to Dr. Clay Gilson with respect to his inquiry into the Crow? I am particularly anxious to know whether he is limiting his audience to producers and producers' associations, or whether he will allow other people to discuss with him the economic impact of the Crow.

I raise the question because the information given to me is that Dr. Gilson is limiting himself, at least at this stage of his inquiry, to producers and producers' organizations, and that other groups, which have a very marked interest in economic developments that will flow from the Crow, are not to be heard. My inquiry concerns whether or not they will be heard before Dr. Gilson completes his report.

I would also like the minister to tell us what role the federal government sees for provincial government intervention with respect to the Crow discussions.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the honourable senator has asked some important questions, which will be taken as notice. I regret the absence from the chamber this afternoon of my ministerial colleagues. They are all engaged in matters relating to the public interest.

Senator Roblin: I hope they are, because this is a matter of public interest in this house. While we do not expect ministers to be present all of the time, I hope that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board will be present tomorrow, because there are a number of questions that some of us would like to ask concerning agricultural policy.

TRANSPORT

CP AIR—DISCOUNT FARES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information concerning the Skybus service, the subject of a question asked by Senator Marshall on March 17.

The Canadian Transport Commission advises that the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission has permitted CP Air Skybus fares to become effective March 19, 1982 and to remain effective until October 31, 1982, despite reservations on the merits to the public, CP Air and other carriers.

The committee will continue investigation of the CP Air Skybus fares and other very low-priced fares with the intent of reaching a decision by October 31, 1982.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on March 18, Senator Bielish and Senator Muir asked questions concerning United States weapons testing in Canada. Senator Bielish's question concerned the testing of U.S. weapons in the province of Alberta and other areas. She asked whether the tests would take place in north-eastern Alberta.

I can confirm that the proposed testing of the Cruise missiles will partially take place over northern Alberta.

The Cruise missiles will be launched from the high Arctic and the flight path will cross parts of the Northwest Territories, northeastern British Columbia, northern Alberta, and will touch western Saskatchewan. No other provinces east of those areas are mentioned.

There have been no formal consultations with provinces or interested groups. The reason for that, I have been advised, is that Canada has been involved in delicate negotiations with a foreign country. It was felt that consultations with the provinces or groups referred to by Senator Bielish would result in the negotiations becoming public knowledge, which might prejudice the conclusion of an agreement. The final agreement will not be a secret, and the provinces concerned will be informed and briefed soon after the agreement has been concluded.

No formal studies concerning the impact on people, the environment or wildlife were conducted. However, all of those questions have been examined and discussed.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that we can safely go forward with the testing without risk to the health or safety of people and wildlife and without damaging the environment.

I have been provided with assurances, honourable senators, that extensive and detailed in-flight safety measures have been put in place so that there will be no risk during the flight of those missiles.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What happens when they come down?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in response to Senator Muir's question, I can say that this is a framework agreement for all sorts of projects, of which the Cruise missile testing is only one. Insofar as the testing of the Cruise missiles is concerned, Canada will be providing facilities and we will be staffing some of them. Canadian forces may be more involved in future projects under this agreement.

When I referred to extensive in-flight safety measures, I can assure honourable senators that they are varied and extremely extensive, and that every effort, I am assured, will be made to ensure that if anything goes wrong with those vehicles, however they are described—

An Hon. Senator: You will resign.

Senator Perrault: —there will be an absolute minimum of damage.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Minimum!

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable gentleman for his response. Does he mean that the Canadian Armed Forces will operate in an integrated way with the American forces in the testing of the Cruise missiles?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in the briefing given to me, there was the suggestion that the testing method is virtually fail-safe. Concerning the degree of involvement of the Canadian Armed Forces, I must take that question as notice. I do not have a detailed briefing on that subject, but further information will be obtained.

Senator Muir: As a supplementary, I was thinking of sovereignty. It is only right, despite the fact that an arrangement has been made between Canada and the United States, that if a foreign power comes into this country it should work in conjunction and co-operation with the Canadian Armed Forces. I hope and trust that is the arrangement.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, certainly the Canadian national interest will be protected, and I am sure that there will be Canadian Armed Forces involvement to provide certainty on that point. However, I will take the question as notice.

Senator Muir: As a further supplementary, am I assured that the Leader of the Government will search out the matter further. I would recall to his attention the Bomarc situation of some years ago when Canadian Armed Forces were not allowed access to anything over which the Americans had control. I would not want to see such a situation repeated in Canada, and I hope that our people will have as much control as any foreign power in our country.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can appreciate the concerns expressed by Senator Muir, Senator Bielish and others. It should be made clear—and I am sure honourable senators are aware of the fact—that the missiles will be unarmed. There will be no nuclear warheads in them. The situation is very much in the category of testing new aircraft. They are, in fact, flying vehicles, in the category of aircraft, I understand.

● (1450)

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I realize, of course, that they will be unarmed. Despite that fact, the point I am making is that our forces should have complete access to any part of this operation, wherever it may be held in Canada, and that they should not be told that they are not allowed to go into certain places or to do certain things. I hope that will be taken care of.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the views expressed by Honourable Senator Muir will certainly be conveyed to the proper authorities.

BUDGET TAX MEASURES

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, pursuant to notice of yesterday, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the following:

- (i) Budget tax changes tabled by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on November 12, 1981, and the impact thereof on taxpayers;
- (ii) documents tabled December 18, 1981, by the said Minister of Finance in the House of Commons relating to some enumerated Budget tax measures announced on November 12, 1981, and describing the tax treatment proposed to be accorded thereto;
- (iii) the proposals made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on December 18, 1981, for adjustments in some measures contained in the Budget resolutions;
- (iv) the further proposals made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on December 18, 1981, for referral of some tax measures contained in the Budget resolutions to a parliamentary committee as follows:

Rules relating to corporate re-organization, taxation of whole life insurance, charitable foundations, retirement allowances and work in progress; and

- (v) any bills based on the Budget tax changes in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate and any other matters relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment, let me note that the two sittings of the Senate this week have been of exceptionally short duration. However, honourable senators will not need to be reminded that a good deal of committee activity is taking place this week, even to the extent that there was a certain amount of conflict yesterday, and there are two committee meetings this afternoon plus quite a number tomorrow.

Furthermore, now that the other place has resumed its sittings we will, of course, be receiving some business from there that will require our attention next week.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the deputy leader's comments. There were five committee meetings yesterday, there are two this afternoon, and tomorrow morning the Internal Economy Committee and the Transport and Communications Committee are both scheduled to meet at 11.15. The Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee is very severe, and he does not appreciate seeing members of his committee leave to go to another meeting, for which I do not blame him. I thought that something was going to be done about this kind of thing.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am grateful to Senator Muir for raising this point. We have attempted to ensure that not too many committees meet at the same time. In particular, we have tried to control the number of committees meeting while the Senate is sitting. Perhaps not enough attention has been paid to the problem of overlapping membership when two committees meet at the same time. So far, at least, it has been impossible to avoid such simultaneous sittings.

At the next meeting of committee chairmen we should consider the question of such overlappings of membership, which put not only chairmen of committees in an embarrassing position but also the senators who find themselves required in two places at the same time.

I thank Senator Muir for raising this matter. We will look into it and see what can be done to solve the problem.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 25, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 3881.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 30, 1982, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should like to explain that March 31 will be next week, and this is a rather important date for supply. We are expecting a bill for, and I shall use the English term, interim supply.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): In French the term is: crédits provisoires.

Senator Frith: Thank you, Senator Flynn. So probably, after the report by the Committee on National Finance, we shall be presenting votes for the supplementary estimates (E), as well as interim supply for the first three months starting this April 1.

Committees will also be sitting next week, with four meetings on March 30, one scheduled for Wednesday, March 31, and five committee meetings on Thursday, April 1.

I expect we shall have enough to do next week.

Senator Flynn: Ha!

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would ask the deputy leader to tell us the status of Bill C-97, which, if memory serves me correctly, amends the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. It is still in the House of Commons, and I suspect it is unlikely to reach us before March 31. There has been some intimation that it must be dealt with by that date. I do not share that opinion, but I would like some information from my honourable friend as to what the financial implications are, and whether there can be a delay of, say, 15 days during which this bill might be discussed at our level.

● (1410)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I can give some information and my understanding, but I cannot say that either is absolutely copper-fastened from a legal point of view.

Senator Roblin is correct when he says there is an impression abroad that the bill has to be passed and proclaimed by March 31 in order for cheques to be issued. My understanding is that there is support for that strict view, but that, in fact, the cheques do not go out until later.

That brings us to the question of whether such distribution can be made by Governor General's warrants. The better opinion is that it cannot. That then leaves the question of whether there is a problem if the bill is not made law by proclamation before, say, the middle of next month, though after March 31. I understand if it comes to that it will be all right.

To apply the situation to this year's calendar, it seems to me that, if what I have said is correct—that is, that it is possible to have the provisions take effect so that the funds are distributed with proclamation after March 31—in practical terms it must still be passed before Easter. If either the Senate or the House of Commons were to adjourn for Easter week, the bill must be dealt with before then.

At a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I asked that we be given an opinion on this subject. I hope to have that before the weekend in order to clarify legally the information I have just given.

Senator Roblin: I shall be glad to have that information, honourable senators, because a Governor General's warrant would not be applicable when Parliament is sitting. Therefore, we could not rely on that.

On the other hand, I do not want the Senate to be squeezed, as very often happens, between some artificial deadline and the dilatory motions which lead up to a bill being introduced in this house. I would appreciate it if my honourable friend ensured that we were not put in that position.

Senator Frith: My honourable friend's point is well taken. I do not think we will be able totally to avoid being squeezed. However, I agree that, if we must be, at least, partially squeezed, it should not be an artificial squeeze or a squeeze produced by an artificial date. Let us ascertain the real date.

Senator Roblin: If I am squeezed, I am going to shout.
Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Côtteau be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Hastings on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is directed, as the Leader of the Government would say, to the distinguished and learned Minister responsible for Economic, Regional, National and any other kind of Development!

● (1415)

[English]

I hope the minister read yesterday's Hansard in which one of his colleagues was described in that fashion by the Leader of the Government who was wearing a smile at the time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That would not show on the record.

Senator Flynn: I made sure it would appear in Hansard because I made mention of the fact that the irony of that statement should appear in the record.

[Senator Frith.]

My question is with respect to the statement by the architect of many Liberal campaign successes, Senator Davey, who said recently, "The unemployment figures alarm me more than the inflation figures." I am wondering whether this statement is reflective of a lessening of the government's determination to bring inflation under control at almost any cost, even at the cost of political disaster.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition, of course, is not asking for factual information, which I am accustomed to giving and usually give, but rather for an opinion. I am not sure—

Senator Flynn: You usually give opinions, too.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is never short of opinions.

Senator Olson: He certainly would not want me to comment on the relative difficulty that is raised by either inflation or unemployment with respect to Senator Davey's comment, but I can tell him that the government is concerned about both. We also believe that unemployment will be exacerbated, or the difficulty will be worse, if some attempt is not made to get inflation down to a level lower than it is in Canada today, and, indeed, to a level comparable to that enjoyed by some of our major trading partners so that our competitive position in those international markets is maintained or strengthened.

As my honourable friend knows, the decrease in the rate of inflation has been somewhat greater in the United States, by far our most important trading partner, in the last few months than it has been in Canada. Indeed, the difference in some parts of the inflation factor is as much as 4 percentage points less in the United States than it is in Canada. That causes us a great deal of concern because, obviously, in the longer term, it will weaken our competitive position in the international market, whether it is trade only between our two countries or in the broader spectrum of the international market.

I do not believe that one can be separated from the other. If you look at it in the context which I have just tried to explain, both are very closely inter-related, and the government is very concerned about both the level of employment and the level of inflation that is diminishing our competitive position in the international market.

Senator Flynn: Some people have interpreted Senator Davey's statement as indicating that the Liberal Party or the present government should move to the left a little more to retain office. Of course, in Liberal terms, any change of doctrine or perspective is justified to maintain the party in power. I am wondering if the minister, who is considered a right-wing member of cabinet, is in agreement with this proposal, and also whether he is satisfied that he has won the battle against the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on FIRA.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is a lot of assertion in the preamble to the question—as a matter of fact, there are more than one question—that is absolutely unfounded—for example, whether or not the position of the government is a swing to the left or to the right, or whatever. The position of the government—

Senator Murray: —is frozen.

Senator Olson: —is that we are very concerned about unemployment levels and the rate of growth in this country that will produce more employment. I do not believe it is a matter of whether one is more to the right or the left. What we do in this party is look at the problem squarely, in the real world, and do all things and such things as are necessary to find a satisfactory solution to it.

Senator Flynn: The problem is your party staying in office.

Senator Olson: I expect that my honourable friend will understand one or two things at least, because of the actions that he and his group took between May and December, 1979.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Olson: That is, if you want to stay in office, you want to at least try, and be perceived as trying, to do the best you can under the circumstances. The kind of fumbling and bumbling that went on during that nine-month period destroyed any confidence that the Canadian people had in them, and they treated them appropriately on February 18, 1980.

Senator Roblin: Do you want to take your budget to the people?

Senator Flynn: Are you prepared to face an election at this time?

An Hon. Senator: You are the number three party at this time.

Senator Olson: My honourable friends opposite know that one of the fundamental requirements of being in government is that they should at least have learned how to count.

Senator Flynn: That's all you ever do.

Senator Olson: So far as the other part of the question is concerned, as to how I am perceived, and my honourable friend's repetition of assertions he may have read that I am some kind of small "c" conservative, I can tell him directly, without any faltering or interpretation from others, that nothing could be further from the truth.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the same minister? Is one reason for the better inflation-control performance of the United States is that it chose a world price policy for petroleum rather than the sheltered price policy adopted by Canada?

Senator Olson: If we had followed the kind of policy that my honourable friend is suggesting, all that we could have expected was to have a higher inflation rate some time ago. It was well known by all the governments that participate in that agreement that we opted, and agreed to opt, for a graduated increase in the very wide swings in energy prices on the international market—and, of course, there is a factor involved in that. But we could have had it somewhat earlier and added difficulties to our economy much earlier than was the case. I do not think that even in retrospect—and the Conservative Party is great at having retrospective vision.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: They are always smarter after the fact than before. Sometimes it is a good question whether they are as smart or as perceptive, even after the fact, as the party on this side are before the fact. But my honourable friend can figure it out pretty clearly that if prices had risen somewhat more rapidly prior to now, obviously we would have had higher numbers in the inflationary effect. It does not take a great brain or much calculation to figure that out.

Senator Balfour: Do I take it that the answer to my question is yes?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator can take as the answer to his question, following a careful examination of the words I used in my reply, that it is not yes.

Hon. C. William Doody: I have a supplementary question for the same minister relating to the comparison between the inflation fight and the unemployment problem. What level of unemployment is the government willing to accept in its fight against inflation? How many people will be allowed to remain unemployed until the inflation problem is solved?

• (1425)

The government may win its battle, and bring inflation down to 4 per cent or less, but by then there will be nobody in Canada working, so what will be the point?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the present rate of inflation and of unemployment is unacceptable to the government, and we have mounted a campaign to lower both as rapidly as possible.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, obviously I did not make myself clear. I did not ask what the government's perception of the present rates was—

Senator Olson: You asked what was acceptable.

Senator Doody: Yes, I asked what was acceptable. Can the minister tell me how many Canadians will be permitted to be unemployed in the government's fight against inflation? What is the level? What is the ceiling? Will the minister tell me that?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my answer of a few minutes ago accurately describes the government's position with respect to both of those questions.

Senator Doody: Is the minister saying, then, in effect, that he does not know how many Canadians will be allowed to join the ranks of the unemployed, or is the minister telling me that he is afraid to tell us that?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, we would like the unemployment levels to be much lower than they are now, and I can read out a list of programs that we have put in place to attempt to achieve such a lowering. We have also adopted a fiscal and monetary stance that we hope will reduce inflation, lead to more investment, and enhance economic activity in this country, which in turn would lower the levels of unemployment.

Senator Doody: The honourable minister should enter a dancing contest. He manages to dance all around the question and never provides a reasonable answer.

The fight against inflation does not seem to be working all that well. The consumer price index rose in February, and the inflation factor is still rising, as is the unemployment rate. Since inflation and unemployment are both on the increase, obviously there is something wrong with the government's programs. Can the minister tell us if he has any solutions, or any other approaches to bring forward, in 25,000 words or less?

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators. There are problems in the world economy today. No one disputes that. It is interesting to note, however, that of the OECD countries, Canada has done better, in 1981, than any of the others except one, that one being Japan. You know that we are a country that is heavily involved in international trade with respect to a large part of our economic activity, and when there are difficulties in that trade, a slowing-down of some of that activity, of course we are involved, because between a quarter and a third of our total GNP depends on that market. I think Canadians should take some pride in the fact that we have done better than all of our major western trading partners, except Japan.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I wonder if the minister is suggesting that the message be conveyed to the more than one million unemployed Canadians that they are lucky to be living here, or is saying that they should move to Japan? What is the significance of telling me that? That does not deal with Canada's unemployment problem, nor does it deal with Canada's inflation problem. Is the minister saying that the government has no control over these things because they are out of control in Europe or Japan? What is this government doing about it?

Senator Olson: Well, it seems to me that it ought to be fairly simple for my honourable friend to relate to the very heavy reliance of Canada on the international market. If he is not capable of doing that, then I do not think he should talk to anybody, or try to explain anything, because he obviously has no concept of it himself. But it does seem to me that it is fairly simple to deduce that if we have done better than most of our trading partners, Canadians ought to take some satisfaction in that situation.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the marvellous inflation performance of the Government of Canada has brought the dollar down to about 81 cents and caused the Bank of Canada to spend about $110 million in the last day or so to support the dollar, will the minister indicate to what extent the government intends to support the dollar? Is it prepared to authorize the Bank of Canada to continue to deplete its reserves in order to support the Canadian dollar indefinitely, or is it going to allow it to drop even further?

● (1430)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am sure that even Honourable Senator Murray knows that he would consider any reply to that question an impropriety—that is, he would not expect the government, in an exchange of questions, to try to give instructions to the Bank of Canada. I am sure that he and his colleagues would be the first ones to scream foul—

Senator Frith: "Resign."

Senator Olson: —if we started to indicate how the Governor of the Bank of Canada should manage the Bank of Canada.

I hope that he understands my reply and will take back his question, because I am sure that he knows that he ought not to have asked that question in the first place.

Senator Murray: Perhaps I can ask the minister a supplementary question, since he finds my opening question so uncongenial and disagreeable.

Senator Olson: The right word is "improper".

Senator Murray: Does the minister agree that the recent fall of the Canadian dollar—necessitating the outlay of $100 million by the Bank of Canada to support it—is, in fact, due to the relatively high inflation rate in Canada?

Senator Olson: I think that we should wait until we receive a report from the Governor of the Bank of Canada on the level of his intervention in that market. Perhaps we should ask him his reasons for doing that.

I do not believe I ought to try to give reasons for the action of the Bank of Canada without first making some inquiries. I must tell the honourable senator that I have not made any such inquiries, but I am sure that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has good reasons for doing what he has done, in line with his responsibility to look at those things.

Senator Murray: I believe the minister misunderstood my question. I did not ask the minister to speculate on why the Governor of the Bank of Canada took the particular action he did take in the past couple of days. My question is: Does the minister agree that the obvious weakness in the Canadian dollar—and it has dropped to approximately 81 American cents in the past day or two—is due to the relatively poor inflation performance of Canada vis-à-vis the United States?

Senator Olson: I will obtain an opinion from those involved in that.

Senator Murray: You are involved in that.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is doing exactly what I suspected he was trying to do when he asked his question a few minutes ago. He is trying to get an opinion from me, agreeing or disagreeing, with the intervention of the Bank of Canada. I am sorry, I am not going to be sucked in by that.

QUEBEC

CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE—PUBLIC OPINION POLL—REQUEST FOR RESULT

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Another objective question.

Senator Murray: My question is with respect to the poll the Canadian Unity Information Office took in mid-January in the province of Quebec, partial results of which have been published in La Presse.

Would the minister undertake, in the spirit of the freedom of information legislation, to table the results of that poll in the Senate?

I ask that question because a spokesman for the Canadian Unity Information Office was quoted in the newspapers as saying that the government would not release the results of the poll.

In any event, will the minister undertake to let us see immediately a copy of the questionnaire that was used so that we may know what questions the Canadian Unity Information Office, in the name of the federal government, is asking the population of the province of Quebec?

Senator Perrault: Of course, the taking of polls by governments, be they federal, provincial or municipal, is not an uncommon thing. The question will be taken as notice.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I did not suggest that the taking of polls was unusual. I simply wanted to remind the minister that the previous government, the Conservative government, undertook, in the spirit of freedom of information, even before that legislation was introduced, to make public the results of any public opinion poll taken by the government. I am asking for the same undertaking from the minister. I am asking him, in particular, to release the results of that poll taken in Quebec in mid-January, parts of which have already been leaked, for whatever reason, to the Montreal newspaper La Presse.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—ANNEXATION OF WEST BANK—ATTITUDE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, if my colleagues have finished their interrogations, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Yesterday the leader, in an expansive answer, dealt with current political developments in Guatemala, El Salvador and Bangladesh. At the same time—indeed, at this time—there is another part of the world where young people are being shot to death, elected officials are being deposed, and the threat of illegal annexation is being flaunted, namely, the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River. Can the minister indicate whether the Government of Canada has made known to the representative of the friendly state of Israel that it opposes both the repression of the Palestinians and any annexation of the West Bank? I ask this in light of the Canadian government's stated view that it does not consider the legitimate boundaries of the state of Israel to encompass the territories conquered in the 1967 war. I also ask this as a man of peace, as I am sure the minister is as well, in the hope that events in the Middle East will not become so cataclysmic as to involve us all in a very gruesome conflict of arms.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. I do have, however, some information with respect to the Canadian position on the West Bank situation. We deplore the sharp increase in tension that has developed in recent weeks in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip leading to the loss of life, injuries and disruption in normal daily activity.

We are concerned about the cumulative effect of the prolonged closing of Bir Zeit University, the dismissal of the mayors of El Bireh, Ramallah and Nablus, as well as the demonstrations and general strikes.

The situation, once again, points to the need for a negotiated resolution of the dispute, the withdrawal of Israel from territories occupied in 1967, and peace and secure borders for all states in the area.

The government does not recognize the validity of Israel's annexation of East Jerusalem. The status of Jerusalem must be determined by negotiation in the context of an overall settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute.

The government opposes unilateral Israeli actions in East Jerusalem which are designed to predetermine the status of the city. The government will maintain its present policy and practices regarding East Jerusalem, including the avoidance of official contacts with the Israeli authorities there.

The other information requested by Honourable Senator Macquarrie will be sought as quickly as possible and brought to the Senate.

Senator Macquarrie: I thank the leader for that answer, which, although an interim one, is satisfactory to me. I hope he will be able to indicate whether or not the government is communicating its views to the friendly state of Israel.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON PURCHASERS OF WHOLE LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information in answer to questions concerning taxation of life insurance which were raised by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz on February 24.

The senator's questions are based on an illustration given by the Life Underwriters Association of Canada in its November brief to the Minister of Finance. The illustration does not contain sufficient information to determine the accuracy of the tax calculations. For example, it would be necessary to know the assumptions about the dividend scale and the interest rate underlying the policy.

In any event, the policy used in the illustration is not a $25,000 policy, but one worth over $100,000. The death benefit starts out at $25,000, but the policyholder is assumed to use all of his policy dividends to buy additional insurance so that, by age 73, the death benefit exceeds $130,000. If this policy generates high amounts of taxable income, it is because it is a very high savings policy.

The honourable senator stated that a person taking out this policy at age 25 will have paid approximately $28,000 in tax by age 73. This seems like a lot, but the same person investing just $80 a year in a bank account accumulating 10 per cent interest would pay $29,000 in tax over the same period. When savings accumulate over a long period of time—48 years in this case—a great amount of interest is earned, and, therefore, a large amount of tax is paid.

● (1440)

With growth in incomes, however, large amounts of tax paid far off in the future can amount to very little in terms of today's dollars. In the example created by the Canadian Life Underwriters Association, the person is shown as paying over $5,500 in tax 48 years after the policy is purchased. If, for example, incomes rise at 8 per cent a year over the period, paying $5,500 that far in the future will be just as affordable as paying only $138 now. I might also state that nobody has to worry about paying large amounts of tax now since the budget proposal affects only policies issued after November 12, 1981, and it takes many years for sizeable amounts of investment income to build up.

I think that should allay some of the concerns of people presently owning policies.

In regard to the honourable senator's other question, I can state for the minister that the Department of Insurance was consulted in the preparation of the budget, and has been consulted frequently since the budget was issued.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

U.S. WEAPONS TESTING IN CANADA

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday, March 24, Senator Muir asked a question concerning the participation of the Canadian forces in the testing of Cruise missiles. I think the answer to this question will be of interest to other honourable senators as well.

Canada is providing facilities for the tests and has agreed to staff some of them. The staff people would obviously be from the armed forces.

It is not an integrated project so far as the Canadian forces are concerned. The agreement in this case could be likened to a rental agreement by which the United States is renting our space—our real estate, I suppose—and facilities for an agreed-upon amount of time. We would be proceeding under this agreement on a project-by-project basis. Access to test results, for example, might be a condition of agreement to a project where such test results are of interest to us.

This is clearly not the same as the Bomarc situation alluded to by Senator Muir. If we want access, we can make that part of the conditions of agreement for specific projects. However, it must be emphasized that the conditions set out in this and future agreements are fully under Canadian control. Canada establishes the terms and conditions for each and every project.

Again I want to emphasize the point I attempted to make yesterday, when I said that the Cruise missiles are not armed, have no nuclear warheads, and that in that respect, so far as the action end is concerned, are dummies.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I thank the leader for his response. He keeps re-emphasizing that these Cruise missiles, unlike the Bomarc situation, will not be armed. We know that. The only thing I can say in view of his response to my questions is that we shall await the developments to see if Canadian Armed Forces personnel are allowed access to any part of this operation or, indeed, every part of this operation. Again I want to reiterate that we must retain our sovereignty. If we make an arrangement with a foreign country, however friendly it may be, it is only right that our people have access to any part of that operation.

CONSIDERATION OF VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States", tabled in the Senate on 24th March, 1982.—(Honourable Senator van Roggen).

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have nothing at the moment to add to what I said yesterday. I would ask that this order stand in the name of Senator Asselin.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 30, at 8 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT
FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1982

MARCH 25, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the Supplementary Estimates (E) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982 were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Thursday, March 18, 1982, examined the said Supplementary Estimates (E) and reports as follows:

The Committee was authorized by the Senate as recorded in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of March 18, 1982 to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the Supplementary Estimates (E) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982.

In obedience to the foregoing, your Committee examined the Supplementary Estimates (E) and heard evidence from the following: From the Treasury Board: the Honourable D. J. Johnston, President; Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary; Mr. Jean-Jacques Moreau, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch.

These Supplementary Estimates (E) total $959.4 million. The budgetary expenditures total $861 million of which $267 million are statutory items and $593 million represent funds for which Parliament is being asked to provide new authority. The non-budgetary expenses, that is to say, loans, investments, and advances amount to $98.5 million. The total Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982 are now increased to $70,109 million.

The Committee questioned the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Johnston, at some length regarding the operations of the envelope system of expenditure control which has now been fully operational for roughly one year. The Committee was particularly interested in the manner in which supplementary estimates are handled within this envelope system.

In response to questions, Mr. Johnston emphasized strongly that the government's actual expenditures would in fact fall within the total level specified by the Minister of Finance in the budget of last fall. He further explained that the changes in departmental spending plans indicated by these supplementary estimates would have been subject to consideration by the various envelope Committees. In some instances, such as those involving new programs or expanded activities, the resources would be made available from 'policy reserves' which have been allocated to each envelope according to the government's priorities. Where additional expenditures were necessitated due to higher costs than anticipated, 'operating reserves' are available within the envelopes. While this Committee recognizes the need for such reserves, we are also concerned that they not become so large as to allow the discipline imposed by the envelope system to be breached.

The President of the Treasury Board also noted that significant progress was being made, through the program evaluation process, in examining existing government programs and budgets within the envelope framework. At present, the envelope operation focuses on new programs and expenditures, but this should be expanded in the near future to include many more existing operations.

Last fall, the Committee examined and reported on Supplementary Estimates (D) which concerned the payments related to loan guarantees made by the Crown on behalf of the Consolidated Computer Company. These payments amounted to over $90 million, and at the time of our examination we were assured by the Minister of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Gray, that the government would conduct an examination of this particular case. It is now the understanding of this Committee that such an examination has taken place, a report has been prepared, and the case has been referred to the Department of Justice by the Secretary of the Treasury Board to determine if legal action may be taken against individuals named in the report.

We also know that portions of this report have been leaked to the press and have been the subject of debate both in the other place and in the Senate. At the time of our previous examination, we asked to receive a copy of the report for further consideration. As we have not yet received such a report, we asked the President of the Treasury Board if one would soon be made available. He advised us that he would consider making the report available, but was concerned about possible breaches of confidence involved in such a release.

We believe strongly that it is in the best public interest to make available to Members of Parliament and the public the findings of this examination of the losses related to the Consolidated Computer Company, and we recommend that this be done as expeditiously as possible.

Our reasons for setting forward this recommendation are first because we are concerned that important aspects of the Crown's control of its various investments and guarantees may be faulty and conducive to abuse, as the Consolidated Computer Company case may illustrate, and that the incomplete leaked news reports may have unfairly damaged the reputations of individuals named therein. We would hope that the government will comply with this request in an open manner, in accordance with the spirit of freedom of information.

Our concerns regarding the Consolidated Computer problem were amplified by the presence in these estimates of provisions for the expansion by ninefold, of the loan guarantees available to Canadair Ltd., (from $150 million to $1,350 million). We are not as yet satisfied that in this, or other instances of this nature, the Crown's interests are adequately safeguarded through its rights to appoint members to the boards of directors, or through the government's ongoing monitoring of the activities of these companies. Our concern is compounded by the use, under the signature of the Minister of Finance, of 'letters of comfort' in addition to loan guarantees.

The Committee has decided to pursue these issues through further discussions with the President of the Treasury Board during our consideration of the Main Estimates, 1982-83. We therefore request the President of the Treasury Board to return before this Committee to discuss the issues involved in the government's ongoing support of certain firms, including Canadair Ltd. and de Havilland. Specifically, we ask the President to prepare background material for the use of this Committee relating to the appointment and responsibility of the directors of those firms which are Crown Corporations or heavily supported by the Crown, the need for and processes related to the Crown's provision of loan guarantees, and the use of letters of comfort. We would ask that such background material be available to the Committee as soon as possible to permit the Committee adequate time for prior study.

Treasury Board supplied the Committee with a list giving additional explanations for the $1 Votes included in Supplementary Estimates (E) which is attached as an Appendix to this Report.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT,
Chairman.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT

APPENDIX I

List of $1 Votes in Supplementary Estimates (E), 1981-82

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E) 1981-82

The 33 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix I, according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an "*".

A. Seventeen votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates).

B. Seven votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates).

C. Four votes which amend previous Appropriation Acts (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II).

D. Four votes which authorize increases in the statutory limits of Revolving Funds (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II).

E. One vote which authorizes a Corporation to borrow as an Agent of Her Majesty (An explanation is provided in Appendix II).

APPENDIX II

ADDITIONAL EXPLANATIONS

Category C—Amendment of Previous Appropriation Acts

Energy Mines and Resources—Eldorado Nuclear Limited

Vote L107e—Authority is requested to:

- increase the borrowing limit of the Corporation from $280 million to $600 million;
- provide the Corporation with the ability to refinance existing borrowings and draw down new loans within the proposed limit of $600 million; and
- provide an expiry date for the authority.

Explanation—Eldorado Nuclear Limited requires Parliamentary authority to increase its borrowing authority. The Corporation has already used $198 million of the present borrowing authority of $280 million. New net cash requirements of the Corporation and its subsidiary Company total $270 million for 1982. The borrowing limit must therefore, be increased to finance 1982 proposed expenditures and the completion of the capital projects for 1983 estimated at $129 million. In addition, it provides for refinancing within the borrowing limits. It also declares an expiry date of December 31, 1988.

Since, the Corporation does not have its own act changes in the borrowing limit have previously been affected by Appropriation Acts as follows:

- Appropriation Act No. 4, 1977-78—authorized the borrowing of up to $30 million from the private market;
- Appropriation Act No. 3, 1980-81—increased the borrowing authority from $30 million to $130 million; and
- Appropriation Act No. 4, 1980-81—increased the borrowing authority from $30 million to $280 million.

Industry Trade and Commerce

Vote 6e—To extend the authority previously provided to Canadair Limited to:

- include other financial arrangements with financial institutions;
- provide that refinancing can be made within the guarantee limits;
- increase the guarantee limit; and
- provide an expiry date for the authority.

Explanation—The present loan guarantee to Canadair Limited was established through Appropriation Act No. 1, 1980-81 at $150 million. These loans were used to finance the development and production of the Challenger aircraft and other general obligations of the Company.

It is proposed to expand the guarantee authority for Canadair loans to permit:

- the deeming of the inclusion of other financial arrangements with financial institutions such as promissory notes, banker's acceptances and bank charges to be included in the guarantee;
- the increasing of the guarantee limit from $150 million to $1,350 million;
- the refinancing of existing loans and the draw down of new loans as long as the aggregate liability of the Crown does not exceed the limit of $1,350 million; and
- the declaration of an expiry date for the guarantee authority of March 31, 1991.

A review of the Corporation's financial requirements indicates the necessity for loan guarantees would reach the $1,350 million limit by mid 1983.

Vote 7e—To clarify the current authority for loan guarantees to the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited so as to deem that the "guarantee" authority includes other financial arrangements and that refinancing can be arranged assuming the aggregate liability of the Crown does not exceed the guarantee limits.

Explanation—The present loan guarantee to de Havilland was established through Appropriation Act No. 4, 1980-81 at $450 million. These loans were used to finance the development and production of the DASH 8 aircraft and other general obligations of the Company.

The requested authority clarifies the meaning of the loan guarantee to ensure that it includes financial arrangements such as promissory notes, banker's acceptances and bank charges incurred in making the loans.

In addition, this proposed authority will provide de Havilland with the ability to refinance existing loans and draw down new loans so long as the aggregate liability of the Crown does not exceed $450 million.

Vote L42e—To authorize an extension for the fiscal year 1982-83 of the current authority relating to the International Tin Council.

Explanation—The participation by Canada in the International Tin Council was originally authorized by Appropriation Act No. 3, 1978-79. This authority provided for the issuance of non-interest bearing non-negotiable demand notes to satisfy Canadian obligations to the Council. Payments, if called, will be made in the form of non-budgetary loans from the Foreign Exchange Account.

It was originally planned that the International Tin Agreement (ITA) would expire June 30, 1981. However, since a new Tin agreement has not as yet been negotiated it is proposed to extend the existing Agreement to June 30, 1982, to permit Canada to be able to make payments in 1982-83 if the need should arise.

Category D—Increases in the Statutory Limit of Revolving Funds

Communications

Vote 11e—To authorize an increase of $4 million in the statutory limit of the Government Telecommunications Agency Revolving Fund.

Explanation—This Revolving Fund operates under the continuing authority of the Adjustment of Accounts Act with a statutory limit of $8 million. The increase from $8 million to $12 million is required to finance increased accounts receivable as a result of increased activity.

The Adjustment of Accounts Act provides under section 33 for the amendment of the statutory limit (continuing authority) through appropriation acts.

Communications—National Film Board

Vote 66e—To authorize an increase of $8 million in the statutory limit of the National Film Board Revolving Fund.

Explanation—The National Film Board Revolving Fund operates under the continuing authority of the Adjustment of Accounts Act with a statutory limit of $12 million. The fund is used to finance the National Film Board's program activities, production and distribution of films, sale of audio-visual materials to the public as well as capital assets on hand and new capital purchases.

The increase from $12 million to $20 million is required to provide adequate working capital to meet increases in equipment inventory and in monthly program turnover.

The Adjustment of Accounts Act provides under section 33 for the amendment of the statutory limit (continuing authority) through appropriation acts.

Supply and Services—Supply Revolving Fund

Vote 6e—To authorize an increase of $50 million in the statutory limit of the Supply Revolving Fund.

Explanation—The Supply Revolving Fund was authorized by the Adjustment of Accounts Act with a statutory limit of $150 million. The Fund operates as a common service agency for the provision of goods and services to federal departments and agencies on a full cost recovery basis. The increase from $150 million to $200 million is required because of the current and projected sales growth which will increase levels of accounts receivable.

The Adjustment of Accounts Act provides under section 33 for the amendment of the statutory authority (continuing authority) through appropriation acts.

Transport

Vote 2e—To authorize an increase of $5.7 million in the statutory limit of the Stores Revolving Fund.

Explanation—The Stores Revolving Fund was established by the Adjustment of Accounts Act with a statutory limit of $30 million. This Fund is responsible for the provision of material requirements in support of the operations of the Air, Marine, Surface and Headquarters Administration of the Department. The increase from $30 million to $35.7 million is required as a result of inflation and major equipment purchases.

The Adjustment of Accounts Act provides under Section 33 for the amendment of the statutory limit (continuing authority) through appropriation acts.

Category E—To Authorize a Corporation to borrow as an Agent of Her Majesty

Transport—Northern Transportation Company Limited

Vote L111e—To authorize Northern Transportation Company Limited to borrow up to $50 million in the private market as an Agent of Her Majesty in order to finance future capital expenditures.

Explanation—Although the Corporation has the authority to borrow money from the private sector under the Canada Business Corporation Act, it must seek Parliamentary authority to borrow as an agent of Her Majesty, in accordance with Section 36 of the Financial Administration Act.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 30, 1982

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to study and report upon the subject-matter of Bill C-97, intituled: "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces", in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

● (2005)

[English]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the motion is put I should like to say a word with respect to it. I exchanged a few words on this topic last week with the Leader of the Government in the Senate because of the concern expressed by some that there may not be enough time for the Senate to give this matter proper consideration unless it were considered in this way.

I believe April 15 is the date set for passage of this measure. This afternoon the chairman of the committee did me the courtesy of telling me that he intended to introduce this matter this evening. I should like to tell him now what I omitted to tell him earlier, because it did not occur to me. Since, apparently, the committee is to sit tomorrow at 3 o'clock—and, perhaps, at other times—to deal with the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, a problem may arise in connection with the attendance of witnesses or others who may wish to express their views. I hope, therefore, that the chairman, who is pretty agile in these matters, will find it possible to time the meetings of the committee so that sufficient notice is given to those who may want to be present and make some public representations.

I doubt that we will see a more important bill this session than this particular piece of legislation. It seems to me important that the Senate should provide the usual opportunity for people to make representations.

I apologize to the chairman of the committee for not having brought this matter to his attention sooner but, as I have some concerns, I take this opportunity to raise this particular matter now.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, by way of a corollary to what Senator Roblin has just said, the committee will require leave to meet while the Senate is sitting and, therefore, later on I may be asking for leave to revert to Notices of Motions. In the meantime, I shall attempt to discuss the matter with Senator Lafond since there may be more than one committee meeting tomorrow afternoon. I do not foresee any difficulty, but I prefer not to proceed without consulting Senator Lafond since we managed to persuade him to undertake this not-particularly-stimulating task of trying to reconcile the meetings of various committees.

Senator Lafond was in Quebec City today with the Subcommittee on National Defence, and has not yet returned. It may be that I shall have to risk asking leave to move that the National Finance Committee be permitted to meet while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, and then try to “unblot” my copybook with Senator Lafond later.

Senator Roblin: Will my honourable friend be able to tell us at that time what the program is for the other committees? I agree with him that the problem of scheduling committee meetings causes some difficulties these days.

Senator Frith: Yes, that is so. According to the undertakings I have been given we will know by tomorrow afternoon what the plan is for sittings of the House of Commons, and we can then discuss our sittings for next week and the week following.

As Senator Roblin has pointed out, Her Majesty the Queen is to arrive on April 15. We will probably not receive the bill before Monday evening April 5, which means it will not be before the Senate until a week from tonight, April 6. That would allow us to debate it on the 6th and 7th, and perhaps on the 8th, depending on whether Parliament adjourns on Wednesday. Parliament usually does adjourn on the Wednesday before Good Friday, rather than the Thursday. We would then have three or four days of debate in the following week, beginning on April 12, assuming the House of Commons comes back that week, and bearing in mind that Her Majesty will be here on April 15 for the proclamation of the Constitution. Of course, if the House of Commons does not sit we cannot have royal assent.

Those are the possibilities we are looking at, honourable senators. Perhaps I have spent too much time speculating, when we will know much more tomorrow about the plans of the House of Commons. While we are not always totally linked to their plans, we certainly will want to make our plans in the light of what the House of Commons will have decided.

Senator Roblin: I do not want to make too much of this, but my honourable friend leads me to think we will have only one day, namely Tuesday, April 6, on which to debate this measure. That seems to be the possibility he is outlining. I hope that will not be the case, because this subject deserves more time than that.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, I agree.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government a supplementary question?

Senator Frith: Certainly.

Senator Tremblay: As we all know, there is some concern among interested parties about the time factor in the case of fiscal arrangements and fiscal equalization payments. There is a possibility that certain payments could not be made if the legislation is not passed in Parliament, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate, by a certain date. My question is: Are there any special procedures such as those used, for instance, when the federal estimates are passed later than the statutory date, and which could also apply to the whole area of transfer payments, if for some reason such as the one you just mentioned, the bill were passed after March 31 or even April 15?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, my colleagues may recall that last week I mentioned that I asked for an opinion on deadlines for passing a number of bills now before the Senate, and more specifically for passing this particular bill, and I think the question asked by Senator Tremblay is a corollary of my own question. Meanwhile, I hope to have an answer to both questions by tomorrow.

Senator Tremblay: Thank you very much.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

HOUSE OF COMMONS—CATEGORIES OF TAXATION REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can the government house leader tell me if there has been any change in the government's plans or intentions with respect to those aspects of the budget which were referred by the Committee of the Whole to another committee of the House of Commons so that representations could be made by members of the general public? That referral was made in respect of at least five categories of taxation—two examples being taxes relating to insurance and taxes relating to corporate consolidations. I want to know if all those various arrangements still hold true and if it is the anticipation of the government that that reference to committee will be made.

● (2015)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no particular information about that. Therefore, I will take the question as notice, unless Senator Olson can answer it. Of course, Senator Roblin is aware that those same five points that the minister mentioned in December of last year are among the matters that are the subject of pre-study by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, that is only by the way because I know that that is not Senator Roblin's question. His question is: What is the situation in the other place with respect to those budget items? Unless Senator Olson can provide more information, I will take the question as notice and try to provide the answer as soon as possible.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance answered a question similar to that in the other place today, by saying that he intends to make that reference. Then, there were some supplementary questions that I am sure my honourable friend is aware of. If he wants to ask them here, he will get essentially the same answers as those given there, because all I could do, in any event, is refer such questions to the Minister of Finance.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend flatters me by his suggestion that I get my questions from the other place. I have not yet read Hansard of the other place, so the information comes as news to me.

The reason for asking that question is to make a further inquiry. I see by public notice that the Department of National Revenue is instructing Canadians to act as if the tax measures proposed in the budget were indeed the law of the land.

Senator Olson: That is normal.

Senator Roblin: Well, I should like to know the authority on which it is normal. Obviously, if it is the stated intention of the government to refer matters to committee for further study, the possibility arises that they may not be the law of the land, and I should like to know on what authority the Department of National Revenue issues that instruction.

Hon. Lowell Murray: It has been four months since the budget was presented.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend knows very well that when changes in tax laws are made they are announced and become effective immediately—that is, those that need to become effective. All matters that require amendment of the present taxation law and the taxation levels are included in the ways and means motions that are laid before Parliament. It is normal practice to proceed on the basis that that is going to happen because there are dates included in those ways and means motions.

Senator Roblin: Well, there is a very substantial difference in the present situation from the one that my honourable friend is referring to. Ordinarily, ways and means motions, and those things attached to them, are submitted to the Committee of the Whole. These are being referred to a committee—if the information we have been given in the other place is correct—for public examination. Surely, the natural conclusion is that the question of making changes is open. If it is not open, why on earth is it going to committee. If it is open, then it is not the law of the land. It is not even the indicated law of the land. By what right the government can say, "Pay no attention to that and conduct your business as if it were the law of the land," escapes me.

Senator Olson: It must have escaped my honourable friend for the entire portion of his political career because that has been the case all the time. If there are amendments made in committee after hearing from outside witnesses, or from the members with or without the advice of outside witnesses, then they become the law of the land.

Senator Roblin: But tax bills do not go to outside witnesses ever. This is an exception. Surely my honourable friend knows that, and surely that has some bearing on the situation.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend also knows that what the Minister of Finance is doing is following the normal, traditional procedure, and he says that this is an unusual procedure. Well, it was to accommodate a number of people, but the announcements made on budget night are, indeed, followed in the ways and means motions that have been put before Parliament and are being carried out in the normal, traditional manner.

Senator Roblin: They certainly are not being carried out in the normal, traditional manner. It is not the normal and traditional custom of Parliament to use the committee system for this. My honourable friend has to recognize that fact.

Senator Olson: My friend and I are having a little dispute over which part of it is normal.

● (2020)

What I am arguing is that the Department of National Revenue, in response to the budget announcement, is proceeding in a traditional and normal way.

Senator Roblin: It is not very comforting to the taxpayer to be told to conduct his affairs as if something which is not the law of the country is the law of the country. We do not even know what the tax law is at the moment.

Don't mutter. If you have something to say, stand up and say it.

Senator Olson: It did not add to the debate.

Senator Roblin: No, it did not.

[Later:]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development, which is supplementary to those put earlier by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

With regard to the budget legislation that has been referred to committees of the other place, is it the intention of the government that the present session will not be prorogued until that legislation emerges from the committees and is dealt with by Parliament?

● (2025)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, no government can give that kind of an undertaking, but if the session is prorogued, and another session is begun, obviously those ways and means motions will be revived.

EFFECT ON PURCHASERS OF WHOLE LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I had intended to ask the Leader of the Government a question this evening, but inasmuch as I suspect he would have taken the question as notice, I should like to place it before him as quickly as possible. Therefore I should like to direct the question to him via the deputy leader.

In replying last Thursday to a question which I had asked several weeks ago concerning tax payable on whole life insurance under the new budget, the leader disparaged my illustration by saying it did not "contain sufficient information to determine the accuracy of the calculations."

Because the Department of Finance has to date refused to disclose details regarding the basis on which the tax calculations in question are to be made, my question assumed that the calculation of the "cost of insurance" would continue to be on the basis currently used for a registered policy. It also assumed that the dividend values would be included in the taxable base on an equal basis with policy values.

So that the industry and consumers will not continue to be plagued with this sort of confusion, and so that the government does not continue to enjoy the luxury of dismissing all criticism of the impact of the budget on whole life insurance by saying that the examples, even those as detailed as mine—and you will recall, honourable senators, that I had a policy with a specific amount, with specific premiums, a specific period and the age and sex of the policyholder—do not "contain sufficient information to determine the accuracy of the tax calculations," I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government to obtain from the Department of Finance the details of the basis on which it intends to make calculations of this sort.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I recall the answer to which the honourable senator has referred. I shall take the question as notice and will pass along the further question, or the clarification of the question, as well as the assumptions he mentioned.

And I want to disclaim any intention to put down the question asked by the honourable senator. That was certainly not our intention, in any event.

Senator Nurgitz: As a brief supplementary question, the leader in his reply also claimed that the policy in my illustration was not a $25,000 policy but was one of over $100,000 by the time the Department of Finance worked out the calculations. My supplementary question is, therefore: Does the government, in making this attack upon the insurance industry, and the consumers, distinguish between death benefits and accumulated cash values when it attempts to rationalize the imposition of additional taxes?

Senator Frith: I think the honourable senator will only expect an answer to that part of the question that came after the words "attack upon the insurance industry and the consumers". That is the part of the question that we shall refer. We will not attempt to deal with the preamble to the question.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question of the Deputy Leader of the Government?

While making the inquiries on behalf of Senator Nurgitz, would the deputy leader also inquire as to the stage reached in negotiations with life insurance companies with a view to defining what constitutes a "whole life policy."

Senator Frith: Yes, I think it is reasonable to ask us to do that also.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IRAQ—CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT WITH GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development.

We learned during the weekend that the General Motors Corporation is about to lose a very substantial contract with Iraq. This cancellation might involve a loss of over $60 million. Could the minister make any statement to the house regarding this very important matter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I could probably try to bring in a statement, which would be a selection of some of the statements, I suppose, that have been made by the minister who is most directly involved—that is to say, the Honourable Edward Lumley, Minister of State (International Trade)—and also some of the views it is claimed have been expressed by certain Iraqi officials, including the ambassador, together with certain others made by General Motors.

I am not directly involved in this matter at the moment, and I understand that there is indeed some further investigation required in order to clarify the position as to what the present status of the balance of the order is, where the responsibility lies, and whether the alleged mechanical failures have been remedied.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: I think the minister realizes that the potential loss by General Motors of this important contract is a matter of some economic significance. I do not see how he could ignore an issue of this importance, which concerns the production of automobiles in Canada, when it is common knowledge that the industry is experiencing tremendous difficulties.

The Minister of State for Economic Development should, since it is a major issue, in my opinion, make a government statement and inform us whether the Export Development Corporation is responsible, as reported, for the $68 million guarantee, because the corporation did not fulfil all the conditions set by Iraq, or whether General Motors is to blame in this transaction because of its defective goods.

It is a major issue in my view, and I think the Minister of State for Economic Development should say, "Yes, I am going to look into the matter and I shall make a government statement to inform the Senate on this issue which may cause a considerable loss of jobs if General Motors were to lose the contract."

[English]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am sorry that my honourable friend did not hear me clearly, or perhaps did not understand what I said. I did not say that I was disinterested.

Senator Asselin: I said that you seemed to be.

Senator Olson: I am not disinterested at all.

Hon. Lowell Murray: You said you were not involved.

Senator Olson: I said I was not directly involved, but I said that I was keenly interested, and I would underline that if there were any way of doing so.

The government is interested in all export orders that provide jobs in Canada. There is no question about this government's interest in that. What I said was that I was not directly involved in the matter. Then I went on to explain, I thought very carefully, to my honourable friend what I am prepared to do, namely, to gather up the information, together with technical information—and some of it is, let me point out, highly technical—with regard to responsibility, and that sort of thing, which I would bring back to this house in the form of a statement.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask my honourable friend a question along the same lines. An export development board was established a few months ago to advise and report on export problems in the Canadian economy. Can my honourable friend give some assurance that this board will be asked to investigate this matter and advise, with the idea of underlining any lessons we may have learned from the situation?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will be glad to refer that question to the minister responsible for international trade.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE— COMMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate that I had intended to ask of Senator van Roggen in his capacity as Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

● (2030)

My question arises from the statements made by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister at his press conference the other day with regard to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Prime Minister said, first, that he had not been briefed on the report; secondly, that he had not read it; and thirdly, commenting on a previous report, and I quote: "We rejected it and I imagine we will do the same thing this time."

It is the intention of the Deputy Leader of the Government to apply to the Guinness Book of Records for a listing under the category "Parliamentary committee report most hastily rejected out of hand by the Prime Minister even before he read it?"

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I doubt that the question is in order, since I believe that questions directed to a committee chairman are supposed to relate to the procedures of his particular committee. I suppose that, on this aspect of that committee's activity, it is procedurally, as it is sometimes put in legal terms, functus officio.

As to the other part of the question, and withholding comment as to whether it is in order, the answer is shorter because it is, simply: "No."

GRAIN

MEETING OF OFFICIALS OF EXPORTING COUNTRIES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address some questions to my friend, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, because he and I share a common interest in the fate of the wheat growers of western Canada.

I notice that he is expected to convene a meeting next month in Ottawa of officials of the three or four major wheat exporting countries of the world. The meeting will take place, I believe, in order to discuss the question of wheat markets and wheat prices. Could he tell me when the meeting is to be held, whom he expects to attend, and what they hope to do?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, the meeting is to be held in Ottawa on April 21 and 22. It is a meeting of officials from the various major grain exporting countries. I believe there will be officials in attendance from all the countries, namely, the United States, Canada, Australia, the Argentine and the European Economic Community.

At the meeting they will be discussing, generally, the world grain situation. They will be looking over the question of current surpluses, I suppose, and current policies, and will be seeking whatever information they may be able to obtain, and putting forward whatever ideas they may be able to advance to assist in adopting policies that would tend to improve world grain prices.

I cannot, however, speculate on what conclusions may be reached. It is a meeting of officials, not a meeting of ministers. It is my hope—and I believe that of other ministers in grain exporting countries—that this meeting will be sufficiently fruitful to lead to a meeting of ministers at a later date.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for his answer, because he gave us the important information that this is a meeting of officials, not of the political heads of the various government departments concerned.

Is the minister prepared to make any statement as to the terms of reference that are being provided to the officials that will represent the Canadian government's point of view? What I am asking is: What is the aim of the exercise? Are these officials trying to establish a floor price under international trade in wheat? If so, will the minister tell us how that is to be differentiated from a cartel? He has told us, I believe, on other occasions that he does not like the word "cartel." I agree with him; I do not like it either. Just how does he visualize our approach taking shape with respect to this question of setting a floor price under international wheat trade?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, this is a meeting of officials. I suppose they will be exploring all of the facts related to the world situation. I am sure that they will be discussing the policies that are in effect currently in the various countries of the world. I am sure they will be reporting back to their various governments any general ideas they may have about what steps might be taken to assist in levelling out the peaks and hollows that have been the experience of grain producers and the grain industry in general.

I would not want to speculate at this time upon precisely what might come out of that meeting or precisely what recommendations they might be making related to prices. I should think the establishment of anything approaching what might be called a rigid floor price, based on a specific type of grain at a specific place, would be most difficult.

● (2035)

Senator Roblin: I agree with my honourable friend.

Honourable senators, I have one more question of policy to ask the minister. Does he envisage the question of supply management as being part of his formula, which, in turn, involves the question of storage from time to time of surplus quantities of grain? Is that part of the scenario that the Government of Canada is giving some thought to?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I would not envisage anything approaching what might be called rigid supply management. I should think the various countries would review their different policies, and it might not come as a surprise if the opinion of some is that the floor prices or the loan prices established in the United States provide, to a substantial extent, a floor price for grain exporting countries. There may be discussion of those policies and the effect they may have on world prices. The question of whether they might be modified or synchronized to assist in the levelling out of the highs and the lows that occur in the market might be looked at favourably.

The whole question of world food security has been addressed from time to time, and there are proposals, which I am sure will be discussed, concerning world food security. I believe that Canada looks at this question in a sympathetic and favourable manner. Precisely what form this might take, I am unable to forecast. Our own system, with the current storage facilities that are available in Canada, lends itself to the idea that, at a given time, if there is an emergency in the world, we are in a position to respond, at least to the level of certain quantities relative to our own capacity.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my final question is: What official will represent Canada?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, the officials will come from the grains group, whose director is Mr. Bill Miner. There are other duties that he is performing, but I anticipate that he would be in a position to head the Canadian delegation.

Senator Roblin: The Wheat Board?

Senator Argue: No, the grains group.

Senator Roblin: Not the Wheat Board?

Senator Argue: I wouldn't think so.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BOARD—DECISION RE SERVICE IN CARIBBEAN

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on February 3, concerning a recent War Veterans Allowance Board decision extending service eligibility for War Veterans Allowance purposes to veterans who served in dangerous waters in the Caribbean. I am also responding to the honourable senator's question regarding the extension of War Veterans Allowance eligibility to veterans who did not serve overseas during wartime. The answer has been furnished by the minister.

The recent decision of the War Veterans Allowance Board regarding "Theatre of Actual War" reversed a long-standing interpretation by the board of sections of the War Veterans Allowance Act. The decision affected definitions of "duties" and "Western Hemisphere".

The board concluded that a member of His Majesty's Canadian Forces, except for the time that the member was on leave, would be performing "duties" while on service.

The Board also concluded that, for War Veterans Allowance purposes, the waters beyond the territorial waters off Newfoundland, Bermuda and the West Indies are to be considered outside the Western Hemisphere. Greenland, Iceland and the Aleutian Islands are also considered outside the Western Hemisphere.

● (2040)

It is the Board's opinion that former members of His Majesty's Canadian Forces who were on duty and were transported in ships or aircraft between Canada, Newfoundland, Bermuda or the West Indies during World War II, proceeded beyond the territorial waters thereof and were outside the Western Hemisphere. Therefore, they are considered to have served in a theatre of actual war.

These former members of His Majesty's Canadian Forces, who are now considered to have served in a theatre of actual war, are therefore eligible for War Veterans Allowance, providing the other requirements of the War Veterans Allowance Act are met.

Departmental officials have attempted to reach as many potential recipients as possible by way of press releases outlining the War Veterans Allowance Board's new interpretation. A review of past decisions is being conducted to identify those who had previously been denied War Veterans Allowance and may now be eligible. All veterans or dependants who feel that they may now be eligible for an allowance are encouraged to contact one of the 32 district offices.

The War Veterans Allowance Act provides the War Veterans Allowance Board with the power to interpret any provision of the act or the regulations made under the act. The decision referred to represents an interpretation of a provision of the act and it is not felt necessary or appropriate to amend the act or to issue an order in council.

As Senator Marshall had indicated, there are other Canadian veterans who served in Canada only, who are still ineligible for War Veterans Allowance. It has been accepted that those who remained in Canada in aid of the national effort, did not face the hardships and strains of their compatriots overseas, where conflict with enemy forces did or could have occurred. It is for this reason that service in a theatre of war is a service prerequisite for War Veterans Allowance, with the exception of certain unique categories of veterans including veterans with dual service in World War I and II and veterans in receipt of a disability pension for wartime service from the Canadian Pension Commission. I do not intend to propose a change to this requirement.

The department frequently reviews the legislation related to veterans, and the minister appreciates the concerns expressed by members of the Senate.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION—INVESTIGATION OF CANADIAN JAVELIN LIMITED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have a reply to a question asked by Senator Nurgitz on March 4 of this year, concerning the investigation of Canadian Javelin Limited. I should like to point out that I will be quoting the minister. Here is the answer provided by the minister:

I wish to inform you that the investigator appointed by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission submitted his statement of evidence on or about January 26, 1982. In addition, the investigator, Mr. F. H. Sparling, submitted a copy of his statement to each person against whom an allegation was made therein, in accordance with the requirements of the Canada Corporations Act governing such investigations.

Perhaps a page could hand the translation to Senator Nurgitz, to help him follow the reply.

Senator Asselin: Is that the end of the reply?

Senator Frith: No, but I just noticed that an English version was attached. Perhaps Senator Nurgitz would care to read it while listening to the interpretation. The minister goes on to say:

I believe that Canadian Javelin Limited filed an application with the Federal Court aimed at blocking the submission of the statement of evidence and consideration of the statement by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

I shall now read the third paragraph.

[Senator Frith.]

As for the statement of evidence itself, I understand that the Commission considers it to be a public document.

As to further developments in this case, the Commission sets the time and place for the presentation of evidence by the investigator and those against whom allegations were made. I understand that the date of the hearing has been set for April 26, 1982.

The Commission is required to submit a report to me, following the hearing with the parties concerned.

"Me" means the minister.

Meanwhile, I do not think it would be appropriate to discuss the case further, since certain legal procedures in connection with the case are still before the courts.

QUEBEC

CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE—PUBLIC OPINION POLL—REQUEST FOR RESULT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my third delayed answer is to a question asked by Senator Murray on March 25 concerning a poll taken by the Canadian Unity Information Office.

Hon. Lowell Murray: I am all ears.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice stated yesterday in the other place that the government has conducted several polls of this kind since the referendum was held in Quebec to find out how the situation is developing with respect to Canadian unity. The government's policy has been to use the polls in developing policy, and when the polls are no longer useful in preparing new policies, they are made public. The government intends to do the same thing in this case.

In response to Senator Murray's second question concerning the release of the questions asked, the Minister of Justice has stated that the publication of the questions would not be useful in terms of federal-provincial relations.

Senator Murray: That is a disgraceful reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: If, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has just told us, a poll is being conducted on politics and separatism in Quebec, is there also going to be a poll in western Canada to find out what the situation is regarding western separatism? Are these polls only going to be conducted in Quebec? This information office, as you probably know, is costing Canadian taxpayers $25 million. It has no financial accountability to Parliament, only to the government, which can give it any mandate it likes. To give the information office some credibility, it should be made accountable to Parliament as well as to the government. If it is only an instrument for spying on Quebecers, I really think they should switch to something else.

Senator Frith: Is Senator Asselin's question aimed at finding out whether the government intends to conduct a similar poll in western Canada? The question is taken as notice, because I do not know. There is no mention of this in the answer I have here. In any case, I could ask the minister whether there are any plans to do so. I suppose there might be a possibility, but I doubt it.

As for the matter of sharing the poll results for the purpose of working out a policy on this subject, I suppose the same principles would apply. In any case, it is a corollary of another question. We will have to wait until we get an answer to the corollary question.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: I have a supplementary which is in a somewhat different vein. In the minister's reply there are certain terms which, unless I misunderstood them, make me very uneasy. He is not releasing the questions asked in the poll because it would not be "useful for federal-provincial relations".

Senator Frith: In other words, it would be useful!

Senator Tremblay: Could you repeat that part of the reply, because if I understood correctly, the minister is not releasing the questions after having released the answers, because it would not be useful or advantageous for federal-provincial relations. Is this a new definition of the reasons of state? Is this a new definition of the common good? I would like to have some explanation, because this kind of language is new to me.

Senator Frith: As far as I can see, it is not a new definition.

Senator Tremblay: Did I hear the word "useful"?

Senator Frith: I think so; unfortunately, I do not have the text in front of me.

Senator Tremblay: So you are stating that whatever the criterion, it is not "useful". Is information collected at government expense only to be released if the minister feels that it is useful to do so? I find that there is something missing here, because usefulness always has a connection with someone. Not useful as far as the government's interests are concerned? Or not useful as far as the interests of Quebecers are concerned? To whom would it not be useful?

One might say that usefulness is in the eye of the user. So, first of all I would like to ask a question just to confirm that we have here a new criterion for the release of information. We are concerned here with the word "useful", without reference to an interested party. Just "useful", am I correct?

Senator Frith: The question regarding a new definition or principle or criterion for releasing information is supplementary to the answer I gave, which was the minister's answer.

I feel that the minister's reply made it quite clear that in his view, considering his responsibility and his discretion as a minister, it would not be useful to federal-provincial relations. That is all.

Obviously, Senator Tremblay feels that there is some new orientation or criterion here. That is quite possible, and he is entitled to his opinion. I shall be quite happy to forward his comments to the minister for his personal edification, but I have nothing further to add.

Senator Tremblay: Thank you very much, my dear colleague.

● (2050)

[English]

Senator Murray: The Deputy Leader of the Government knows very well that, traditionally, the form of words used by a minister to justify his refusal to reveal information is that it would be harmful or prejudicial to federal-provincial relations. I note that the Minister of Justice, whose response the deputy leader was communicating to the Senate, did not say "prejudicial" or "harmful" to federal-provincial relations; he said, "It would not be useful."

Whether the word used is "prejudicial," "harmful," or "not useful," it raises the question: Why ask the questions in a poll in the first place if they are not useful or helpful to federal-provincial relations?

Senator Frith: The latter question, it seems to me, is rhetorical but makes its point. As far as the first part of the question is concerned, it seems to me to be an intriguing but semantic analysis, because saying that something is prejudicial is the same as saying that it is not useful.

GRAIN

CROWNSNEST RATES—GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATOR—TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Roblin on March 24 concerning the instructions the government has given to Dr. Clay Gilson with respect to his inquiry into the Crow.

Dr. Gilson's formal consultations are restricted to the two railways and to western farm organizations. The ten farm groups invited to participate in the consultations were chosen by Dr. Gilson because, in his view, they represented the diversity of western Canada agricultural interests. The Minister of Transport and departmental officials have been meeting with a wide range of other interested groups to discuss the substance of the western transportation issue and the process initiated to address it. The views of these groups are being communicated to Dr. Gilson.

Dr. Gilson's mandate does not involve him with the provincial governments; therefore, he will not be involved in an official way in dealing with the provinces. Federal and provincial officials have had meetings of an information nature related to the process of the Gilson consultations. Should the provincial governments wish to communicate with the federal government on matters related to the western transportation question, they may do so directly through the Minister of Transport, Mr. Pepin.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would ask my honourable friend to expand on one part of his answer. It seems that Dr. Gilson has been given a list of people that the federal government thinks he ought to speak to directly, namely, representatives of the various types of producers. That is fine, as far as it goes, but is he not to have any direct contact with other economic interests in the matter? As an example, the Board of Trade and a great many other people have a vested stake in the welfare of western agriculture and its income. It seems to me that there is some logic in suggesting that they be allowed to state their views directly to Dr. Gilson.

The minister leaves me with the impression that that is not the case, and that what Mr. Pepin chooses to tell Dr. Gilson about what they said to him is all that Dr. Gilson is going to hear. Does the minister think that is satisfactory?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I want to give Senator Roblin what information I have, but I cannot give him information that I do not have.

The terms of reference given to Dr. Gilson have been referred to and tabled in the Senate. They are that he should do this—that is, look into the objectives of the policy through intensive consultation with the major agricultural organizations in western Canada and the railways. The answer that I just read stated that:

The ten farm groups invited to participate in the consultations were chosen by Dr. Gilson—

I assume that is how he arrived at meeting with them. He has also to meet with the two railways and with officials, when he thinks it desirable, of the provincial governments.

As I read his terms of reference—and I could be mistaken because I am not very well acquainted with all aspects of this policy, and probably Senator Roblin is correct—he may, at least, feel himself confined to these particular groups.

It is also true to say that these groups have availed themselves of the opportunity to speak with the minister directly, and/or with other officials, including officials of his department.

I am quite prepared to accept Senator Roblin's suggestion that I make further inquiries to see if more detailed information can be given. My opinion, for whatever it may be worth, is that Dr. Gilson probably feels himself constricted to consulting with the organizations referred to. I may be mistaken and, therefore, I will make further inquiries.

Senator Roblin: The minister has said some remarkable things in his time, but I never thought I would hear him say that he was not fully acquainted with what was going on with the Crow.

Senator Argue: That is another department.

Senator Roblin: It astonishes me. I would like to tell the minister, in a friendly kind of way, that I do not believe him, because I think he is well informed on that topic. He may not like what he knows.

• (2100)

Senator Argue: Well, I don't know everything. In fact, there are very few subjects on which I could say I know everything. I am just trying to be frank and honest. Of course, I don't know all about the various aspects of this. I have given the information, believing it to be accurate, and I am happy to make further inquiries. I am happy not to make them, if Senator

[Senator Roblin.]

Roblin does not wish them made. I assume I am correct that he feels he is confined to farm organizations and the railroads.

Senator Roblin: I am glad my honourable friend is happy to make further inquiries, because I would like him to do so. I can hardly believe that he is not well acquainted, in every detail, with what is happening with respect to the situation on the Crow, unless he is really trying to tell us that he is throwing up his hands and will take what comes. However, I will not become argumentative with him.

Senator Argue: Poor Senator Roblin. He just does not accept things as they are. Poor Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: I don't think my honourable friend needs to commiserate with me. I am commiserating with him. He is the one who needs the commiseration. He has offered to get me more information on this subject. I think he invited me to confirm whether I wish that, and I tell him that I do.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LOW INTEREST LOANS

Question No. 71 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Orville H. Phillips:

What is the number of Farm Credit Corporation loans provided to each province under the $50 million fund for low interest aid and what is, by province, (i) the total amounts of the loans made (ii) the interest rates charged?

Reply by the Minister of Agriculture:

The Farm Credit Corporation advises: As at February 28, 1982, the answer is:

| i) Province | Number Approved | Dollars Approved |
|-------------|--------------------|---------------------|
| B.C. | 15 | 3,591,000 |
| Alta. | 18 | 3,835,700 |
| Sask. | 47 | 5,512,290 |
| Man. | 41 | 5,736,400 |
| Ont. | 121 | 15,162,500 |
| Que. | 69 | 5,800,500 |
| N.B. | 5 | 600,600 |
| N.S. | 1 | 155,000 |
| P.E.I. | 18 | 1,488,500 |
| Nfld. | 4 | 201,000 |
| Canada | 339 | 42,083,490 |

ii) The interest rate of the Special Program loans is 16¾ per cent with a rebate of 5 per cent in each of the first two years.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (E) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1982.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, the report on supplementary estimates (E) is contained in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Thursday, March 25. The total of the supplementary estimates is $959 million. That brings the total spending for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982, to $70.109 billion.

When the committee was examining the supplementary estimates it paid particular attention, as senators will see from the report, to the envelope system that was developed to control spending. Under the envelope system resources are divided among ten policy envelopes and are administered by five policy committees. The committees allocate the contents of each envelope to the departments and programs that are contained within that envelope, and since the total of the envelope is a ceiling, that results in an examination of all the new and expanded programs proposed by departments.

We were told that the supplementary estimates spending is covered by reserves contained in the envelopes. There are two types of reserves—a policy reserve used for new or expanded programs, and an operating reserve used for increased expenditures due to higher costs. The committee was concerned that those reserves reduce the control of spending, but has been assured by witnesses that in respect of the policy reserves there is examination of the programs that go to make up those reserves. The system, however, focuses on new and expanded programs but does not seem to concern itself very much with existing programs. We were assured by witnesses from the Treasury Board that the system would be extended to include control of existing programs. Indeed, in addition the Comptroller General is developing a program evaluation which will have the effect of monitoring existing programs.

Honourable senators, when we examined supplementary estimates (D) we looked at the operations of an organization called Consolidated Computer Inc. The government guaranteed loans through the Enterprise Development Program to that organization, and the loss to the government was approximately $119 million. Following the loss, the government struck off a committee headed by General W.A.B. Anderson to examine the Consolidated Computer case and to report on what it found. That report has not been published, but it has been leaked, and some of the recommendations of the report are well known to the public. The committee asked the President of the Treasury Board about that, and he stated that the report could not yet be released, and that, in fact, it had been given to the Department of Justice to see if legal action should be taken.

If honourable senators refer to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, they will see there a recommendation to the effect that the leaked report should be released immediately. That recommendation reads as follows:

We believe strongly that it is in the best public interest to make available to Members of Parliament and the public the findings of this examination of the losses related to the Consolidated Computer Company, and we recommend that this be done as expeditiously as possible.

Honourable senators will also find in the report a statement that the committee inquired into an increase in loan guarantees to Canadair from $150 million to $1.35 billion. That was to cover the operations of Canadair with respect to the Challenger jet aircraft. In light of the Consolidated Computer experience, the committee was interested to ascertain whether the government, in raising that sort of guarantee by that amount—$1.2 billion—is protecting its interests by having the right to appoint directors and by having some kind of monitoring process.

The committee is concerned because these guarantees are not uncommon and, indeed, they may grow in light of the government's assistance to the new high technology thrust.

The committee also discovered that the government issues letters of comfort. While these are not legal guarantees, they probably commit the government morally to live up to the expenditure guaranteed in the letter of comfort. Interestingly enough, those letters of comfort do not appear to be part of the estimates.

Finally, therefore, the committee recommended the following:

We therefore request the President of the Treasury Board to return before this Committee to discuss the issues involved in the government's ongoing support of certain firms, including Canadair Ltd. and de Havilland. Specifically, we ask the President to prepare background material for the use of this Committee relating to the appointment and responsibility of the directors of those firms which are Crown Corporations or heavily supported by the Crown, the need for and processes related to the Crown's provision of loan guarantees, and the use of letters of comfort. We would ask that such background material be available to the Committee as soon as possible to permit the Committee adequate time for prior study.

After receiving that information it is the intention of the committee, in the ambit of the main estimates for the following year, to examine this subject.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I ask the chairman of the committee one brief question? The chairman referred to the envelope system which served to reinforce the role of the cabinet committees on social and economic policy, and so forth. He also alluded to the role of the Comptroller General in monitoring existing programs.

Has anyone asked the question—and if so I would like to know the answer—with respect to what remains of the role of the committee of ministers called Treasury Board under the chairmanship of the President of the Treasury Board?

Senator Everett: I am reasonably certain that that question was asked and, although I cannot recall exactly what the answer was, I think there was an answer to the effect that Treasury Board continues to play an important role in the control of expenditures. However, rather than mislead the honourable senator, I will obtain an answer to his question and deliver it to him in due course.

● (2110)

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, it had been my intention to say a few words on Senator Everett's report, but since Bill C-99, which is based on supplementary estimates (E), is before us this evening, I will spare my colleagues the agony and deal with the report and the bill at the same time.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1981-82

SECOND READING

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1982.

He said: Honourable senators, Appropriation Bill No. 4, 1981-82, introduced today, provides supply for the whole of supplementary estimates (E) for 1981-82. These estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 18, 1982, and were immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. They were discussed in committee on March 24 with the President of the Treasury Board and his officials.

These final supplementaries total $959 million. Of this total, $359 million represents the net increase in statutory requirements, and $600 million is the amount of the new spending authority that Parliament is being asked to approve.

These estimates include some 33 $1 votes. Details of these votes were provided to the committee and have been reported on.

Should any honourable senator have any questions on these estimates, I shall do, my best to provide adequate answers.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, this bill, as the sponsor has said, provides supply for supplementary estimates (E), which were reported on by Senator Everett a few moments ago. This is one of a series of supplementary estimates which have been brought before the committee and before the Senate during the past few months.

The total statutory and non-statutory, budgetary and non-budgetary, items for fiscal 1981-82 now total more than $70 billion, as compared to $65 billion outlined in the main estimates a year ago. As we can see, the estimates are now $5 billion over the projection of a year ago, which clearly represents a huge difference. There is something wrong with the system. I know it is increasingly more difficult to make estimates correspond with reality, inflation and government spending being what they are, but, clearly, there has to be some system of control over and above that which we have now.

The total estimates to date include, as Senator Everett has pointed out, supplementary estimates (D) which totalled some $93 million. That particular set of supplementary estimates was rather unusual because it was simply one block amount and it dealt with the amount of money that government had to make good on its loan commitment guarantee to a company called Consolidated Computer Company. The losses to the Treasury will be well in excess of that $93 million—the amount varies from $119 million to $125 million depending on whether or not you count the $6 million that government gave that company for R&D. Some people say that that money may not be lost but may be recoverable somewhere along the line. The total $125 million out of the public purse is still $125 million.

As I said, that was dealt with in a special supplementary estimate vote which was most unusual. Why it was not dealt with in a group of other items is something that the officials in Treasury Board and the Department of Finance can probably explain.

A special bill for Consolidated Computer Company was duly presented and given the full treatment required by law both here and in the other place, and in the various committees both here and in the other place. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance spent quite a bit of time examining the minister and his officials as to the exact involvement of the government in the financing of this company. The story we received, as was reported at that time, was one of unbelievable woe. There was a series of money transfusions that started, if my memory serves me correctly, with $3 million followed by an additional $10 million, followed by an additional $20 million, and then an additional amount of money, and the government kept pumping more money into this outfit until it finally reached what appeared to be a magic plateau of around $100 million, and the plug was pulled and the company went down the drain. Management did not change and the government directors were still in place. What their function was we were unable to ascertain.

The Honourable Herbert Gray assured us at that time that an investigation would take place and that the report would be made available by the President of Treasury Board when it was received. As Senator Everett pointed out, that report was not made available. It was leaked. Some of the information is known to the public. Whether the information that the public has through the press is accurate and whether the persons who have been named have been properly identified, or whether they have been maligned or misrepresented, we do not know. It is most unfortunate to have the situation as it now is. The report is in the hands of the Department of Justice for investigation.

I think in fairness to everyone involved, the government would have been better served to have it available to members of the committee and to members of both houses. The President of Treasury Board has undertaken to look into this matter for us and, hopefully, this will be corrected.

In considering supplementary estimates (E), which are now before us, the most striking single item which was brought to our attention was the increase in the government loan guarantee to Canadair Limited. The amount has been increased from $150 million to $1,350 million, which is an incredible increase as it was only two years ago that the ceiling of $150 million was put in place. That ceiling has been exceeded, but exceeded through the system known as comfort letters.

Comfort letters, as an instrument of government financing or policy, should be enough to strike fear in the heart of any parliamentarian. It is the most blatant misuse of ministerial privilege that has ever been seen in the financial world. To say that there is no commitment by the Crown in a comfort letter given by a minister is to really ignore the facts of life. No government worth its salt could refuse to turn its back on a letter signed by a minister of the Crown guaranteeing a certain amount of money to a corporation. How these letters are used depends to a great extent on the integrity of the company to whom they are issued. The wording of the letters themselves, to my knowledge, is never made public. Nobody sees them except the bankers and the people to whom they are addressed. It is a most unfortunate way of government finding its way around statutory limitations placed on spending by Parliament, which has been pointed out time and time again as one of the prime purposes of the establishment of Parliament.

In any event, in supplementary estimates (E) we find the use of the $1 vote. This is the most unusual use of the $1 vote that I have ever seen. It is used to increase the loan ceiling for Canadair from $150 million to $1,350 million. That is done under the guise of a $1 vote. It is the weirdest piece of equipment that I have ever seen on a financial page during my brief period of exposure to financial matters. It is a matter that the chairman of the committee, quite rightly, has asked the President of Treasury Board to explain in greater detail.

I must say that the information that was made available to us about the use of the $1,350 million—for all I know there might be another series of comfort letters behind that huge amount, and the very sound of the term “comfort letter” is enough to frighten anybody. How many of these comfort letters are floating around in the financial circles of the world? I can see funny little businessmen charging through the banks of Switzerland waving comfort letters. I have my own fond memories of a government in Newfoundland doing that at one time or another, and some of the pen pals the honourable gentleman I have in mind had across Europe, and other parts of the world, would just amaze you.

I do not want to suggest that the members of the government in office in Ottawa are quite as well versed in that sort of thing, but as it appears that they are well on the way to being so I would ask honourable senators to take due note of this particular misuse of government power.

There are a number of other items in the supplementary estimates, but I really do not think there is enough time to consider all of them. These estimates are laid before us, we receive information, and the committee must deal with them in a matter of hours. The minister, although he is good enough to appear, usually can only spend an hour or two with us. He leaves his officials to answer our questions, and the officials are usually knowledgeable, but it is difficult to get to the core of things when dealing with officials. They are far too sensitive. They do not seem to have the facility to absorb the cut and thrust of partisan debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): They are not as comforting as the minister.

Senator Doody: And not as comforting as having a couple of hundred million dollars worth of comfort letters stashed away in one's breast pocket.

I must say that the Minister of Finance must sleep comfortably knowing that Canadair is floating around the world with a comfort letter.

As I said earlier, there are a number of items in these supplementary estimates that should be dealt with at length, as indeed is the case with all estimates. For example, the use of public moneys in the “hi-tech” industry is, in itself, a matter of considerable concern. The CCI is an example of government involvement in a brand new industry, and the Government of Canada is into “hi-tech” in a big way. I note that in this particular set of supplementary estimates, as in just about every set of estimates that I have seen since I came here, there is a grant for Telidon. This time there is a $3,200,000 vote for Telidon, which is another example of public moneys being used in the “hi-tech” industry.

I am not suggesting that Telidon is in the same category as the CCI, but Telidon is a research and development organization which has been financed, to a large extent, by the Canadian taxpayers. I should like to know who is watching what course that operation is on, or, indeed, whether it is a dead-end course in technology. I do not know the answer to that, and I suggest that there are few people who do know.

There is a vote for DREE in which $650,000 is made available for information purposes. That was taken out of a number of general agreements which have not been used, for whatever reason, and is now made available for information purposes. Presumably, this is to ensure that the Government of Canada gets forward credit for the money that it spends on the provinces. That seems to be a particular obsession with governments at this point in our history, and presumably that is where this $650,000 will go.

In the final paragraph of Senator Everett's report, he speaks about the intentions of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to look more closely into the matters I have raised, and other items mentioned in the report.

Supplementary estimates (E), as I said, is just one of a series of supplementary estimates which come before us from time to time, and I honestly do not think that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is given enough time or enough forewarning to go into these estimates in any depth, and certainly there is not enough time for the committee members to examine them in depth.

Honourable senators, these are a few items that I wished to touch on this evening in dealing with these estimates, and I thank you for your patience.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable Senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1982-83

SECOND READING

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-100, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983.

He said: Honourable senators, Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1982-83, provides interim supply for the 1982-83 main estimates. These estimates were tabled in the Senate on February 23, 1982, and were referred immediately to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. They will be subjected to a detailed review by that committee during the interim supply period.

The main estimates total $74.153 billion. Of this amount, $43.482 billion is authorized by existing legislation, and $30.671 billion is to be voted by Parliament.

Appropriation Bill No. 1 provides $8.786 billion of the amounts to be voted to meet the expenditure requirements of the government to June 30, 1982. It contains a general proportion of three-twelfths of all votes, plus additional twelfths for 41 votes. These additional proportions are required due to the seasonal nature of some programs, and the need in other instances to make major payments before the end of June. In no case is Parliament being asked to pass the entire amount for a vote.

Honourable senators, since the purpose of Appropriation Bill No. 1 is to provide interim financing to June 30, and since the main estimates are yet to be reviewed in committee, I have purposely kept my remarks very brief. I would mention, however, that these estimates are presented in three parts. Part I, entitled "The Government Expenditure Plan", contains a statement of the government's spending intentions, and an analysis by policy sector and associated resource envelopes. Part II is the traditional "blue book"; and Part III consists of 10 department booklets which contain finer details of spending plans.

Honourable senators, if you wish further explanations, I shall do my best to provide them.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, as Senator Langlois has said, there is very little left that can be said about the interim supply bill. It is just that—a partial supply of money to government to carry on its normal activities, or abnormal activities, depending on which side of the house one sits, until such time as the main estimates are passed.

I certainly would not want to deprive the government of an opportunity of continuing to make itself unpopular in the public realm by denying it this supply.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, when Senator Langlois moves third reading of this bill, since the government is asking for interim supply, will the honourable senator ascertain when the Senate might expect answers to questions that are on the Order Paper, some of which have been there for more than a year?

● (2130)

I asked a question last May 19 about the advertising budgets for the different departments for the fiscal year that is ending tomorrow at midnight, and I find it difficult to remain silent while interim supply goes through when honourable members on this side, and indeed, on the other side, have questions on the Order Paper that have been there for over a year—most of them relating to items of government expenditure, and most of them very straightforward and simple—and that have not yet been answered by the government.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Grievance before supply!

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I am also waiting for the answer to a question that I asked two years ago of Senator de Cotret on exchange rates.

Senator Roblin: We will have to get him back.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with regard to the last question, I will try to make sure that the answer to it does not await Senator de Cotret's return to a position from which he can answer.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, March 31, 1982, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the question is put I would like to know if the chairman of the committee can offer me any comfort in regard to my request that we determine whether or not people who want to appear before the committee will have an opportunity to do so. If I remember correctly, the intention was to proceed with the pre-study of this bill tomorrow, and yet I know that there are a number of people in educational circles, health circles and others, that are affected by this bill, who quite possibly might wish to make some observations on it. What can the chairman tell me about arrangements to hear these people?

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, as the honourable senator knows, we are examining the main estimates for the year ending March 31, 1983, and we had scheduled for tomorrow the President, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Wood Gundy Limited, and for Tuesday, the President of the Canadian Bankers' Association. We came to the conclusion over the weekend that, given that this bill has to be passed by April 15, and given that we might not receive it from the other place until perhaps the end of next week, we likely would not have enough time to give it any sort of study, and, therefore, the best thing to do was cancel the hearings we had lined up and undertake a pre-study.

What we have in mind is to hear the departmental officials, who have a slide show explaining the fiscal arrangements bill and how it affects the provinces, tomorrow.

Hon. C. William Doody: Is that family viewing or parental guidance?

Senator Everett: It would be parental guidance, I think.

Then, on Thursday, we are trying to line up Mr. Rod Dobell, the head of the School of Public Administration at the University of Victoria. He was the chief of staff of the task force that produced the report "Fiscal Federalism in the 1980s". On the following Tuesday we hope to hear from the Economic Council, and, at some point, the Minister of Finance, and to use the pre-study period to have a general look at the bill.

When the bill reaches us in its final form it might be possible at that point to consider the specific witnesses the honourable senator is talking about. I talked to the university people today, and they asked for an opportunity to appear. They are going to appear before the committee of the other place. I indicated to them that we would have to leave that question open until we actually received the bill. The opportunity may be there, but it may not be a very long one.

The other thing is that we are running into difficulties in getting meeting times. Despite the fact that we accommodated the administration by interfering with our hearings on the main estimates in order to do a pre-study on this bill, we are having difficulty getting meeting times. It may be, therefore, that we will have to give up the pre-study altogether and just wait for the bill to arrive. I do not know quite what is going to happen. It is in the hands of the deputy leader.

That is the tentative schedule. I think it would probably give the committee as much information as possible of a general nature, and I would be glad to hear from the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, or, indeed, any other member of the committee, information as to who they wish to hear in place of those witnesses.

Senator Roblin: That is a constructive reply, and I thank my honourable friend for this information, some of which I must admit he had already mentioned to me. I think it is good.

I hope he will not abandon pre-study, because otherwise we really do put ourselves in an awful bind. I think, however, we should do our best to include not only the official representations, either from the Canada Council or anybody else, but also those of the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the people who are interested in the social problems—and there are several national organizations in that connection, whose names I am sure would be familiar to the committee staff. My hope is that we are able to identify a few of the leading actors in the private sphere, so to speak, who are interested in this question, and specifically invite them to attend, because, to repeat myself, this is a very important task, and we must have a well planned program if we are to get these people in time. However, I leave that with the chairman, because he knows his job and he will get this done.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I would like to have the adviser to the committee on the subject contact the honourable senator for some of the names of people he thinks we should hear from. I think that would be useful.

I reiterate that we are quite prepared to do the pre-study. We are doing the pre-study at the request of the administration. If we have to fight for a committee room, however, in order to do what the administration wants us to do, and lose that fight, then I cannot see the point of doing the pre-study. I think it is up to the administration to give us the opportunity to hold the hearings that are necessary in respect of this bill. It is a very important bill. I am a little mystified as to why, when we knew two or three years ago that this deadline existed—and it was a specific deadline—we are now down to the wire.

We have accommodated the administration by agreeing to conduct a pre-study, we have cancelled other hearings that we thought important, and witnesses whose appearance before us we felt important. I hope the administration will find a way to co-operate with us in order to make this pre-study effective.

● (2140)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have a few comments to make on the matter of the pressure—which I think is the right word to use—that has been put on this committee to deal with the fiscal arrangements bill over a shorter period than any of us would consider to be normally desirable. I am aware that Senator Everett is both an experienced senator and an experienced committee chairman. He knows that the so-called administration has to deal with more than one committee and more than one set of exigencies. We are certainly appreciative of the fact that the committee has made those changes in its priorities and its timing mentioned by the chairman. Because our committee schedule is jammed into three days, all of which are days on which the Senate sits, sometimes difficulties are encountered when an adjustment of this kind is requested. Even though we try to plan as carefully as we can, when we have to make an adjustment there is a domino effect.

We have to do precisely what the chairman of the committee is requesting of us—that is, try to make the adjustments which will enable the committee to do its work. Sometimes it is logistically impossible to do that immediately. A certain amount of tinkering has to be done in order to make it work. There is, however, no question about the unity of objectives.

Senator Everett: I am delighted to hear that from the deputy leader.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE BILL

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Asselin be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Tremblay on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps I should raise this question on another occasion, but it seems to me that members of the Senate would be interested in knowing the proposed program until Easter, and whether there is to be the usual Easter recess. We would also like to know how the ceremony envisaged for April 17 will fit into this program, and perhaps there is other information the deputy leader could give us at this time.

● (1405)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will give you my understanding of the situation.

This week we will sit until tomorrow afternoon and then adjourn as usual. The House of Commons will continue its consideration of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill in the hope of giving it third reading on Monday evening, and it may also be considering today Bill C-89, which concerns housing and which is now the subject of pre-study by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill is rather pivotal in terms of the government's program respecting legislation prior to Easter. In turn, that has an effect on what is possible in terms of an Easter break. As I have mentioned, it is likely that that bill will receive third reading in the House of Commons on Monday evening. I am as sure as I can be that it will not receive third reading before then and, therefore, there is no point in our meeting before Tuesday for the purpose of dealing with it.

As Senator Flynn and I were saying today, the Senate has put into practice a useful device, which it invented, called the "pre-study of a bill in committee," but we think it would be pushing that idea too far to pre-debate a bill before we get it.

The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill is the most important owing to the dates regarding payments to the provinces, and because it is clear that it is very controversial. It was made the subject of pre-study pursuant to a resolution of the Senate yesterday. It is of interest to the provinces and to educators and others. Clearly, it is a matter of wide interest and there are controversial views on it. However, if it is necessary to have that bill passed by April 15, which is the date of the first payment, as distinct from the date when the legislation should take effect, or when the old legislation runs out, then it appears desirable from the government's point of view to conclude debate and have royal assent of the bill some time next week—in other words, although after March 31, before April 15.

Owing to the controversial nature of the bill, however, it is clear we must allot as much time to it as possible. I certainly cannot say that we are not, to use Senator Roblin's expression, being squeezed. We are being squeezed, and undesirably so. Nevertheless, within the framework of available time we will allow as much time as possible for debate, for interventions by the opposition and supporters of the government on this important piece of legislation.

I suggest, therefore, honourable senators, that we consider the following schedule for next week: The Senate will sit on Tuesday afternoon and Tuesday evening, and on Wednesday afternoon. If it seems by that time that, within the context of being squeezed, we have had an adequate opportunity to debate the bill, we will try to have third reading and royal assent by late Wednesday afternoon. If, on the other hand, it appears we have not had sufficient time to debate the bill, we will then consider sitting on Thursday afternoon and, if necessary, Thursday evening. Because the other place will be sitting until 10 p.m. on Thursday there could be royal assent that evening.

In view of that, honourable senators, I recommend that we hold ourselves ready to sit until Thursday evening in order to have royal assent, bearing in mind that, if we do our best within the tightened framework, we could have royal assent by Wednesday afternoon or even Thursday afternoon, if not Thursday evening.

● (1410)

There are two other bills that may require royal assent. There is Bill C-88 dealing with farm loans. It will probably be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. We should commence second reading of that bill this afternoon. The other bill is Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. This bill may receive third reading in the other place this afternoon. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is presently engaged in a pre-study of that bill, and tomorrow afternoon, Tuesday afternoon or Tuesday evening, we could begin its second reading stage.

So, in summary, we should make ourselves available for five sittings in the three days next week, namely, Tuesday afternoon, Tuesday evening, Wednesday afternoon, Thursday afternoon and Thursday evening. The bills we will be dealing with, in order of importance, are the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill, the bill concerning farm credit, and the housing bill.

Senator Flynn: Do I understand that the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill must receive royal assent before we adjourn next week?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should have gone on to the following week. If Bill C-97 receives royal assent before Good Friday, neither the Senate nor the House of Commons will sit the following week. Although the proclamation ceremony will be held in the Senate chamber on April 17, it is not considered a parliamentary event and, therefore, Parliament will not be formally convened. Of course, members of Parliament who wish to participate in the ceremonies may do so, but they do not have to be present.

The House of Commons would then meet the following week on April 19. If things develop according to plan, we will not sit the week of April 19. We will take a well-earned additional week for the hard week we put in while the other place was on its somewhat impromptu holiday.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Flynn: As I understand it, if we are not able to pass Bill C-97, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill, next week, we will come back at the same time as the House of Commons. Does that also apply to Bill C-88 and Bill C-89?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I would agree that passage of Bill C-88 and Bill C-89 is highly desirable, but not necessary insofar as royal assent is concerned.

Senator Flynn: The deputy leader mentioned that the proclamation ceremony is not considered a formal sitting of Parliament. Would he clarify the situation and tell us who is convening this meeting in the Senate chamber, under what authority it is taking place, and how people are selected for invitation? Are senators to be invited?

● (1415)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the proceedings are under the supervision of the government and, in particular, of the Secretary of State.

To the question of when, the answer is April 17. To the question of what, the answer is that it is an unusual event, and there is no real precedent for it in Canadian history, but it comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. As to the question of where, if it has to be in either chamber then it has to be in the Senate because, according to British parliamentary tradition, the Queen cannot enter the House of Commons.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Not since Charles I.

Senator Frith: It has not happened since the reign of Charles II.

Senator Roblin: I am wrong; Charles II used to do it, too. Perhaps Charles III will try it.

Senator Frith: In any event, honourable senators, since neither of those gentlemen is with us to be able to substitute for Her Majesty, she, apparently, feels that she cannot enter the House of Commons.

The plan is to use the Senate chamber because it is the most appropriate Canadian forum for such an event. The intention is that both senators and members of the House of Commons will be invited to participate.

Senator Flynn: Are invitations issued by the Prime Minister?

Senator Frith: I believe invitations are issued by the Secretary of State, but I am not sure.

According to the present plan, senators and members of the House of Commons will be seated on the floor of the Senate.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Are you sure that senators will not be up in the gallery?

Senator Frith: Yes. It is my understanding that the gallery will be occupied by the Diplomatic Corps, and only senators, members of the House of Commons and justices of the Supreme Court of Canada will be on the floor of the chamber.

Invitations will certainly be issued to all senators and all members of the House of Commons. Because of limitations on space, spouses of senators and members of the House of Commons will not be seated on the floor. The present plan, as I understand it, is for spouses to gather in the Railway Committee room.

Senator Flynn: To watch from there?

Senator Frith: By television.

For the moment, I forget what use is to be made of the south gallery.

All of the journalistic paraphernalia and hardware of radio and television transmission will be set up as it has been for Speeches from the Throne, and as it was for the last moments of the debates on the resolution concerning the Constitution.

Senator Flynn: What do you mean by "the last moments"?

Senator Frith: I am referring to the debate on the Constitution.

Senator Flynn: Was that a burial?

Senator Frith: No, I think of it more as a wedding celebration than a burial, but perhaps the Leader of the Opposition and I differ in that view.

Hon. Paul Lafond: Honourable senators, I was happy to hear the reply of the Deputy Leader of the Government to the last question. I shall make my comments on that subject later.

For the moment, I would revert to the previous question relating to the Senate's sitting next Tuesday afternoon. I must once again record my protest against such a sudden decision.

The Deputy Leader of the Government referred to hard-working senators, and there are some. Committees scheduled to meet on Tuesday afternoon will be considerably disturbed by this decision.

If agreement cannot be reached tomorrow by the Deputy Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition that the Senate should sit on Monday evening, at least there should be some arrangement under which the sitting of the Senate on Tuesday afternoon will be brief, with the Question Period postponed to the evening sitting, so that scheduled committee sittings will not be disrupted. As we heard last evening, and as we will no doubt hear again next Tuesday, many committees are pressed for time and for accommodation.

● (1420)

Hon. Eric Cook: And they have arranged for witnesses to appear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am glad to have Senator Lafond's intervention. Perhaps he was not in the chamber when I explained that the purpose of sitting on Tuesday afternoon is to afford as much time as possible for debate on the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill. A sitting Monday evening will not help us because we will not receive that bill until Tuesday.

As to the proposition that there be a short sitting on Tuesday afternoon, the decision to have a sitting on Tuesday afternoon has not yet been taken. I made the suggestion that we sit on Tuesday afternoon simply to give us as much time as possible to deal with the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill. It is an exception; it has an effect on committee meetings, and I am glad that Senator Lafond is here to champion the interests of those committees and the important and hard work they do.

Any time there is a recess, any time it becomes necessary to hold an unusual sitting, these results do follow. Part of the reason for raising these matters today, instead of tomorrow, is that it gives more notice. The information we have with respect to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill is the very latest. In fact, the schedule was received just this morning. Perhaps we can work something out on the basis of the information that we now have. We shall certainly take Senator Lafond's suggestion into account when we meet to consider sitting on Tuesday afternoon, but we will know more about that tomorrow.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, could the deputy leader give us some indication of the proper style of dress for the proclamation ceremonies that are to take place in the Senate chamber?

I ask this question because yesterday my office was told that either a lounge suit or morning coat would be suitable, but a few minutes ago I was told that the Prime Minister's Office conveyed information to my office to the effect that only morning coats would be acceptable. I would ask that that be clarified.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in my opinion—and I do not hold myself out as being a sartorial expert—I would say that—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Frith: I have the feeling that I should not have said that.

Senator Flynn: If you are not, who is?

Senator Frith: I think that what honourable senators feel comfortable in at the opening of a session of Parliament would be acceptable. Whatever they have felt comfortable in, and whatever they do feel comfortable in, would, in my opinion, be appropriate on such an occasion.

Senator Flynn: The Prime Minister will be wearing striped pants, I suppose. That is quite a change from the way he dressed when he first came to the house.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as to what the Prime Minister will wear, I would say—as is said in one well-known game—"I pass."

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I wish to revert to the point Senator Lafond made. I realize the dilemma the government is in with respect to Bill C-97, but Senator Lafond's point is a good one. I wonder if consideration could not be given to his suggestion that there be no Question Period on Tuesday afternoon; that Question Period be put over to Tuesday evening.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as I mentioned earlier, I will take careful note of Senator Lafond's suggestion, and note the support that suggestion has received from Senator Everett. Senator Flynn and myself will certainly take that into account.

Senator Flynn: With only one minister in the house, it shortens Question Period considerably.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF FUND TO FINANCE JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I must admit that I am a little disappointed to note that Honourable Senator Olson is not present in the chamber today, because I had a question to ask him regarding the Alsands project. I also thought that he would have had an announcement to make today, but perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government has it.

I also wanted to ask him about the fact that we are subsidizing the importation of oil when we cannot use the domestic oil we are producing in Alberta. I raised that question last week and hoped for some answers. However, I shall have to content myself by awaiting his return, I suppose.

I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government that has to do with government policy concerning the Unemployment Insurance Fund. The Unemployment Insurance Fund is collected from employers and employees, with some small top-ups from governments. There has been a trend in recent years for the government to reduce its responsibilities to the fund considerably.

Recently there have been a number of announcements to the effect that the employment programs of the government will be largely financed by the Unemployment Insurance Fund. There is, for example, the forest and fish development program announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration the other day, which will call upon the Unemployment Insurance Fund to the extent of $175 million, as well as other programs such as the work-sharing program which will cost, according to his estimate, approximately $100 million this year, and other unemployment alleviation plans also to be financed by the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

● (1425)

The fund is probably in bad shape right now because the estimated unemployment figure of 7-point-something that was contained in the budget last November is now well over 8 per cent, and, therefore, the strain on the fund is obvious. It looks to me as if we are going to have a fairly large draw on the fund.

[Senator Everett.]

First, I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if the government has estimated what these amounts are and what the effect will be, and, secondly, whether that will necessitate an increase in the contributions required from workers and their employers, or whether the Government of Canada is going to reassume some of its lapsed responsibilities to top this fund up when it has been drawn down due to harsh economic conditions. I do not think it was ever the intention that the fund should become a social welfare fund. It is basically an insurance fund, and if we are to treat it as a social welfare fund we need to know from the government what its policy is going to be with respect to financing this unusual move.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I understand the point of the question asked by Honourable Senator Roblin, and I think he has made it quite clear what he wants to know. After giving some background, he said, "I want to be sure what these amounts are." By "these amounts" does he mean the amounts the government has in mind for the programs he referred to? I am not sure what the antecedent of "these amounts" was.

Senator Roblin: I will try to be more precise. I want to know, first of all, what is happening to the fund on the ordinary insurance function, in view of the fact, according to the budget, that we have more unemployment than we expected to have.

The second thing I want to know is what sums the government has in its estimates for these various new programs it announced and which, in turn, will be charged to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. I ask that so we can see exactly what is liable to happen here.

I have a supplementary question. By an amendment to the statute in 1976, or thereabouts, authority was given for this job creation function which is in addition to the original intent of the act, but it states that when that happens the employment must be "conducted by the Government of Canada pursuant to any Act of Parliament." My follow-up question is: By what acts of Parliament are these various unemployment programs, announced by the various ministers, justified? What is the statutory basis on which these expenditures are being made?

Senator Frith: That question is clear also, and I will try to get an answer to it as soon as possible.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government to obtain some information for us with regard to the special industry and labour adjustment program? The deputy leader will be aware that seven communities have been designated under this program—Port-Cartier and Sept-Iles, Quebec; Sydney, Nova Scotia; Tracy and Sorel, Quebec; Windsor, Ontario; and, quite recently, McAdam, New Brunswick—and that for the fiscal year that ends at midnight this evening approximately $100 million was allocated for the program in the budget. The total amount of the program over several years was to have been $320 million. The information I should like to have is how much money has been spent on the program in the fiscal year ending this evening, and how much in each of the communities designated?

I realize that this is the kind of information that I could ask for in written form, and I would have done so if I had the slightest hope that an answer would be forthcoming within a reasonable time, but, as I pointed out last evening, there are many questions on the Order Paper that have been there for over a year to which no answers have yet been given.

● (1430)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall try to make Senator Murray's hopes for an answer to that question more than slight.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—CANADA-FRANCE MARITIME BOUNDARY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government which he will probably have to take as notice. It concerns the proposed visit by French President François Mitterrand to Canada—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Mauroy.

Senator Marshall: The article I read said:

French President François Mitterrand surprised Canadian officials in Brussels yesterday by saying he wants to meet Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau soon.

That appeared in this morning's newspaper.

I raise the question because of a delicate issue that has arisen concerning the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Perhaps this might be an opportune time to suggest to the Prime Minister that the question of the boundary between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada—which affects our fisheries, fishing treaties and seabed mining, which is likely to be so important in future years—should be raised. Rather than wait until something happens that we do not wish to see, if the meeting with Premier Mauroy or President Mitterrand is held, then this issue should be given priority and dealt with for the sake of future harmonious relations.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there are two aspects to the honourable senator's question. As he may have noticed, there was surprise here as well as in Brussels over the news of a possible visit by President Mitterrand. I am not suggesting it will not take place, but this was the first I heard about it. I had asked for, and have now received, information on St. Pierre and Miquelon which I should place on record, and give the honourable senator an opportunity to ask some supplementaries, if necessary.

Negotiations with France have been pursued on and off since 1972. That is on the question of the maritime boundary. The most recent round of discussions took place in Ottawa on October 21 and 22, 1981. The Canadian delegation made it clear to the French side that we were not prepared to accept their claim to a 200-mile economic zone around the small islands located right off the coast of Newfoundland. The classic "enclave situation" of this French possession does not entitle France, either under international law or international practice, to any extensive zone of maritime jurisdiction. The plan is to discuss with the French Foreign Minister, M. Cheysson, at a meeting in the spring, how to advance those negotiations.

On November 24, 1981, two Canadian fishing vessels were boarded, with their permission, by officials from a French patrol vessel about 100 miles off St. Pierre and Miquelon. There have been no further boardings since then. We have sent a note to the French embassy pointing out that the boardings took place in Canada's fishing zone.

On Sunday, March 14, Canadian fisheries officers boarded two French fishing vessels off the coast of Newfoundland in Canadian waters and found that their log books had under-reported their respective catches. The vessels initially refused to comply with orders to report to a Canadian port for inspection. They went instead to St. Pierre. Following representations to the French authorities, the vessels proceeded to Halifax, where charges are being laid. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, is prepared to answer questions in greater detail. Should Senator Marshall, after he has heard this explanation, wish to ask some supplementaries, I shall endeavour to obtain the information from the minister.

Senator Marshall: With the greatest respect, I am aware of all that the Deputy Leader of the Government has indicated, but we have heard the same story over the past 10 or 12 years, that negotiations are taking place, and the present controversy over a reasonable boundary line between Canada and the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon must be resolved. I think that as time—of which we are wasting so much—goes on, the opportune moment would be when meetings occur at the highest level, when efforts can be made to come to some arrangement, even to the point of Canada's taking over St. Pierre and Miquelon, which might be a good idea.

● (1435)

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You can try it if you like.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not want to say anything with regard to that last suggestion, but I do take Senator Marshall's point and appreciate the fact that he is using this occasion to link this boundary dispute with a possible visit by President Mitterrand.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN SHIPMENTS—EFFECT OF DELAYED OPENING OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, and, to comfort the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to say that I gave the minister notice of the question. I mention this so that the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition does not stand up and say that I have planted the question.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You can have planted answers, too!

Senator Buckwold: Well, it is just about seeding time, so it is the planting season.

In view of the delay in the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which I understand will amount to several weeks, due to the very severe weather and heavier than normal ice conditions, could the minister inform us how this will affect the target of 26 million tonnes set by the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1981-82 crop year? I may say that this target is a record one, and western farmers are hopeful that it can be met.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): To reply to the honourable senator's question, it is true that the Seaway will be opening perhaps between two and three weeks later this year than has been the case in each of the last two years. This, of course, in itself, would lead to a shortening of the summer shipping season. The Wheat Board, however, is optimistic that in spite of this delay the target of 26 million tonnes will be achieved. There is every chance of achieving it. It is pointed out that the rail movement through the St. Lawrence system this winter has been very successful. The winter rail movement to date—that is, up to the week of March 21 to March 27—has achieved more than 1.2 million tonnes, which is about 50 per cent higher than last year.

Exports of grain to March 24 were 15 million tonnes, compared with 13.2 million tonnes in the same period last year. This represents an increase of 14.1 per cent.

The interim target—that is, the target for shipments from August 1, 1981, to the end of March, 1982—was set at 15.1 million tonnes. A week or so ago it looked as though this target would be exceeded. Right now it looks as though the shipments will be just about on target—that is, approximately 15 million tonnes.

The exports to date out of the west coast are reaching 7.15 million tonnes. This is 20 per cent better than last year, so that the performance to date has been excellent. We are ahead of last year. The Wheat Board is optimistic that the 26 million tonnes can be achieved.

I want to say that the railway performance during the crop year has been excellent. All records have been broken in spite of some temporary difficulties on the west coast during a very severe winter. The fact is that shipments through the west coast are running 20 per cent higher than a year ago.

[Senator Frith.]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—PREVENTION OF RIGHT WING COUP

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government. I realize that he will have to take it as notice. My question relates to the elections that took place at the beginning of the week in the Republic of El Salvador, and which have been the cause of some controversy in Canada.

● (1440)

Now that the elections have taken place, I would like to know whether the government—and, in particular, the Secretary of State for External Affairs—will be making representations to the United States government to stress the fact that in Canada's view it is most important that the U.S. government do everything in its power to prevent a possible right wing coup in El Salvador. I think it should be made clear that, while the Canadian government was supportive of the elections, at the same time it emphasizes its support of the democratic process in the Republic of El Salvador, and recognizes the obvious risk of a coup from the right wing.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That is some speech.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will pass that question along to the minister.

GRAIN

PROPOSED CHANGE IN CROWSNEST RATES—EFFECT ON EASTERN CANADA

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question which was asked by Senator Bosa on March 2, 1982, regarding the economic impact of the proposed changes in the Crowsnest rates on eastern Canada.

Officials have informed me that the Department of Agriculture retained Dr. David Harvey under contract to write a report entitled, "Burdens and Benefits as the Crow Flies." This report encompasses the effects of the proposed rate change upon livestock and income in eastern Canada. The report has been completed but is not yet translated. It will be published and made public.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for my honourable friend. He has referred to a study, if I heard him correctly, on the consequences of the Crow rate in some respects. Is he prepared to let us have a copy of that?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am prepared to make further inquiries. The notes that I have indicate that it has not, as yet, been translated. It will be published and made public, so I am prepared to pursue the question put to me by Honourable Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: I see; as soon as it is translated we will be able to obtain a copy. I ask my honourable friend whether he has read a similar study prepared by the University of Manitoba, indicating the financial impact of the Crow rate upon the economy of that province.

Senator Argue: I have not studied that report, no.

Senator Roblin: Will my honourable friend read it if I get a copy for him?

Senator Argue: I will be delighted to read it. I am sure that the change in the Crow rate will have a major economic impact upon Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and places all across this country. Its impact will affect different sections of the economy in different ways. I am sure that this study, which I have not as yet had the privilege of seeing, will indicate that the impact goes both ways in the province of Manitoba as well.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is very adept at changing his ground. I congratulate him.

THE ESTIMATES

ENVELOPE SYSTEM—ROLE OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question which was asked of me last night by Senator Murray with respect to what remains of the role of the Treasury Board, under the chairmanship of the President, in the light of the envelope system.

The Treasury Board is still responsible for the Financial Administration Act, the Public Service Staff Relations Act, all collective bargaining, and, interestingly enough, the application of official languages. It is also responsible for all man-year decisions.

The Comptroller General reports to the President of the Treasury Board. Therefore, his program evaluation effectively comes under the aegis of the President of the Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board is also a member of every policy committee within the envelope system and is a member of the priorities and planning committee of cabinet.

I might say that a question on this subject was asked by Senator Doody of the President of the Treasury Board at a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on November 19, 1981. Part of the minister's answer was as follows:

When a policy decision is made—

And there he is referring to a policy decision under the envelope system.

—it then has to come to Treasury Board for two reasons, effectively. One is to ensure that the terms and conditions of the program are adequate to protect the taxpayers' dollars. The Treasury Board would not, in such a case, go into the policy issues involved, because all of us have the opportunity of doing that in any event on these policy committees—of all of which I am a member—but at that stage it is a contract, or whatever, subject to the same thorough analysis as it always was. Questions may be raised by the staff or by the ministers of the board as to whether other terms and conditions should not be added, et cetera. In addition, the Treasury Board has final authority for the allocation of person-years to any of these new programs, because that in turn reflects the expertise that is within the Treasury Board to determine whether the department is seeking more resources than it needs or, in some instances, whether it does not have the necessary resources in order to effect the program delivery efficiently.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 25, 1982, debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States", tabled in the Senate on March 24, 1982.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my reason for speaking today to this subject on the Order Paper is that, first of all, I am a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and the committee's vice-chairman, and I believe it is important that a member of the opposition should express his views on the document tabled in this chamber last week.

Honourable senators, the Senate may occasionally lay itself open to criticism for reasons we have mentioned in the past in the course of the Senate's reviews of its activities. The same does not apply, however, to the Senate committees. For many years, our committees have done serious work, and their recommendations have always been very well received by the Canadian people. I am not going to go down the list of Senate committees and the recommendations they have made in various areas, but, as a member of the Senate, I am proud to say that all our committees have done serious work which has always been very well received by the public.

In fact, the work of our committee was praised this past weekend by a number of experts in the field across Canada, and it received considerable attention from the media. Yesterday I was reading Ron Collister's comments in the Edmonton Journal of March 25, 1982, and I quote:

● (1500)

[English]

The Canadian Senate is an institution that gets little public respect, mainly because it's non-representative and governments ignore it, anyway.

But, now and again, it steps out of character and makes a lot of sense.

It happened this week . . .

The Senate foreign affairs committee has just endorsed free trade between Canada and the United States.

Frankly, when I read that, I felt like standing up and applauding: it took rare, political courage.

[Translation]

I could go on to quote further expressions of appreciation for the work of this committee which appeared in the press last weekend.

Honourable senators, we are now considering a major committee report on our trade relations with the United States.

The report has been called courageous, too bold in some parts, and occasionally ahead of its time, and it will probably get a mixed reception from the Canadian people. However, the report's main objective was not to condemn the kind of Canadian protectionism that is found in certain groups, but to invite reflexion on more modern and more imaginative approaches to solving our enormous economic problems, especially in our export markets.

We should realize that our exports to the United States are worth $100 billion annually, that 70 per cent of our commercial exports are directed towards our neighbour to the south, and that a reduction in tariffs as a result of the signing of multilateral trade agreements between the United States and Canada is already putting our two countries in a de facto free trade situation.

Obviously, the committee has suggested that Canada look to its neighbour to the south in its attempts to turn the economy around and trim its overall trade deficit valued at $20 billion for manufactured products.

Honourable senators, in 1987, when the GATT agreements become effective, 80 per cent of Canadian exports to the United States will enter that country duty free, and up to 15 per cent will be subject to a tariff of only 5 per cent: American exports to Canada will be, respectively, 65 per cent and 26 per cent. In the circumstances, as committee chairman Senator van Roggen said at his press conference, Canada may well find itself shut out from international markets for manufactured goods because of the many diverse and inefficient industries producing mainly for Canada's small domestic market.

People will say: What about Canada's political and cultural independence, which might be threatened by free trade with our neighbours to the south? And what about economic nationalism, which finds many supporters in central Canada especially, who sometimes use it to camouflage the old protectionist concept? The witnesses who appeared before our committee gave us the assurance that there was no threat now, one way or another.

Before continuing my speech, honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the chairman of the committee on the manner in which he led the debate. He did so with patience, courage and tremendous dedication. I also wish to congratulate the members of the committee who faithfully attended meetings on a sometimes difficult subject matter, to listen to experts on subjects with which they were not familiar.

First of all, we must ask ourselves how the experts define the concept of a free trade area. We were told that, in the final analysis, a free trade area would gradually eliminate still existing customs tariffs. It was also said, and this is more important, that the bilateral free trade agreement gives Canada and the United States the mechanisms they need to abolish or reduce non-tariff barriers between the two countries. The agreement would not affect tariffs or non-tariff barriers which either country might wish to use against a third country.

The other day while I was waiting for my plane at the airport, I was talking to Senator Croll, who has vast political experience, in the Senate and the country in general, and who knows about protectionist policies. He told me: "You know, when I hear you talking about free trade, the word makes me laugh, because I think that the definition of the word always implies restrictions." However, the members of the committee went along with his demands, and I also wish to congratulate them on their contribution to the committee's work. I would also have liked to thank Senator Grosart, who preceded me as deputy chairman of the committee. Senator Grosart and Senator van Roggen were the committee's driving force and helped it reach its present conclusions.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The present deputy chairman should also be congratulated.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear.

Senator Asselin: Thank you. It is, of course, a difficult and complex subject. Most of us find it rather difficult to juggle figures around and compare methods in connection with our exports and trade relations with other countries.

I asked some experts to do some research for me and to advise me on recommendations made in the committee's report. Together we went through the report and concluded that perhaps I should say a few words this afternoon about the bilateral free trade agreement, which cannot be a common market for the reasons set out in the report. There is a possibility that Mexico will join the agreement as soon as its economy has reached a level closer to ours. So-called soft sectors of our industry could continue to benefit from protective tariffs, despite the bilateral agreement. Free trade would not prevent us from increasing domestic processing of our raw materials, or the Americans from being very interested in a bilateral free trade agreement, while other GATT countries might be admitted to this kind of agreement, provided certain conditions were met.

Obviously, I do not support everything the report says. There are some problems I intend to point out towards the end of my speech, but first, honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about the points I have just raised.

Senator Croll meant there is never free trade ipso facto because there are always restrictions and control mechanisms. I agree. But I think there is a difference between out-and-out protectionism and controlled free trade.

The proposal for a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States is aimed at strengthening Canadian industry by helping it to rationalize sectors that will no longer be protected by traditional tariff barriers, without, however, enjoying the advantages of its competitors, including access to large markets. This is a very important issue. Are we supposed to restrict our markets? Of course not; we have to expand. But how are we going to do that and what approach will be most acceptable to Canada and to the countries with whom we intend to do business?

There is also talk about creating a common market. However, unlike a free-trade zone, a common market implies the free movement of goods, workers and capital between the member states and the fact that these states must accept uniform tariffs for the rest of the world and harmonize their non-tariff barriers, as well as many other things concerning their relations with each other and the rest of the world. The best-known example of this system is that of the European Common Market. The European Community specifically expects some extent of political co-operation, as evidenced by the recent direct elections to the Parliament of the Community. At the very least, the Community also promotes a full political union.

The reluctance of certain countries to join the EEC, as was the case for Great Britain, is due to the fear of erosion of their national sovereignty. These characteristics do not exist in any of the free-trade agreements negotiated by Finland, Sweden, Norway, Austria, Switzerland and Portugal with EEC, and would not be found in this type of agreement between Canada and the United States.

What about the processing of our resources? A free-trade agreement would not affect mining and other Canadian resources, which we could export or not, as we wish. In fact, such resources are generally duty-free unless they have gone at least through the first stages of processing. Indeed, processing would be encouraged and stimulated by the agreement, since it would give processed resources free access to the American market. Oil, natural gas and electricity are not dutiable and could continue to require the same licensing and be regulated by the same regulatory bodies in both countries.

If Canada and the United States follow the European example, not only agriculture but also fisheries would be excluded from the agreement, even where customs tariffs are concerned. What about the textile and shoe industries? The Canadian quotas for textiles and shoes imported from third countries would not be affected. On the contrary, both the Canadian textile and shoe industries could continue to benefit from protection against the rest of the world while having free access to the American market. This free trade does not mean a free movement of workers between the two countries, as I mentioned earlier. As for the flow of capital between the two countries, there is already such unrestricted movement that this issue does not seem important.

In fact, even in the European Community certain regulations restrict the movement of capital. Policies will have to be developed to influence direct investments from both sides, such as those which Canada applies through its Foreign Investment Review Agency—FIRA. These policies will also have to be examined during the negotiations.

When we had this exchange of views in the committee, the possibility of including Mexico in this great north-south market was also the subject of much discussion. This appeared to have certain disadvantages, and I would now like to refer to that matter. The United States repeatedly attempted to suggest a trilateral North American agreement between Canada, Mexico and the U.S.A. However, the development stage of Mexico does not parallel that of either Canada or the United States, and the American government is quite aware of that fact. Indeed, in August 1981, in his report to Congress on the North American trade agreements, President Reagan stated that for the time being it seemed wiser to improve trade relations with Mexico and Canada on an individual rather than on a regional basis.

We know how much President Reagan, during the presidential election, when discussing relations that should exist between Canada and the United States, insisted on including Mexico in those basic economic and trade negotiations.

Mexican industry is highly protected and Mexico is not yet a member of GATT. Mexican wages are much lower than those in other countries, and therefore American workers have concerns of a different nature about Mexican labour and Canadian labour. All things being equal, Mexico has no industrial infrastructure and needs other industries to expand its manufacturing sector. The market for highly sophisticated consumer goods is quite limited. Aware of those differences, one American consultant believes that given Mexico's present development stage, it is impossible for the time being to consider a balanced trilateral free trade agreement. From the American point of view, two parallel bilateral agreements are preferable.

Despite those findings, a North American free trade zone could include a conditional clause on the most favoured nation providing that Mexico, as soon as it can offer similar access conditions, could be part of the North American free trade zone. Other nations party to the GATT agreements, such as the EEC nations, could take an unfavourable view of such an agreement, but they would be ill-advised to take retaliatory measures because they also are part of regional groups such as the European Common Market, and free trade with former members of EFTA, the European Free Trade Association.

The Senate committee believes there is a strong case for bilateral free trade. It is possible, in their view, to convince Washington to consider what would probably happen if those countries maintained the status quo. Given the close interdependence now obtaining, domestic policies in one country often have unwanted ill effects in the neighbouring country. Trade confrontations likely will become more numerous.

It was apparent when we held that meeting with our American colleagues in Key Largo last month. I think that the senators who are present in this chamber will be able at the appropriate time to give a pretty fair assessment of the economic difficulties and concerns which our American colleagues are experiencing with respect to the existing trade between Canada and the United States, and vice versa. The views and opinions expressed during that meeting reveal that something has to be done to improve the trade relations between both countries.

Another factor which might influence the reaction of the Americans is their own international economic position. During 30 years they showed the world the way towards opening up international trade, but they had to take a back seat in the 70's, as the European Community and Japan grew stronger.

The United States was unsuccessful in its numerous attempts to convince the community to ease up on its agricultural protectionism and the Japanese to lower the barriers which limit access to their domestic markets.

If they were to decide to sign a free trade agreement with Canada, the United States would insist on an agreement involving all provinces so that they would all be party to that agreement. Under the American constitution, the federal government is allowed to impose trade regulations upon the states and the municipalities, whereas in Canada the federal government can only act as coordinator and adviser when it comes to provincial non-tariff barriers.

The United States will not be prepared to consider a proposal from Canada unless this country clearly demonstrates its preference for bilateral free trade. Honourable senators, one American witness raised that aspect of the question and it would seem that the Americans are probably not interested in going through the same experience as the one they had in 1947-48 when, with full cabinet approval, officials from both countries had toiled over the drafting of that model of free trade between the two countries. The then Canadian prime minister decided at the last minute not to see that project through.

According to their spokesman, Ambassador Brock, who also acts as their international trade representative, the United States were adamant—agriculture had to be included in a bilateral free trade agreement. He suggested that social policies, such as marketing, a sales promotion office and so on, designed to help farmers would not be a roadblock for the agreement. And yet it is very likely that the Canadian government would have to review its agricultural policies and perhaps change a good many of them, a step which Canadian farmers would not appreciate and which would complicate the creation of a bilateral free trade zone. The same applies to fisheries.

Evidently, we could enumerate or comment on the series of recommendations made in that report which, as I said earlier, will enjoy divided support. It should give results. The government may draw some new economic policies from it. We should ask the government to take such an important step. With the experience I have acquired since I have been sitting in the House of Commons and in the Senate, I can tell you that the government has seldom readily accepted a report from one of its committees, whether it was from the House of Commons or the Senate. Some parts of certain reports were accepted at times, but I think that before approving the principle of free trade with the United States, the government will thoroughly consider the matter. It is up to us, as members of the House of Commons or of the Senate, if we realize that the time has come for Canada to take this important step in the development of our export trade with the United States, our neighbour to the south, to exert the necessary pressures if we want this dream to come true. I understand that the response would certainly not be unanimous either on the government or the opposition side.

I read in a recent issue of La Presse that John Crosbie, the Progressive Conservative Party critic on foreign affairs, was in the United States. He had made a statement, claiming that he was in favour of a common market involving Canada and the United States. His opinion contradicts that which Mr. Michael Wilson, another former Progressive Conservative Party minister, expressed two weeks ago before the Canadian Club in Montreal, when he said that we should consider establishing a free trade to include the United States. As you can see, two senior ministers of a former government who are members of the same party hold different views as to what the nature of our trade and economic ties with the United States should be.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to go any further, for I know that other senators are anxious to deal with this important issue. It is the responsibility of the Senate to carry out an in-depth study of this report, to show the Canadian people that the reports submitted by our committees are not immediately stashed away on the shelves. They are there to be implemented.

I am proud, therefore, to have been involved in the production of such a high quality report, which comes at the proper time, if Canada is willing to review every aspect of its economic policies in order to improve its competitiveness on international markets.

Our economy is ill and facing difficult times. We will have done a useful job if the recommendations of this committee are ever received in good faith, and if they are perceived by us as a great contribution from one of the Senate committees, providing economic solutions which should not be brushed aside outright.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

FARM CREDIT ACT FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE BILL

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers.

He said: Honourable senators, I have found that it helps one understand the principles of legislation if one analyzes that legislation on the basis of the evils or problems that it is attempting to solve. I find that to be the case both in studying a statute at its legislative stage, and in trying to interpret or understand it in judicial proceedings.

So, I propose to give you some of the background to the problems addressed in this legislation, and then to look at its main thrust and its particular provisions from that perspective.

Each honourable senator has received a copy of the bill as passed by the House of Commons, and it will be noted that the explanatory notes are more detailed than is often the case with explanatory notes accompanying bills presented to the House of Commons or to the Senate for consideration.

Honourable senators, the proposed changes are being brought forward at a rather crucial stage in the development of Canadian agriculture. Of all the sectors of our national economy, agriculture gives evidence of being one of the most promising areas of growth.

In July of last year, the Minister of Agriculture put forward the Agri-Food Strategy, which maps out the government's concerns for the future of agriculture. That policy estimates that Canada could increase its agricultural output by two-thirds by the year 2000. It is my strong belief that farmers will respond positively to this challenge, and I believe they will, if they are provided with the tools necessary to make that projection a reality.

Those of us who have some connection with the farm community—and I suppose, in a way, all of us have some connection with the farm community in this country—know that credit, especially in today's economic climate, is the catalyst that can bring together the various components of new technology and modern management practices.

Within a short period of time, the farms that I worked on moved from horsepower to tractor power, and since then have moved to very advanced mechanization. My neighbour in Lanark County has a substantial investment in mechanization, management and accounting. He is really in big business. These are essential to increased production. Major capital purchases must be financed over a long term at reasonable rates of interest.

● (1520)

Honourable senators, the intention of Bill C-88 is to set the stage for the Farm Credit Corporation to provide more of the funds needed to finance Canadian agriculture. The most important amendment contained in this legislation is to provide the FCC with a new source of funding.

I will now give you a little more background to the main thrust of the bill. The Farm Credit Corporation is currently funded entirely by loans from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Clause 8 of the bill before you provides the corporation with the authority to complement its borrowing from sources other than the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The intention is to allow the FCC to participate in the financial markets through several types of instruments and not be limited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The instruments referred to are bonds or debentures, and special investment instruments could also be offered which could be especially attractive to farmers, particularly retiring farmers who wish to retain their investment in agriculture.

Total long-term credit extended to farmers from all sources in Canada has risen by over 20 per cent annually from an estimated $655 million in 1975 to an estimated $1,900 million in 1980. Until recently, the FCC supplied over 70 per cent of the long-term farm credit. In 1980, the FCC extended 26 per cent of the total long-term credit, and is expected to extend about 20 per cent in 1981.

Additional pressures on the FCC to meet the growing demand for long-term credit are, of course, brought about by budgetary restraints, rapidly increasing capital values and changing economic conditions. The amendment to allow the corporation to borrow from the financial markets will help the corporation to meet this demand for increased funds. As the mechanisms for borrowing are put in place, and the corporation establishes itself in the financial markets, a progressively larger proportion of its funds could be obtained directly from the financial markets.

That is the background to the primary purpose of the bill, which is to ensure that Canadian farmers have access to an adequate source of the long-term credit they need to finance their farming businesses. But there are other important clauses in the bill which will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to be more responsive to the needs of Canadian producers. That is why the bill has several other clauses which, as I say, are quite well explained, and I will try to deal with them basically in the order in which they appear. In doing so, I will point out what I understand to be the problem addressed by the clause and the solution proposed by it.

First, the Farm Credit Act presently gives the FCC the authority to make loans to applicants under 35 years of age whose principal occupation is not farming but who intend to make farming their principal occupation within five years of receiving the loan. That restriction could be considered incompatible with the spirit of the Canadian Human Rights Act as being discriminatory on the basis of age. Therefore, the first solution is the simple removal of the age restriction, thereby allowing applicants of any age to participate in the phase-in program.

Secondly, the corporation makes loans on the security of mortgages on farm lands or farm lands and chattels. Currently, no mortgage advance is made unless the mortgage registration is completed in accordance with provincial requirements.

Having dealt with the general thrust of the bill, and started on the more particular provisions, I should like to pause here to say that many of these detailed matters may seem rather pedestrian—if that is the proper word to use when referring to agriculture—but they are aspects that have been irritants and have, in total and individually, blocked the objective of making more funds available for long-term farm financing.

Therefore, to summarize so far, the first problem dealt with is the age restriction on applicants who are not now full-time farmers but who intend to become full-time farmers. The second problem, as I mentioned, is that the corporation can make loans on the security of mortgages on farm lands, or farm lands and chattels, but cannot make an advance unless the mortgage registration is complete. Those of us who are lawyers will know that sometimes there is a long delay in clearing matters of title and so on, particularly in farm lands. Often they pass through estates, and the difficulties created by wills and intestacies must be overcome.

The intention here is to partly remove that problem. Clause 11 will help meet the need of more farmers because the corporation will be able to disburse up to 30 per cent of the loan funds before the long process of mortgage documentation is completed. The disbursement of a portion of a loan prior to mortgage registration will save farmers the cost and inconvenience of interim financing until mortgage funds from the corporation are available. I know that that often happens. A farmer may be entitled to the benefit of a lower interest mortgage loan but needs the funds immediately because of planting time, or other exigencies that arise in agriculture, and so has to go to the bank and pay the prime rate plus some percentage while waiting for the money from the approved loan. It may be that the farmer needs to make a payment to initiate a land transaction, or a cash payment to a building supplier to take advantage of a discount.

Thirdly, section 13 of the Farm Credit Act limits the corporation's borrowing authority to 25 times its capital. Capital contributed to the corporation by the Government of Canada will reach almost $143 million by the end of the 1981-82 fiscal year, which is today. Thus, the maximum borrowing authority will be reached early in 1982-83. The proposed solution is by way of an amendment that would increase the corporation's borrowing authority from $3.75 billion to $5.625 billion. The capital of the corporation was last increased in 1978 by 50 per cent, from $100 million to $150 million.

The fourth problem is that of seeing to it that the family farm stays in the family. We know that that has received much attention in recent years, and this bill provides a solution. One of the amendments would allow the FCC to provide financing to a farming corporation to fund a shareholder loan to allow the entry of another individual into the farming operation. Sons and daughters will thus be able to join their parents on the family farm or will, at least, be assisted to do so.

Fifthly, according to the Farm Credit Act, the corporation can only make loans on the security of farm lands, or farm lands and chattels. Additional security can be taken but a loan cannot be based on this additional security. An amendment in this bill would allow additional security, as defined in the regulations, to be taken into consideration in calculating the size of loan a borrower may take out. This additional security could be, for instance, equity interest in feeder cattle or even savings certificates which, if cashed in before maturity, would result in a loss.

Sixthly, the corporation is limited to maintaining accounts in its own name in the Bank of Canada or in chartered banks designated by the Minister of Finance. The proposed solution to this difficulty is that in future the corporation, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, be allowed to maintain accounts in its own name in any bank or financial institution in or outside Canada.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It could be a co-operative credit union.

● (1530)

Senator Frith: Yes. That would greatly improve the cash management opportunities of the corporation as well as its financial performance. The question of co-operatives, raised by Senator Flynn, should be pursued in committee.

Honourable senators, there are a number of ancillary provisions, such as the provision for an increase in the number of members of the corporation from five to seven. It has had a five-person board since 1959; but 23 years later the business of the corporation has grown in complexity and scope, and the two additional members, with their diverse experience, would greatly enhance the work of the board.

There are a number of other provisions contained in the bill which could be considered to be of a housekeeping nature. They are nevertheless necessary to eliminate obsolete terms as well as to update the act to reflect current agricultural conditions. The result will be an act which is easier to understand and administer. Honourable senators may have noticed that several of the earlier clauses deal with problems of translation, such as a change in the wording to "agriculteur".

In conclusion, perhaps honourable senators will permit me to say something about the corporation. I know that in my own county the corporation has not had uniform and perpetual popularity—it has had its ups and downs—but I believe that with the improvements that have been made over the years, the corporation does perform a vital function in helping Canadian farmers finance their operations and in providing them with advisory services. Credit advisers counsel clients, or borrowers, who recognize at times that they face higher levels of risk and would benefit from continuous farm business analysis, financial planning, and the production and financial monitoring that the advisory services program offers. Of the total number of borrowers approved annually, more than 15 per cent agree with the continuing advisory services program.

As for the lending program, the results of an FCC special farm survey showed beyond any doubt how valuable the corporation's contribution is to the agricultural industry. That survey examined the financial characteristics of the people who have received funds from the corporation in 1981, and compared them to the average Canadian farmer. It is clear from the study that the FCC is currently lending to a much smaller scale of farm than the average. That is important because in some areas it has the reputation of lending money only to large, already successful farmers, but the facts and the statistics show the contrary.

On a national basis, the assets of the average FCC borrower in 1981 were $375,000, compared to $518,700 for the average Canadian farmer. At the same time, the average FCC farmer debt was $185,000 as opposed to $78,000 for the average. This results in a net worth of 51 per cent for the FCC borrower compared to 85 per cent for the average Canadian farmer. Certainly, one inference from those statistics is that the FCC is at least trying to put the money where it is most needed.

Honourable senators are aware that the corporation accomplishes these functions without appropriations from Parliament, and covers its cost of operation, including losses, with a one per cent margin. I believe we can sincerely laud its patient collection policy on overdue accounts.

In the 22 years since it was founded, it has displayed sound management policies, and, above all, a sense of humanity. It has continued to make that its objective. I hope honourable senators will join me in supporting the bill which will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to do an even better job for Canadian farmers

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I wish to adjourn this debate, but I do not intend to give up my turn to anyone else. As you know, I am a farmer just like Senator Frith!

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, there will be a reception as usual after royal assent, but this reception is a special one and I hope that most, if not all, honourable senators will attend. I have invited leaders of all parties in the other house, because today, for the first time, a lady will act as Deputy Governor General.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Speaker, it will be better than usual. You said "as usual", but the occasion requires something better than usual.

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes. It will be a little more elaborate.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Bertha Wilson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Bertha Wilson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act relating to the inspection of electric and gas meters and supplies

An Act to amend the Pest Control Products Act

An Act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code

The Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1982.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1983.

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 1, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TABLING OF MCCrackEN REPORT

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, can the Deputy Leader of the Government advise us when the McCracken report on the entire pension process is going to be tabled, if that is the correct procedure? What stage has been reached at the present time. The report deals with the investigation of the long delay in the processing of pension applications.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries and endeavour to have a report for next week.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS APPROVING COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving supplementary budgets for the following committees:

Agriculture
Foreign Affairs
Northern Pipeline (Special)

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-89

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I desire to present an oral report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred the subject matter of Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

Pursuant to that order, your committee examined and considered the bill. Consequent upon the statement made in this chamber yesterday respecting the business that has to be dealt with before the Easter recess, and in order to expedite consideration of Bill C-89, which has now been passed by the other place, it is proposed that this oral report be made, for which there is precedent. In due course, the written report, with translation, will be tabled, and will form part of the permanent records of the Senate.

With that preface, I would like to tell you the highlights of the subject matter of the bill as gleaned by your committee from the minister and the officers of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation who appeared as witnesses.

The bill deals with the Canadian Rental Supply Plan and, it might be said, indirectly, although it is part of the overall plan, with the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan. As to the Canada Rental Supply Plan, there was a provision on budget night under which it was indicated that $350 million was available for allocation for such a program. The program is envisaged as having a life of approximately two years. As it came out in evidence, supplementary funds have been provided to the program in the amount of approximately $100 million. This would enable the plan to produce up to 30,000, rather than the original 15,000, units.

The plan, of course, as you all know, meets in part the very pressing need in Canada at the present time for rental accommodation and for mortgage renewal payments that are falling due and that have fallen due on and from September 1, 1981. It is proposed that these mortgage renewal payments will take two forms. One form will be the deferral procedure by which, for a specified period of time and on conditions, the payments due on renewal of the mortgage will be deferred. If the taxpayer does not meet the requirements for deferral, there is a provision for a grant of up to $3,000.

I shall give you a summary of the details of this plan. If you have equity in your home of more than 5 per cent, and after renewing your mortgage calculate that you would be spending more than 30 per cent of your total household pre-tax income on mortgage payments and property taxes, your certified lender may be able to defer your interest payments by up to $3,000 for one year. In effect, the interest deferred is a loan which results in an increase in your mortgage debt and will require repayment at the end of your deferral period. The lender will be guaranteed against loss relative to deferment by the Government of Canada.

● (1410)

In the alternative, if you have equity of less than 5 per cent, and are spending more than 30 per cent of your income on payments, you may be eligible for a government grant of up to $3,000, which is paid directly to your certified lender. The interest deferral or the grant begins on your renewal date and continues for 12 months, unless the property is sold, or the mortgage is repaid in full, or you fall into arrears in your payments.

To be eligible for the plan, your mortgage renewal date must occur between September 1, 1981, and November 11, 1982, inclusive. Those are, in bare outline, the governing conditions in relation to the administration of this plan.

I should like for a moment to refer to the allocation of these funds—the $350 million. It has been estimated in the department and by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that, of the $350 million, up to not more than $50 million might be required in connection with the mortgage renewal program. The balance would be allocable to the rental supply plan. It was felt, however, that in the first year of this two-year plan the demand for rental supply units might be substantially more than $100 million or even $150 million. Therefore, the Minister of Finance allocated out of contingency reserves another $100 million. The effect of that will be to enable the corporation to supply money in connection with the carrying-out of this plan. There would be 30,000 units instead of the original 15,000 units which would have been produced if only 50 per cent of the moneys had been applied.

The corporation, when before us, indicated that it was anticipated that there would be a big rush coming from the recognized or registered builders. In view of that, the matter has already been processed to a considerable extent in preparation for the coming into force of this bill and these moneys becoming available for this plan. Consequently, the period between the passage of this legislation and the time when the plan might be said to have become operative will be short. As a matter of fact, there is a stipulation in the plan that there is a limitation period of three weeks in respect of the period between the arrangement or agreement with the builder accepted for purposes of such construction and the commencement of the work, and much of the work, which might ordinarily commence only after a plan had been approved by Parliament, has, in a tentative way, already been done. I refer to the arrangement of supplies and building materials, and things of that kind. The corporation was able to do that on the basis that within their existing requirements and building plans, if the plan were not acceptable to Parliament, they would have a use for whatever they had indirectly committed themselves for.

● (1415)

I should like to tell you some of the terms and conditions of this plan because its most important aspect is to meet the pressing need of rental accommodation and the pressure that is developing in connection with mortgage renewals. These are the two items in Bill C-89.

So far as Canadian Rental Supply Plan loans are concerned, they are subject to certain basic conditions. There are certain exceptions or exclusions in relation to these rental housing projects. The types of housing assistance that will not be provided by this plan are those referred to in section 56.1 of the National Housing Act and MURBs. I believe MURB means "multiple unit residential building", and it covers a special building situation which is reflected in the construction of condominiums. The minister gave some explanation of that item in the budget and indicated a certain favourable attitude, in the period between budget night and the end of last year. Therefore, MURBs, under their own power, could operate and would not be subject to the provisions of the budget, clearly, until the end of 1981. MURBs are excluded for that reason, and if they are under way they will have to continue construction themselves and, therefore, will not constitute any drain on these funds.

With reference to investor's soft cost write-offs, the Minister of Finance made certain statements in relation to that. Also excluded are the provincial stacking of plans similar to the Canada Rental Supply Plan.

Subject to a maximum to be determined on a market-by-market basis there are amounts necessary to bridge the gap between insured first mortgage financing and 80 per cent of the cost as determined by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That raises the question of what the contribution by the corporation will be. That corporation allocation of funds will be secured by a second mortgage and will be interest-free until due and payable except where conversion to other than rental purposes occur, in which case interest will be collected from the date the moneys are advanced.

Those are the basic conditions for entering into the plan.

As to the other provisions applicable when the plan is in operation, which were examined by our committee, this function comes more properly under the treatment of this bill as and when it receives second reading here. Unless there is some particular pressure for the details of that now—in which event I am prepared to review them—I propose not to deal further with that subject at this time.

The projects for which loans are approved must be new construction. A project must provide 5 per cent of the units for the disabled unless proponents can demonstrate to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the market cannot support this number. It must provide up to 33 per cent of the units for rent supplement at the option of the province. The normal underwriting criteria will be applied to the calculation of insured first mortgage loans that are associated with these Canada Rental Supply Plan loans.

● (1420)

Those are the principal details of the plan. If there are any questions at a later stage, I am, I believe, more or less equipped to deal with them. I would, however, rather have such questions anticipated and carefully presented than attempt a full discussion at this time, which I do not regard as being the function of the chairman of a committee making a report on the subject matter of a bill.

Having said this in relation to rental supply and also in relation to mortgage renewal, the control of the mortgage renewal is to be found in clause 25, of Part IV.3, of the bill. This deals with the question of the Mortgage Renewal Plan and the Interest Deferral Plan. The Rental Supply Plan is not, expressly, so stated in the bill, but there are provisions which deal with the subject matter by dealing with a provision enabling the corporation to make mortgage loans in accordance with competition in the market, which frees them, to that extent, from being tied into the rather rigid rental and percentage provisions of the National Housing Act. Therefore, in that seemingly indirect way, the authority is given. If the premiums are freed from that rigid control, the corporation is able to be more competitive in this field.

I should say that, in the field of rental supply, the plan calls for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation not to participate in the negotiation of first mortgages; the outside lending areas in that field will be in the position to deal with and provide the necessary funds. The function of the corporation is to provide the supplementary feeding, as I call it, required in order that the plan might be operative, assuming that the mortgage advances, whatever they may be, certainly would not be enough to lead to the construction of these units, no matter how humble in design they may be. With the proposed limitation on the corporation—the limit of their advance by way of second mortgage of up to $7,500—I believe that the corporation has already discovered that, so far as certain areas in Canada are concerned and so far as the recognized builders in those areas are concerned, the cost of completing units conforming to the plans, even though they are to be modest means of accommodation, may well be in excess of $7,500.

● (1425)

It is safe to assume that, in some areas where there are significant increases in the cost to provide this kind of unit, additional funds, over and above the $7,500 stipulated at the moment, will be available. If you carefully examine the provisions in that regard, you will see that it is not an absolute or rigid commitment up to $7,500 and not one cent more; there is room for negotiation. This appears to be a reasonable approach.

Other plans mentioned before your committee provide various types of relief in these areas where the pressing need obviously exceeds what might be described as “extensions” arising out of the lack of adequate rental accommodation and the obligations and commitments required to meet mortgage renewal demands. It is expected that these plans will come into operation after Parliament has passed this bill. I was going to say that we can assume there will be no unreasonable delay, but I would put it more strongly than that in view of the preparations in anticipation that have been made by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Their studies indicate that builders will be available for this type of work and, therefore, the gap between D-Day—which is when the legislation receives approval—and the commencement of work will be insignificant. That is the main thrust of this bill.

I have not attempted to deal with the bill clause by clause because a number of technical amendments were proposed by the House of Commons committee when it was considering this bill. Those amendments were included in the report of that committee. They were highlighted by a stroke in the bill so that anyone can locate and read them easily. They relate only to bringing administrative practices up to date having regard to the new era in which mortgage lenders are operating and in which the competition is working. They are required in order to free up and make a little easier the administration of any new plans. Many of those amendments cover straightforward miscellaneous items that do not bear directly and, possibly, not even indirectly, on the particular points to which I have addressed myself, namely, rental supply and mortgage renewal. They deal with particular administrative problems.

If members of the Senate wish to know what those items are, I am equipped to tell them, but I had not intended to enlarge the field of my discussion by dealing with them at this time because, in my view, I do not think that they are strictly pertinent to the consideration of this report.

This report is made only so that the Senate will have some understanding of the nature and scope of the bill and what the general provisions are governing the plans in the bill on which this report is based. Whatever areas beyond that the sponsor of the bill wishes to enter into, that is his problem, but I would prefer to wait.

If there are questions to be asked, I think I can answer them.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to make a comment on one aspect of this report. My comment has to do with the mortgage relief provisions.

I think it is important for the Senate to have some grasp as to whether or not, and to what extent, the mortgage relief provisions deal adequately with the mortgage problem we have in this country. Everyone knows, without any lengthy exposition from me, that the question of renewing mortgages at high rates is a serious public problem and concerns a great many citizens of this country. The thrust of this portion of the bill is to provide that, where the mortgage payment exceeds 30 per cent of the income, that portion can be postponed. I should like to examine the advisability of that provision.

Most of these mortgages are short-term. There are one-year, two-year and three-year terms. If one postpones the portion of mortgage payment exceeding 30 per cent of income, one is only postponing that until such time as the mortgage comes up for renewal, and while it is postponed, it is also accumulating interest charges at considerable rates.

So, one can visualize, in some cases at least, where a mortgage is up for renewal within a 12 or 24-month period, that this postponement will also become due, together with the interest. So, the whole problem is there again, as well as this compounding effect. So, if a mortgage is renewed every year, as they are these days, two or three years in a row, the compounding effect of this is significant. It remains to be seen what advantage, if any, there really is to the person who has to pay the mortgage. I put that point before the chamber.

My second point is that, even if what I say is not correct, to the extent that this is a benefit, how many people will really benefit from it? According to the evidence given before the committee there are several hundred thousand mortgages that will be up for renewal in the next twelve-month period. Of those several hundred thousand it is estimated that a large number—the chairman of the committee may have the numbers in his head, because his memory is excellent—perhaps tens of thousands, of mortgages would qualify for consideration under this statute but, when questioned on the point, the officials said that so far only 700 people had actually applied for either the $3,000 grant, where the equity is under 5 per cent, or the postponement of interest, where the equity is over 5 per cent and the mortgagor otherwise meets the terms.

● (1435)

There was an unknown number of applications thought to be in the hands of the lending institutions, so that is a big question mark. We do not know what that number is.

I suggest to the house that this bill will be of strictly limited assistance to people who have mortgages in Canada. It appears, so far, that a relatively small number of people—700 that we know of, and perhaps some more, though we do not know how many—will actually apply.

The nature of the relief given is, in my opinion, illusory. Twelve months from now, when these mortgages come up for renewal again, and when this statute, which is of very limited duration, no longer applies, we will find this problem still with us, and practically unsolved. So, to the extent that this is the policy of the government, to help people who have mortgage interest payment problems, my submission would be that it is going to offer mighty thin pickings, and very little help, to those who need such assistance.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I expect that my friend Senator Roblin did not leave the chamber just because I was getting up to speak.

Hon. Lowell Murray: He has a plane to catch.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I should point out that if I were asked to describe what this plan is all about, as the committee looked at it, I would have to say that it is a plan to provide help for a period of time, when there is a pressing need with regard to renewal of mortgage payment obligations. Whatever period of grace is secured, it is a gain, and while this process may have to start all over again in a year, at least the condition of some of the people who have these problems may have changed, the condition of lending institutions may also have changed, the provision of rental accommodation may have improved, and this latter eventuality, we were told in committee, may result in the creation of a substantial number of jobs. It is estimated that at least 4,000 new jobs will be provided in this area.

Therefore, you have to figure out the additional purchasing power, the additional spending power, and the additional means that will be provided to a substantial number of people. These cannot help but be provided if you are putting $350 million into the economy, unless you are prepared to assume that it is all going down the drain. The committee was not prepared to assume this. The committee, in fact, was prepared to accept that there was a need, and that this legislation was directed at helping to meet that need. I underline the word "helping".

The fact that the government is prepared to help meet this need may instil something of a spirit of adventure into those who are in difficulties this year, and a little more confidence. I think that, in any event, there are some things about this legislation that will provide help, even though the time period is limited, and even though the help is not necessarily permanent—though some of it may be permanent—particularly from the point of view of the ability to defer interest payments, even though more debt may be accumulated.

Who can speculate as to what the situation will be and what will develop from that? So, rather than not face up to it, I believe the attitude of the committee was that this plan is aimed to deal with this situation. Whether or not it does, it is worth a chance. That was the spirit of the committee, as I interpreted it.

When I was speaking earlier I omitted to say that the recommendation of the committee is that the proposed plan, as reflected in Bill C-89, be approved. It is not dealing with any question of amendments, except to point out what the technical amendments in the bill mean and what they are directed to.

That concludes my presentation.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, I would like to raise a point in connection with Senator Hayden's oral presentation that may be of interest to you. Leave has been given for the second reading of Bill C-89 to be moved later this day. I would ask honourable senators if they wish to proceed with second reading later this day or, because of the comprehensive nature of the verbal report given on the subject matter of the bill, if they wish to proceed with second reading next Tuesday. I am in the hands of the house. I would appreciate hearing from honourable senators on this question.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I understand there have been consultations between members of the government and the opposition on the point raised by Senator McIlraith. We would prefer to have second reading on Tuesday. It has also been suggested that in view of the thorough examination given the subject matter of the bill in committee we might proceed by way of Committee of the Whole. That procedure would also be agreeable to us.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I would be agreeable to such a procedure being followed. When the bill is called for second reading later this day, I shall then ask that it stand until Tuesday. As to whether we should proceed by way of Committee of the Whole, that question can be left until Tuesday. It might not be necessary to proceed in that way. Hopefully the report of the committee's proceedings will be available.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, perhaps we might proceed with second reading later this day, and then adjourn the debate until next Tuesday. Would there be any objection to that?

Senator McIlraith: As sponsor of the bill, I am quite prepared to proceed later today, but I would prefer to leave second reading until Tuesday. I would like to have an opportunity to read the committee's report and to study Senator Hayden's remarks, which were very comprehensive. If we proceed with second reading on Tuesday, I believe we shall be further ahead in the end. However, I am in the hands of honourable senators.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to clarify the procedure respecting second reading. As Senator McIlraith and Senator Murray have mentioned, there has been discussion on how we should proceed with this bill, following the comprehensive verbal report given by the chairman of the committee on the committee's pre-study of the bill.

It is true that various timings and procedures were discussed, including the possibility of proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole. I believe I can say that the essence of the discussions was that we should proceed with second reading on Tuesday. Although the order will be called for second reading later this day, we can adjourn second reading until next Tuesday, and, if necessary, proceed by way of Committee of the Whole if both sides are agreed.

I should say for the record that we seem to be debating a committee report. However, I take it that we are treating this matter as an exceptional circumstance, because our rules provide that committee reports be received without debate. However, the circumstances are unusual, and it seems that both sides want a combination of early passage and a thorough examination of the bill. It would appear, by following the procedure suggested, that we might meet both of those objectives.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, following the statement made by Senator Roblin, I find myself somewhat confused. Having listened to the evidence given yesterday, I gather that the number of tentative applications is 700. The figure mentioned is correct. Applications are made by the mortgage lenders, so the figure of 700 refers to 700 mortgage lenders, not 700 mortgages. I believe this point should be clarified by either the chairman of the committee or the sponsor of the bill. I believe there are about 40,000 mortgages covered by 700 mortgage lenders. I do not have the evidence in front of me, but I believe the Senate should have this information before the bill receives second reading.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, this situation reminds me of the House of Commons, where I had to rise in my place repeatedly in order to be recognized. I did not think it was a matter of priority or seniority.

I have one question to ask of Senator Hayden for the purpose of clarification. The honourable senator did not mention the aspect of the bill dealing with the improvement of existing housing, which I consider to be very important. I was not in the chamber when the honourable senator began his remarks, and I am wondering whether he covered that point. If he did not, was there any reason for it, because there is a close relationship here to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, which is so important in Newfoundland? The parliamentary secretary, when addressing himself to the bill in the other place, mentioned that $30 million in interest-free loans was being added to the already existing $169 million under the RRAP program. The funds are going to be allocated to those provinces that have the highest unemployment. Already, before the bill is even passed, they are recommending a breakdown when they suggest that one province would receive 43 per cent of the total budget, or $9.6 million.

I quarrel with those figures because of the fact that Newfoundland has the highest unemployment rate. Why do they not use the unemployment rate as a basis or, at least, if they are allocating $9.6 million of the $30 million, then why do they not allocate the rest so that people can have some hope? I am not blaming Senator Hayden. I am merely asking why he did not address that part of the bill if it was taken up by the committee in the pre-study.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, my first point is that our instructions from the Senate were to study the subject matter of Bill C-89. I said in my opening remarks that there were two items of the plan which bore directly upon, and received their authority under, Bill C-89, but that other plans rested with other authorities or the general authority of the corporation under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

The $30 million, as I understand it, was an amount that was added on or about budget night and allocated for home renovations. Home renovation is entirely distinct from rental supply by new units. Since I was dealing with rental supply by new units, the housing renovation feature did not enter the discussion. However, I am familiar with that feature, but, upon inquiring, I was told that these programs have run their course. What that means, I do not know, because that phase did not develop in the committee study. We have a general rule, when departmental officials appear as witnesses before the committee, that they provide any additional material they may have. That information was in some of that additional material. That is the reason for not calling it an omission.

Senator Marshall: Thank you.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Rizzuto be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Stollery on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. William J. Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, April 6, 1982, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I shall explain why I am moving that we adjourn until 3 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon, rather than 2 o'clock as was suggested yesterday. A very important reason for sitting early next week is Bill C-97, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Bill. The subject matter of that bill is currently being studied by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Normally that committee would meet next Tuesday at 1.30 p.m. Since a number of senators who are particularly concerned with this bill are also anxious to attend the meetings of the committee on the subject, Senator Flynn and I discussed the possibility of meeting at 3 o'clock rather than at 2 o'clock, giving that committee a headstart of an hour and a half, and the possibility of postponing Question Period until the evening sitting.

[Senator Hayden.]

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: I believe that committee is also meeting Tuesday morning.

Senator Frith: No, it is meeting at 1.30 in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, perhaps I can use this occasion to discuss the program for next week. There is a possibility that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture will meet to consider Bill C-88 on Tuesday morning, following which the National Finance Committee will meet at 1.30. The Senate will sit at 3 o'clock, and Question Period will probably be postponed until the evening sitting. The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will meet at 4 o'clock, and there may also be other committee meetings. The Senate will resume its sitting at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, and after Question Period will proceed with the Orders of the Day.

The Senate will sit on Wednesday at 2 o'clock, and if we are well advanced, and it is possible to have royal assent on Wednesday, we may not require a sitting on Thursday at all. However, at this stage, that prospect is optimistic but not unrealistic. Of course, we could easily reconvene on Thursday at 2 o'clock and have royal assent. In fact, we may even decide on Wednesday that we would like to sit on Thursday morning if we can make arrangements that will not affect committee meetings.

In any event, we would have ahead of us all day Thursday to complete our deliberations on Bill C-97, and perhaps Bills C-88 and C-89 also. If, at least, Bill C-97 is assented to next week, I believe neither the House of Commons nor the Senate will sit the following week. As I judge the present state of our business, it will not be necessary for us to sit the following week—that is, the week of April 19—although, I believe, the House of Commons will be sitting. Of course, those who wish to return for the proclamation of the Constitution by Her Majesty the Queen, will do so.

So, if the universe unfolds in that way, and if we have royal assent next week, we could adjourn until April 27.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: I would draw the attention of the Deputy Leader of the Government to the fact that two committees are scheduled to meet at 4 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon. With witnesses having been called and all the rest of it, there may be a serious problem, indeed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am afraid that as long as we work a fairly complete three-day week we will always have trouble with committees. I hope we can solve that problem, and I thank Senator Lafond for drawing attention to it. In addition to what I have just said respecting committees, I intend to ask the Senate to permit those committees to meet while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday, although it may be that one of them will not require such permission.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday next, 6th April, 1982, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT—BEAUFORT SEA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I wanted to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure that in his absence the deputy leader, because of his good nature, will not mind taking the question as notice.

For the better part of yesterday and today those of us serving on the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline have had the benefit of listening to the testimony of officials from Dome Petroleum Company. Both publicly and privately, they have been indicating to the committee that they will need approval in principle this year for oil and gas development in the Beaufort Sea. The company claims it needs a clear signal of Ottawa's political will—I think those are the words they used—by year end, if it is to meet its 1986 production target.

Is the government prepared to give its approval in principle according to the timetable set out by Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will take that question as notice, and pass it along.

Senator Nurgitz: In addition, when does the government expect to clarify its position on the timing and pace of Beaufort Sea development so as to remove any uncertainty currently existing within the industry? Certainly, one senses, in talking to the Dome people, that they see almost a kind of competition between Arctic development and the projects further south. They would like to know where they fit into the grand plan of things, especially since the government speaks of energy self-sufficiency and the like. They want to know whether there will be a clearer statement on that.

Senator Frith: I will take that as notice also. I think it is reasonable to assume that discussions are taking place between Dome and the government on that subject. I doubt that I will be able to ascertain the actual date when an announcement will be made, but I also doubt that that is what Senator Nurgitz is asking. He wants to know whether it is imminent, immediately imminent or not now very well matured.

Senator Nurgitz: If I may respond to that response, I should like to ascertain if an answer is even possible, bearing in mind that several matters have yet to be considered yet. Certainly, in talking to the Dome people, one senses that the problem may well be that it will simply not be possible to have any sort of indication this year, even though they consider it highly important.

Senator Frith: I understand.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONS—McCRACKEN REPORT

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, on Presentation of Petitions I asked a question concerning the tabling of the McCracken report. I realize now that I was rather naive in doing so, because I have just been catching up on my reading of the debates in the other place and I find that, indeed, a question was put to the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the same topic, the McCracken report, and the minister replied:

Since receiving the report a couple of weeks ago we have been actively reviewing all of the recommendations. Quite a number of them have been implemented so far and others will be implemented in the foreseeable future.

That is another perfect example of the fact that there can be no interest in this chamber, because nobody in the other place recognizes that we are here. As a matter of fact, we were told in committee just today that we would receive a copy of the McCracken report today. But, according to what I have just read, that report has been out for two weeks and some of its recommendations have been implemented already, and yet we know nothing about it unless we guess, dig, holler and listen in over somebody's shoulder to what is going on, or listen to rumours. I wish the deputy leader would look into this malaise, this complete disease, that is permeating the whole system here. I wish he would recognize that there are some people here who are interested in various aspects of legislation and in the welfare of the Canadian people. Surely the members of the Senate are just as important as the members in the other place, and should be considered so, and should receive all the information that appears in the other place. But, as I have said before, when it comes to Parliament, everybody and his grandmother gets it before we do.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I understand correctly, the report in question was made to the minister, and is hardly in the same category as certain reports Senator Marshall has, with some justification, raised objection to in the past. Apparently, the minister received the report a couple of weeks ago and now a question about it has been asked in the other place. A similar question might easily have been asked here.

Although I have shared Senator Marshall's view on other reports in respect of which there seemed to have been unnecessary discrepancies in timing as between the other place and this house, in my opinion this is a case where the minister received a report directed to him, and they simply beat us to the punch over there in asking a question about it. I might say that on a subject of this kind it is seldom that the other place beats Senator Marshall to the punch.

Senator Marshall: Well, I take issue with you when you say that they beat us to the punch, because they would not beat us to the punch if we could rely on getting answers. There is no point in asking a question, when you have to get the answer by reading the newspapers. As far as that goes, they steal as many of our questions as we do of theirs. It is not that that I take issue with, but the fact that no one cares about the Senate, and we are not doing anything about it.

Senator Frith: I cannot see that as applying in this case, but we will have to have our disagreement on it. In this case, obviously, even as far as the other place is concerned, the minister, according to what was read, had the report for two weeks before he was asked a question about it. The fact is that he then gave an answer, and if the question had been asked here I don't think there would have been any problem in having it answered, and it would likely have been the same answer.

Whether or not this is an example of the malaise referred to, I think we will have our difference stand on the record.

Senator Marshall: It so happens that there was a committee meeting today dealing with veterans affairs, and that was the first opportunity I had to ask about the McCracken report. With some condescension, somebody said, "Yes, you are good boys. We will give it to you today."

Well, members of the Royal Canadian Legion have it and other people have it, but we don't have it. And it is not that I am concerned with this particular report; it is the whole system that disgusts me. I will leave it at that.

[Senator Marshall.]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

HOUSING—MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, no longer being a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I was not aware that we would have such an illuminating report on the subject of housing and mortgages as we have had today. Notwithstanding that, I propose to go ahead with the question that I had prepared.

Figures have been put out today, without giving reference to the source of information, of the number of homeowners who continue to face mortgage renewal rates in the painful 19 per cent range, and so on. I should like to point out that three western provinces are trying to extend a helping hand. The Governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are offering cash cushions. Manitoba is offering approximately $13 million, but I do not know what the figures are for the other two provinces. They are outright grants to low and moderate income families who are in danger of losing their homes through high interest rates.

The Toronto Star of March 22 gave some figures which we have not received from anybody else today. The article to which I refer says:

—650,000 homeowners are expected to face mortgage renewals this year. Of those, perhaps 12,000 will find themselves in hardship, paying more than 30 per cent of their income on housing.

I proudly point out that in the region from which I came—that is, the west—at least some help is now at hand. I was going to say that this is in sharp contrast to any straightforward grants not yet implemented by the federal mortgage renewal plan, but we had the explanation that we are going to be able to deal with that immediately. This, of course, has been pre-studied under the "Hayden formula", and that is a means of eliminating further delay in this matter.

My question is: Have the provinces, which have taken these steps in a positive way—indeed, I emphasize they are outright grants in the case of people in low income brackets—appealed to the federal government for a contribution towards the expenditures on these plans? I do not believe that the Government of Ontario has yet presented a budget this year or in its new session. When it does so, it may contain a housing aid proposal. Have we had representations and proposals from western or other governments seeking assistance from the federal government in introducing plans to assist those who are facing this problem of heavy mortgage rates? I am speaking of those who are unable to pay because they are in the lower income brackets.

I had planned to ask this question of the Deputy Leader of the Government, but there is a possibility that information on the point could be made available when we debate this bill on second reading on Tuesday. I hope that the sponsor, Senator McIlraith, will make some inquiries, before he speaks on second reading, as to the extent to which the provinces have made proposals for support schemes of their own.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, assuming that the question is, at least, technically directed to me, I agree that the answer might very well be forthcoming either from the sponsor of the bill on second reading or in the debate that might follow. However, I accept the question.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—ANNEXATION OF WEST BANK—ATTITUDE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer today.

Hon. Lowell Murray: There are many more delayed answers, but you have one ready today.

Senator Frith: Many answers could be described as being still under research, and, therefore, delayed.

I have the answer to a question asked by Senator Macquarrie on March 25, 1982 concerning the attitude of the Canadian government toward the annexation of the West Bank by Israel.

Honourable senators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs issued a press release last week which indicated Canada's concern for the situation on the West Bank. The Secretary of State for External Affairs also indicated in the press release that Canada does not believe that there will be any settlement of the situation until there is a negotiated withdrawal from occupied territory.

The contents of the press release were drawn to the attention of the Israeli Ambassador in Ottawa and to the Israeli Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem, through the Canadian Embassy in Tel Aviv.

THE CONSTITUTION

PROCLAMATION CEREMONY—DRESS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators will forgive me for introducing what might be thought to be a piece of aesthetic, perhaps even foppish, trivia, but yesterday Senator Lawson inquired about the proper style of dress for the proclamation ceremony that is to take place in the Senate chamber. At that time I volunteered the answer that whatever senators felt comfortable in at the opening of a session of Parliament would be satisfactory.

I am grateful to Senator Beaubien for informing me that he had other information and suggesting that I check again, which I did. Following that investigation, the invitation will say, as Senator Beaubien said it would: "Morning coat with decorations."

An Hon. Senator: Only?

Hon. C. William Doody: Could the honourable senator recommend a good rental agency? I'm a stranger in town.

Senator Frith: I will take that question as notice.

There were some interventions that might not have reached the ears of the reporter, such as "Only?" I should point out that I did not say "only," but that the invitation will say: "Morning coat with decorations."

Senator Doody: No trousers?

Senator Frith: Period.

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-88, intituled: "An Act respecting loans to farmers".—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, my instructions from the Leader of the Opposition are that we, on this side, agree to having this bill referred to committee now and reserve our comments on it for third reading.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Frith speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have nothing to add, and suggest that the motion for second reading be now put.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Senator Frith moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 10, 1982 the adjourned debate on the motion for the adoption of the Tenth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

● (1520)

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have only a few comments to make with respect to the tenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. In reading Senator Godfrey's comments on this report I noted that he makes the point that the report really does speak for itself. I took the trouble to read the report and, indeed, it does speak for itself. The other thing it speaks for is the need for this kind of committee, which diligently oversees and reviews regulations, which, in this day and age, I suppose, have become a convenient way of governing. Although Senator Godfrey did not point that out, I believe that the report speaks very well for the need for this kind of constant review.

Having said that, I think it appropriate to make some mention of Senator Godfrey. Over the last while, he seems to have suffered a considerable amount of criticism. Having served on the committee, of which he is joint chairman, I would point out that he provides the kind of leadership that the Senate ought to be proud of. The work involved on that committee is not sought after by many senators, and it is easy to understand why. It is onerous, and it involves a time commitment that many here are certainly not prepared to make. While I am on my feet, I congratulate Senator Godfrey on his fine work, and I would like to say, as well, that he is making an extremely important contribution. I consider his committee to be one of the most worthwhile in Parliament.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hear, hear!

Senator Nurgitz: I want to tell Senator Godfrey that I have a difficult time attending the meetings of his committee because of a conflict in terms of other committees meeting at the same time. Also, during the early part of March while the bells were ringing, there was uncertainty as to whether it was proper to attend certain committee meetings.

On a serious note, however, a most telling point is brought out in this report when it deals with the question of unfair advantage being taken by the Crown in terms of litigation with citizens of this country. The Crown, with all its attendant advantages—such as an entire Department of Justice full of lawyers, and the financial resources to fight any issue—can certainly be awesome to the average litigant. One might even suggest—though I do not know that Senator Godfrey goes this far—that, in light of the straitened financial circumstances of so many private citizens who are required to meet the Crown in litigation, perhaps the opposite course could be considered. Perhaps the Crown, in some circumstances, ought to be required to do certain things that an ordinary litigant would not be required to do, in terms of disclosure and other matters.

The committee, in particular, suggests that, should an officer of the Crown hold a clear legal opinion that liability ought to be admitted in a particular case, and that the argument should concern quantum of damages only, the Crown should be barred from arguing liability. Such is not the situation at present, and I could not agree more with this suggestion.

I should like to conclude my remarks by thanking Senator Godfrey for pointing out to the chamber the important aspect, with respect to regulations, of a massive failing on the part of government. He said:

It is, I might add, astonishing that the government should be so insensitive to what is right and proper, as to blatantly disclose in a regulation that they are prepared to approve tactics which would not normally be adopted by any decent and honourable individual, or corporation in the private sector.

Honourable senators, I concur in the adoption of this report.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 6, at 3 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Am I to understand that second reading will not be moved before this evening's sitting?

Senator Perrault: Yes.

Senator Flynn: I just wanted some assurance on that point.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Certainly, we can assure honourable senators that that is so. We want the second reading stage to coincide very closely with, or follow immediately after, the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance which is presently engaged in a study of the subject matter of the bill. I cannot see the committee reporting before this evening.

Motion agreed to.

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Harry Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, presented the following report:

Tuesday, April 6, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to which was referred Bill C-88, intituled: "An Act respecting loans to farmers", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, April 1, 1982, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

HARRY HAYS
Chairman.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill was very well explained by Senator Frith, and then referred to committee. The committee met this morning and heard from the minister and a number of officials from the Farm Credit Corporation. Rather than making a long speech, I commend the bill to you, since it contains many necessary provisions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. George J. McIlraith moved the second reading of Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill—

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I am just wondering what the procedure will be in regard to this bill. Will the minister appear for Committee of the Whole this afternoon?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there was discussion about proceeding with this bill in Committee of the Whole when there was some doubt as to whether there would be time for the preparation of a committee report on its subject matter.

Study of the bill in Committee of the Whole has been discussed with Senator Flynn and Senator Roblin, and since, in the interval, we have heard a rather long report by Senator Hayden it was felt it would not be necessary to study the bill in Committee of the Whole. The minister has been advised that, if required, he will be called, but it now appears that we will not need Committee of the Whole study of this bill.

• (1510)

Senator Marshall: I asked the question because there are two other committees scheduled to meet at 4 o'clock. Some members of the Senate are duty-bound to attend those committee meetings, but they are also interested in this bill.

I wonder why there never seems to be enough time to deal with these things, even though nothing is happening.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I know we require more time to consider legislation and other matters. As to the specific question asked by Senator Marshall, there will not be any conflict between the meetings of those committees and a meeting of Committee of the Whole, because although he is quite correct that this possibility was discussed, it is now unnecessary.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I understood from the remarks made by the sponsor of the bill that we would proceed by way of Committee of the Whole, and I prepared my response expecting that we would go immediately into Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we shall accommodate Senator Phillips in any way, he wishes. If he wants to defer his response until tomorrow, I see no difficulty with that.

It appears now that there is no need for us to proceed by way of Committee of the Whole. The possibility was discussed because it appeared that a committee study of the subject matter of the bill would not be completed in time. However, this study has now been accomplished and, therefore, there is no need for us to proceed by way of Committee of the Whole.

If, by not proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole, Senator Phillips is embarrassed, we can arrange for him to make his presentation tomorrow.

Senator Phillips: I thought I understood the Deputy Leader of the Government to say that the minister is available if we require his presence.

Senator Frith: That was one of the reasons we discussed the possibility of proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole. The minister wanted to make a presentation to a Senate committee, but there was some doubt as to whether he could make it before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in the ordinary way. However, he was able to appear before that committee and, therefore, it is felt it is unnecessary for him to appear also before another Senate committee.

Senator Phillips: I read the verbal report given by the Honourable Senator Hayden—it was a verbal report, because the formal report had not been typed—and I saw no explanation of the Canada Home Renovation Plan. That is the particular reason why I should like that minister to appear before Committee of the Whole. I should like to question him on that.

I noticed the other day that Senator Marshall also asked certain questions concerning the Canada Home Renovation Plan. I am sure that he too would like to question the minister on this.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators will remember that in most cases the sponsor of a bill takes those questions and tries to obtain answers to them. That is the procedure we usually follow. Proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole is unusual. It is a procedure that should be used only in unusual circumstances. It was felt that this might be the case with respect to this bill but, as things turned out, the committee did make a report and the circumstances do not warrant our proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, possibly we can resolve this matter after the sponsor has spoken on second reading of this bill. Perhaps an arrangement can then be made.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, this is a bill to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, and it is designed to alleviate some of the difficulties a great many Canadians are facing in obtaining good rental housing at affordable prices, as well as to give assistance to many homeowners in difficulty because of sharply rising interest rates, such people being in imminent danger of losing their homes by reason of mortgage payments at renewed rates adding costs which they cannot afford. They are at risk of having foreclosures take place, or of having their property sold under the power-of-sale provisions found in mortgages.

In moving second reading of this bill, it would be well if I approached the matter in a somewhat categorical way, because, while the bill is fairly lengthy, some of its provisions are of a general administrative nature and some are wholly new.

• (1515)

The first matter I wish to deal with is the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan. That plan has sometimes been referred to as an interest deferment plan. In any event, honourable senators will find it dealt with in clause 25, at page 17 of the bill. Those who will be the immediate beneficiaries of the measure will be families in immediate danger of losing their homes by reason of their mortgage becoming due for renewal and not being able to meet the new mortgage payments because of the sharp increase in interest rates.

The only mortgages being dealt with are those up for renewal between September 1, 1981 and November 11, 1982, inclusive. Within that context, the applicant must be a permanent resident of his own home. In addition, after renewing his mortgage at the new rate, he must be spending more than 30 per cent of his total household pre-tax income on the payment of the mortgage principal, interest and taxes. If he is a condominium owner, there is a provision that 50 per cent of the condominium fees be included in those payments. As I say, those payments must be greater than 30 per cent of the household pre-tax income. Household income, of course, includes all income of the owner and the spouse.

Having defined the applicant, if he has more than 5 per cent equity in his home he may be able to defer the interest payments by up to $3,000 for one year. Therefore, it covers those who still have an equity interest in their home. Those who have less than a 5 per cent equity interest in their home may be eligible for an outright grant of up to $3,000 for one year. That grant will not be paid to the homeowner; but will be paid directly, according to the payment terms, to the mortgagee for the account of the mortgagor. That is really the way the whole program works.

On Thursday a question was asked about increased interest rates. At that time we were discussing the oral report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the pre-study of this bill. The answer to the question is that, assuming interest rates increase to 20 per cent, the number of persons among those having mortgage renewals that come due in the period I have mentioned, and who would be eligible for some form of assistance, is estimated at 37,600. I refer to all persons who, under the new interest rates, would have to pay out more than 30 per cent of their household income. Of that number about one-quarter, or 9,400, would have less than 5 per cent equity in their home, so they would be eligible for the grant. The figure for those persons eligible for grants is therefore estimated to be 9,400. That would leave 28,200 eligible for deferment of interest for a year. Of that 28,200, it is estimated that, for one reason or another, only 50 per cent will come forward. So, approximately 23,500 persons are expected to benefit under these provisions.

I should point out, in giving the estimates—and it is always risky to give estimates like this—that with the volatile interest rates and fluctuations these estimates could easily be knocked out of commission. Notwithstanding that difficulty, and with that caution, I give these estimates because they may be of help to honourable senators in understanding the nature of the program.

This mortgage renewal plan is new and, therefore, although the various forms, et cetera, have been prepared, the processing cannot be finalized because the bill has not yet been passed. However, we heard evidence in committee that they have had to make plans so that the necessary regulations can be passed and the forms processing finalized immediately the legislation is passed. In other words, the administrative work has been done in anticipation of the passage of the bill. I do not believe that I need say much more about that program. It will not solve the problem of all those who may be having trouble finding the money for increased interest charges, but the legislation will go a considerable way towards helping those persons in the lower income brackets who are experiencing difficulty.

Honourable senators will recognize, of course, that interest rates are volatile and that it is not possible to say with precision what the circumstances will be at the end of the year, but, with this plan in operation, people should be better off than they are now in that they face possible foreclosure or loss of their home.

Reference was made last Thursday to provincial schemes in this area. A question was asked as to whether the provinces had appealed to the federal government for a contribution towards their plans. The answer is quite direct and simple, that in connection with their mortgage renewal programs they went ahead without making such a request. They acted independently, without discussion with the federal authority. However, there appears to be no conflict with provincial plans.

I should add, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it, that in the federal government plan, which I will be describing in a few moments, for procuring the building of more housing for rental purposes, there was consultation with all of the provincial governments except that of Quebec; but there was discussion on that matter, which seems to have been satisfactory and beneficial.

The other main problem this bill will assist in solving is that of an insufficiency of rental accommodation in the metropolitan areas across the country, with one or two exceptions. That plan, of course, was dealt with in the budget, when it was indicated that money was being made available to help provide additional housing in that area. The amount stated in the budget was later increased. The sum of $350 million has been made available over the next two fiscal years for the provision of more rental accommodation. This is in addition to any schemes in the existing legislation, and, if things go as anticipated, should provide an additional 30,000 rental units, which it is hoped will be made available in areas where there is the greatest shortage of such accommodation. Throughout, of course, when I refer to "rental accommodation," I am referring to rental accommodation for people with low incomes. This plan does nothing for those occupying expensive rental accommodation.

I do not know that there is much point in attempting to analyze the causes of the shortage of rental accommodation. I suppose the situation arises from the fact that the market is not working effectively. One is left to form one's own conclusions, of course, but the artificial control of rental rates has not had a beneficial effect, in the sense of causing builders to build more such accommodation. They cannot obtain mortgages of a sufficient amount to warrant their building such accommodation, without putting a large amount of equity, in the form of their own money, into the project, with very little expectation of its returning them a profit. In addition, there are other limitations that I will be dealing with more particularly.

In any event, the Canada Rental Supply Plan will provide for interest-free loans that will assist in the production of these extra 30,000 units across the country. This can only be accomplished with the assistance of the other changes provided for in the bill. They may appear to be mere administrative changes, but I want to take a moment to point out that they are significant.

Some of the provisions in the mortgage and housing legislation came into being many years ago when mortgages were long-term conventional mortgages, when interest rates did not fluctuate from month to month or from year to year, and when there was no inflation.

One of the difficulties I would particularly point out had to do with the mortgage insurance plan which came into being in about 1954. Without going into detail, it provided for premium insurance rates on mortgages of seven-eighths to one and a quarter per cent. That was the original provision, although later there was a slight variation. That provision was still contained in the act. An effect of that was that the insurance fund simply could not insure a large rental construction project with a large mortgage because, with that kind of rate, the risk was too great to be absorbed. This became a deterrent. In some projects the insurance fund would only insure up to 50 per cent of the proposed mortgage requested, when most would agree that they should be insuring mortgages up to 70 or 80 per cent of the cost of the project. It was demonstrated that this was preventing some projects going ahead. The rate was fixed by statute.

Under this bill, that power to fix the rate of premium is transferred to the corporation, and the corporation fixes the rate subject, of course, to the maximum fixed by the Governor in Council. This should be of considerable help, in that larger mortgages will now become available for rental construction projects.

Respecting claims against the insurance fund in the event of default, there was an absolute provision in the act whereby the insurance fund could only make payment when the property was transferred to the corporation and, subject to certain qualification, when the property was vacant. That was found to be a restrictive and wasteful process. There are now technical changes to certain provisions dealing with mortgage insurance settlements. The insurance fund will now be given the right to settle without that requirement. Therefore, it could make a settlement with a lender where the lender continues to rent the property right up until settlement. This would prevent a transfer of vacant properties in quantity to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and would lower the cost of the whole operation. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation could also take over the mortgage from the lender and resolve the matter that way.

[Senator McIlraith.]

It is anticipated that that will have the effect of reducing the number of foreclosures and will make the total cost of the property acquired much less and, therefore, the loss to the corporation lower. Consequently, that change is significant.

With the increased loan levels in the narrow field I was talking about—that is, the 30,000 units under the Canada Rental Supply Plan—it is proposed to lend up to $7,500 with no interest charged. It is not interest deferred. There will be no interest charged for the first 15 years, and the interest charge will start in the sixteenth year. That will help greatly, because by that time the first mortgage principal will be considerably reduced and the second mortgage should be much more secure. Rental builders with larger mortgages will now be able to get up to that $7,500 per unit mortgage assistance.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry to interrupt the honourable senator, but I believe there is a clause in that bill providing for sale. Before he leaves that aspect of the bill, would the honourable senator explain what happens in the case of a sale?

Senator McIlraith: I will discuss that matter later and give a fuller explanation. In any event, the deferral is not effective in the event of sale. As I understand it, it can be transferred to the new owner, under certain circumstances.

Mortgages have heretofore been rather precisely defined in practice and precisely understood. However, because of the extremely volatile nature of interest rates over the last few years, and particularly in the last year or so, there would appear to be a requirement for an entirely new type of mortgage. One feature of these new types of mortgages is the very short term that both the lender and the borrower seem to require.

There is also the new concept of the variable-rate mortgage. Power will be given to the corporation to insure that kind of mortgage.

Another new type of mortgage is a shared-appreciation mortgage which should assist first-home owners. Frankly, I would not have thought this type of mortgage was possible 20 years ago, but it is now coming into being. Changes are being made to enable the corporation to meet the requirements of those types of mortgages rather than only being able to deal with conventional mortgages.

I have spoken about the way in which the corporation can settle insurance claims against the insurance fund, and I hope that item is sufficiently clear.

I should mention that under clause 43 of the bill the reserve fund of the corporation is increased. Under the previous legislation, which went back to about 1946, a figure of $5 million was stipulated. Under clause 43 that amount is raised to an amount designated from time to time by the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council cannot designate it until the act is passed and becomes law. However, I anticipate that it will be increased to $25 million. That is one thing I should draw to your attention.

● (1540)

Then, there is a provision dealing with insurance policies, found in clause 8 of the bill, whereby there is an increase in the amount of all loans in respect of which insurance policies can be issued. That amount is now being raised to $50 billion from the existing amount of $40 billion.

Honourable senators, I do not think there is anything more I can usefully add at this stage. When closing the debate on second reading, I shall attempt to answer Senator Phillips' questions more fully.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, what is the intention now? Are we proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole, or are we just going to have second reading now?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, further to what was said earlier today on this subject, because the minister was able to appear before the standing committee, as is the usual procedure when dealing with the minister, it is not our intention to ask him to return to appear before Committee of the Whole.

I apologize once more to Senator Phillips for any inconvenience we have caused him by reason of his preparing his remarks on the basis of this bill's being referred to Committee of the Whole, rather than on the basis of its proceeding in the usual manner. He may make his intervention on second reading now, later today, or tomorrow—whatever suits his convenience.

I have obtained some information which might help Senator Phillips in his preparation. On the subject of the Canada Home Renovation Plan, I understand that that is not connected with Bill C-89 but is a government job-creation program independent of this bill. The authority for that exists in section 34(1) of the National Housing Act. I know that that is only a part of Senator Phillips' concern, but I pass that on to him to save him time in that respect.

Honourable senators, if Senator Phillips does not wish to proceed now—and, of course, we are in his hands—I suggest that he adjourn the debate until later today. Then, if he finds that he is ready to proceed later today, we can proceed; or, if not, we can proceed with this matter tomorrow.

Senator McIlraith: I did not hear your last remarks.

Senator Frith: Senator Phillips has said that he prepared his intervention on second reading on the basis of proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole and the minister's appearing before Committee of the Whole. Because we are not going to proceed in that manner, I understand that Senator Phillips wishes more time to prepare his intervention. We understand, but I have simply suggested to him that he adjourn the debate until later today, then, if he is ready and it is convenient for him to proceed this evening, he can do so. If not, we can proceed tomorrow, but by following that procedure he leaves himself the option of proceeding this evening.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Phillips was not in the chamber on Thursday last. Remarks passed back and forth arising out of something Senator Roblin and Senator Murray had said. There was a discussion with respect to proceeding by way of Committee of the Whole.

If Senator Phillips has taken that as an indication that we would do so, and has prepared his remarks accordingly, I am indeed sorry, because I believe it was decided that the matter would be left open for decision, as to whether we would proceed by way of Committee of the Whole, until Tuesday.

I am in your hands, honourable senators. The Deputy Leader of the Government has made his views clear, and I should like to hear from Senator Phillips now as to how he wishes to proceed. Perhaps we can take things from there. I am a relatively good-natured person.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator McIlraith. I should have included in the options I put to Senator Phillips the option for Senator Phillips to make an intervention now and adjourn the order in his own name—in other words, to split his intervention. Of course, we would be quite happy to give him leave to do so.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, as I said earlier, I had prepared a brief dissertation anticipating raising my questions in Committee of the Whole. I should point out that perhaps I am at fault here. In reading the Debates of the Senate for Thursday, April 1, at page 3919, I see that Senator Frith stated:

Although the order will be called for second reading later this day, we can adjourn second reading until next Tuesday, and, if necessary, proceed by way of Committee of the Whole if both sides are agreed.

I apologize to honourable senators for being so naïve as to take any statement made by Senator Frith at face value. That is where the difficulty arose.

Senator Frith: I just hope you will precisely take it at face value and read exactly what I said. I stand by that.

Senator Phillips: I am worried about establishing a precedent that my remarks will be brief. I do not want to establish that precedent, honourable senators. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate until the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have agreed—

Hon. Martial Asselin: That there is a quorum?

Senator Frith: Yes. We are agreed that there is a quorum.

We have agreed also that we would have Question Period this evening, following which I shall ask leave to revert to Reports of Committees, to enable Senator Everett to report on the deliberations of the National Finance Committee on the subject matter of Bill C-97.

THE CONSTITUTION

PROCLAMATION CEREMONY—SEATING IN SENATE CHAMBER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since the only minister to grace us with his presence tonight is the Leader of the Government, I suppose I should ask a question that concerns him. I do not know who will enjoy the presence tonight of the super-Minister of State for Economic Development, but I have just started reading the article in Maclean's magazine, and am very much impressed by what I have read so far—and now here he is.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: In any event, since I have attracted the attention of the Leader of the Government, I will ask him if he would tell us if he has any definite plan as to the ceremony that will take place on April 17 in this chamber. All sorts of rumours are going around, and I think many people on this side and elsewhere would like to know what is going to happen on that day in this place, and who is going to be invited, not only to sit in the chamber itself but also in both balconies. It would be useful for us to know these things.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the matter of the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Ottawa is, of course, of great interest to all honourable senators. All of the details of the visit have yet to be finalized. If possible, it would be appropriate to bring a body of information to the Senate tomorrow afternoon, and I am prepared to do that.

Whether the Falkland Islands situation will have an effect on the visit of Her Majesty remains to be seen, but certainly as of this afternoon there has been no suggestion of a cancellation.

As far as those who are to be seated in the Senate chamber and adjoining areas are concerned, that information will be requested and, if possible, brought to the Senate tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Flynn: Is the leader going to tell us where senators and members of the House of Commons are going to be seated on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the answer to this question should not be left to speculation on my part. There are tentative plans for certain members of the judiciary to be included, along with members of both houses and others. However, I would prefer to provide a body of accurate information tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: So we cannot assume that the procedure for the opening of a new session of Parliament will be followed?

Senator Perrault: No. However, I have made the point with the appropriate authorities that senators should share in this visit on an equal basis with members of the other place. The point has been made in writing and has been accepted.

• (2005)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question which arises from the fact that each of the 282 members of Parliament is allowed to invite one person from his or her constituency to a special dinner for Her Majesty the Queen. I am wondering if senators are being given that same privilege and, if not, why not?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I should like to know whether the Leader of the Government could provide some explanations regarding the Canadian government's policy on the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands. It seems that the Canadian government very quickly almost, but not quite, decided to break diplomatic relations with Argentina. We have been told that our ambassador has been recalled for consultation, that an embargo has been put on the delivery of arms and strategic goods, and even that an emergency meeting was called. It has also been reported that the Minister of National Defence was not altogether certain that Canadian naval forces would not be called on to help Great Britain, because he was not sure how events would develop. Yesterday he showed some hesitation on the issue whether or not our naval forces would go and help the British Navy.

My question, and it is being asked by a number of people, is as follows: Why is Canada so anxious to take action against Argentina, while all other countries, even those who attended the meeting of the United Nations Security Council, have as yet to take such action? Why this rushing to appear to be helping Great Britain in a conflict involving two sovereign nations?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly cannot explain why other nations have failed to take one action or another. I am prepared to say a word or two about Canada's position with respect to the dispute over the Falkland Islands, and in this regard I have some information that has been provided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Canada condemned the Argentine action in a statement at the United Nations Security Council meeting held last Friday. We have informed the Argentine government, through diplomatic channels, that we are shocked by its actions and that Canada expects Argentina to refrain from force and return to the path of discussion and negotiation.

We consider that our best prospects for exerting a positive influence on the Argentine authorities would be to maintain our normal channels of communication as we did with the Soviet Union following the invasion of Afghanistan. We have not broken off diplomatic relations with Argentina, contrary to the information the honourable senator may have received.

Some questions have been voiced publicly about a possible trade boycott. It is too early to make a judgment in this regard, and we are hopeful, indeed, that the dispute will be resolved by peaceful means. If it is not resolved in such a manner, we will have to examine the situation on its own merits to determine what action on our part might be appropriate.

So far as the safety of Canadians in the Falkland Islands is concerned, we are aware of the presence of nine Canadian citizens in the Falklands. We have asked Argentina to take all necessary measures to ensure their safety.

In its latest report, our embassy in Buenos Aires has reported that the Argentine government and the military have emphasized that Argentine forces are following strict instructions not to harm the islanders. Reports of journalists who have managed to get to the islands have indicated that there is no state of siege and that the islanders have freedom of movement.

We have, however, called for the withdrawal of Argentine troops from the Falkland Islands. We have told the Argentine government that all of their military forces should withdraw completely from the Falkland Islands and other British territories which they have occupied.

Our ambassador has been re-called for consultation, which is not an unprecedented action.

Senator Asselin: We know the whole story.

Senator Perrault: Surely, it should be extremely useful, honourable senators, to have the ambassador return to Canada to consult with the government and to provide a first-hand assessment of the situation. It seems to me that that is one of the more enlightened courses of action.

● (2010)

Canada has worked to establish practical United Nations mechanisms for dealing with human rights problems wherever they occur.

At its thirty-sixth session, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights created, with Canadian support, a group of experts to investigate cases of disappeared persons around the world. Thus, Canadian officials in Ottawa and Buenos Aires have taken every appropriate opportunity to draw Canadian concerns on human rights questions to the attention of the Argentine authorities.

The Honourable Mark MacGuigan expressed Canada's concerns in this area when he met the Argentine foreign minister last September in the United Nations. I should clarify, however, that over the last year and a half the domestic political situation in Argentina has improved. This is by way of providing some brief background to that question. The politically motivated discussions are now very rare indeed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That bears no relationship to the question.

Senator Perrault: The number of political prisoners held under executive authority has declined steadily from almost 2,000 in late 1979 to a current level of 700. The new government headed since late December by President Galtieri has undertaken to promulgate an electoral statute which would enable political parties to reorganize and gradually take a more active role. It is in this context of gradual domestic political improvement—

Senator Flynn: I suggest that this be taken as read, because it bears no relation to the question at all.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of order?

Senator Flynn: Yes, indeed I am.

Senator Perrault: Then the Leader of the Opposition is out of order. I do not wish to be disputatious—

Senator Flynn: Don't say that before I have made my point.

Senator Perrault: Well, may I complete my statement? I am almost at the end of it.

Senator Flynn: My objection is that you are dealing with something that has no relation at all to the question asked.

Senator Perrault: Of course it does.

The Hon. the Speaker: Are you rising on a point of order, Senator Flynn?

Senator Flynn: Yes, your Honour. The Leader of the Government is replying with something that has no relevancy whatsoever to the question. He is dealing with what happened six months ago, whereas we are asking him questions with respect to events which took place only a few days ago.

Senator Perrault: I regret such a surface interest—

Senator Flynn: Surface?

Senator Perrault: —such a superficial interest in a dispute which could involve the world in more turmoil and death.

I hope that my final sentence, which I have been attempting to deliver, will make clear the relevance of my remarks.

Senator Flynn: It's about time.

Senator Perrault: This statement concludes:

It is in this context of gradual domestic political improvement that we found the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands to be particularly regrettable.

Honourable senators, I have quoted from a statement provided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the Falkland Islands. Surely, the Senate is entitled to know the minister's position. I suggest that his position is beyond criticism.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): That is more relevant than some of the preambles you give.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I would ask the minister if he has any comment with respect to the resignation of the British Foreign Secretary, Lord Carrington, and, in particular, whether he has taken note of the fact that Lord Carrington stated that, while he felt much of the criticism was unfair, nevertheless there had been criticism in the press and, indeed from members of his own caucus, and because he felt he was responsible for the policy he felt that proper constitutional position was for him to tender his resignation.

I wonder whether the minister has considered commending that example to such colleagues of his as the Minister of Finance and others who, given a similar sense of dignity and self-respect, and a sense of the Constitution, might, in view of the disasters that their policies are causing, be inclined to tender their resignations.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, Lord Carrington is a distinguished Commonwealth statesman who has made a significant contribution to the parliamentary system. It certainly would be out of order for me to comment on the subject of his resignation. Surely, that is a question of domestic British political interest.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I have no objection to having the Leader of the Government amplify his answers with respect to external affairs. I realize that in this way, he will at least acquire some knowledge of the subject!

However, the question we must continue to ask ourselves is the following: Why did Canada give the appearance of declaring war against Argentina by recalling its ambassador, by calling an emergency meeting, and by putting an embargo on certain strategic arms to be delivered to Argentina? Why did it not offer both countries its services as a mediator, to try and settle this conflict without resorting to arms?

● (2015)

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the statement by Honourable Senator Asselin is, to say the least, a considerable exaggeration of the Canadian position. Indeed, Canada's actions have been responsible and restrained. Canada has expressed the hope that during the next two, possibly critical, weeks this nation may be able to play some constructive role in resolving the dispute before hostilities occur. Canada has not acted in an irresponsible manner.

Senator Asselin: No?

Senator Perrault: Indeed, one would have expected that the honourable senator might have risen in his place this evening to commend the government for the actions it has taken.

Senator Asselin: I will not, no.

[Translation]

Can the Leader of the Government tell me whether other countries have now taken the same action as Canada concerning this conflict? Have other countries taken similar action?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, one of our distinguished member nations of the Commonwealth, New Zealand, has severed diplomatic relations and has, I understand, offered an armed contingent to intervene militarily in the Falkland Islands. Other nations have expressed their great concern about the situation. The Security Council has, of course, condemned what is a unilateral military action—an action taken without any reference to the wishes of the indigenous population. No effort has been made to determine whether the people of the Falkland Islands wish them to remain a British possession, or whether they wish them to be incorporated into the Argentine nation. But I repeat, Canada's position has been most restrained and, as usual, very responsible.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Asselin: No.

Senator Perrault: It is more than accident—

Senator Asselin: No, not at all.

Senator Perrault: It is more than accident that in other disputes which have occurred within the last 35 years Canada has played a lead role.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: We have played a lead role among that group of nations which have worked for the peaceful resolution of international disputes. In the present crisis, we hope that Canada can once again play a useful peacemaking role.

Senator Asselin: May I ask the minister how many countries have now recalled their ambassadors for consultation?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information will be sought, but I cannot see the significance of that question. The question is really whether or not Canada can play a reasonable and responsible role, and perhaps a leadership role, by the example of restraint and constructive initiatives that we are giving.

Senator Asselin: No.

Senator Perrault: The example of restraint and of responsibility.

Senator Asselin: No. No way.

NEWFOUNDLAND

RESULTS OF PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate aware of the rumour that the results of the Newfoundland election show that the PCs have won 44 out of 52 seats?

Some Hon. Senators: Hurrah!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was not aware of that information. However, if the report is accurate, it suggests that the results may be contrary to statutes and rules relating to the creation of monopolies.

Senator Flynn: Not with respect to your party's rules.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: We can always rely on the game laws to keep a few of you there.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, perhaps this question, which I direct to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, will ease us appropriately into delayed answers. On February 2, which was Candlemas Day—and clearly, from what followed, it must have been bright and clear—the minister responded to an inquiry of mine respecting the IJC and the fact that Canada still did not have its representation up to strength. He replied that “excellent progress” was “being made in the pursuit of excellence.” I would give that an excellent mark as an answer, but I would not pass it at all as a forecast of what was going to happen, because it was terrible.

It is my impression that a meeting of the IJC was held not long ago in the United States to deal with a most important matter concerning the great province of British Columbia, the Skagit Valley. Again, Canada had only two commissioners to three from the United States.

Once again I ask—now as we approach Easter, many weeks after Candlemas Day—when is there to be a Canadian commissioner appointed to bring that important body up to full strength? I hope they are not waiting for the aftermath of the Saskatchewan and Newfoundland elections or possibly for Senate reform. I think too much delay has already taken place.

● (2020)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the suggestion conveyed by Honourable Senator Macquarrie is one that would inspire the belief that Canadian representation on the IJC has been utterly decimated. There is in fact one vacancy. There are three serving commissioners and only one vacancy. The pursuit of excellence continues, and efforts are being made to find a person who is able to fill the single vacancy.

Senator Macquarrie: In a rather bootleg supplementary, I might say that any impression I am trying to create is not a matter of my unique manufacture. I think it is widely known that the state of affairs between Canada and the United States is such that we need every possible avenue of assistance. The full slate on the IJC is one of those avenues.

Senator Perrault: Senator Macquarrie's views will be communicated to the appropriate sources in government. Perhaps my friend may wish to suggest a short list of names from which someone can be appointed.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS—TQ&M Pipeline

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised by Senator Smith on March 23 which concerned the TQ&M pipeline.

I can inform the honourable senator that construction on that portion of the pipeline to be constructed in New Brunswick is expected to begin in May 1983. Construction on the Nova Scotia leg of the pipeline should commence by January 1985. The completion date for both the New Brunswick and the Nova Scotia portions is estimated to be the end of 1986.

NEWFOUNDLAND

LOSS OF DRILL RIG OCEAN RANGER—ALLEGED WARNING AGAINST WINTER OFFSHORE DRILLING

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Marshall on March 23 regarding the loss of the drill rig Ocean Ranger.

Two years ago during the Progressive Conservative regime, the then Minister of the Environment, Mr. Fraser, wrote to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Hnatyshyn, asking that consideration be given to halting winter oil drilling operations off the east coast of Newfoundland. The reason given for this request was the Department of the Environment's concern about a possible oil spill. The view at that time was that environmental concerns over exploratory drilling were being overstated because of alleged safety precautions involved at all times in drilling activity to prevent oil spills.

There was no reference in the request of the Department of the Environment to concerns about safety of drilling operations and the protection of the drilling crews in this respect.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—OFFSHORE OIL RESOURCES—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question raised by Senator Doody on March 17, asking if the federal government would make public the federal document from which Premier Peckford quoted at the time of his calling an election on the offshore resource ownership issue.

Hon. William C. Doody: Too late; the election is over!

Senator Perrault: I should like to advise the honourable gentleman that the government does not intend to make public, at this time, the document to which he has referred. I would like to point out to the honourable senator that the federal position on the offshore is clearly laid out in the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF LIFE INSURANCE INDUSTRY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question which was asked by Senator Bosa on March 16 concerning the taxation of life insurance.

A number of meetings have been held with the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association and the Life Underwriters Association of Canada. There continues to be close co-operation and the meetings to date have been very useful.

Hon. Martial Asselin: No decision has been taken.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is anxious for a reply. If he will restrain himself for a moment, an important final sentence will be read into the record.

I understand that the Minister of Finance and the insurance representatives are anxious to reach a satisfactory agreement on the issues quickly, if possible.

Senator Asselin: That is a farce!

Senator Perrault: If the honourable senator wishes to have further information, it will be sought.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question on this insurance issue. The subject of the taxation on insurance policies was one which was identified as being among those that would be referred to a committee which would be empowered to hear witnesses. I would like to know whether it is still the policy of the government to refer this matter of taxation of insurance policies to a committee where public representations may be heard?

● (2025)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. However, it may well be one of the questions which will be considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, by way of a supplementary question and to assist the Minister of Finance in his deliberations on this very subject—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Please, don't do us any favours.

Senator Murray: —would the Leader of the Government draw to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, the fact that 90 per cent of the insurance sold in Mr. MacEachen's riding last year was whole life insurance.

Senator Perrault: I am sure that if that statistic is correct, it is well known to the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Jack Marshall: The minister is probably the beneficiary.

Senator Perrault: May I say, however, that certain allegations relating to insurance policies were brought to the Senate just a few days ago in the form of a question, and it was shown that there are some misconceptions with respect to the impact of—

Senator Murray: The budget was misconceived.

Senator Perrault: —this announced measure insofar as holders of insurance policies are concerned. I refer honourable senators to a reply I gave to Senator Nurgitz just a few days ago, and I hope that they will read my reply given at that time.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

HOUSING—MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on April 1, 1982, Senator Benidickson asked whether the federal government had been asked to contribute to the cost of plans introduced by the Governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to assist homeowners in the renewal of their mortgages.

The answer is: No, these provinces have not asked the federal government to share in the cost of their mortgage assistance schemes. Perhaps they did not do so because the federal government had already announced the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan before any provinces came forward with assistance to homeowners. The government is of the view that the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan will assist all Canadians in any province who faces hardship on renewal of their mortgages.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): All 700 of them.

Senator Frith: No, you have the wrong number, but we shall get to that later. It is 700 lending institutions that are involved, I understand.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NEW DISTRICT OFFICES—LOCATION, STAFF AND WORKLOAD

Question No. 70 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall:

What are the locations of all new district offices established across Canada by the Department of Veterans Affairs since January 1, 1979, and what is (i) the date each office opened and its function (ii) the number of staff and positions in each office and (iii) the breakdown of the case workload by office since they were opened?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

The function of each district office is to provide counselling, referral and benefit delivery services for the full range of economic support and treatment benefits administered by the Department.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTSREPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-97

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, Bill C-97 arises out of the 1942 wartime tax collection agreements which have been subject to quinquennial review since that time. Certain provisions of the act under which these arrangements are made expired on March 31, and if the provinces are to receive their equalization payments this legislation must be passed prior to April 15. The bill will be reviewed in some considerable detail by Senator Buckwold, but in order to acquaint you with the hearings of the committee it is necessary that I give a brief review of some of the provisions of the bill.

The bill serves two functions. First, it creates a new equalization formula; and, second, it alters the Established Programs Financing Act which, as honourable senators know, is the act by the provisions of which the federal government helps the provinces finance health care and post-secondary education. In the realm of equalization, the new Constitution says that we should provide reasonably comparable services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. The federal government's intention was to reduce the demands of equalization on the federal treasury while maintaining the constitutional requirement.

There are two main changes in the act. First, almost all the provincial tax revenue sources are included in the tax base under the new legislation. That means that instead of 50 per cent of the resource revenues going into the tax base, as was the case in the past, all resource revenues will be taken in. Additionally, municipal property taxes and local government revenues from goods and services will be included. The revenues were brought up to a national average under the old act. What this bill proposes to do is to bring those revenues up to the per capita average of five provinces—British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. There are also certain guarantee provisions under the bill. There is a payment floor, which is known as the Newfoundland provision, which assures that equalization will not drop at less than a certain rate if there is a very egregious increase in the revenues of the provinces, such as the discovery of offshore oil.

● (2030)

Another guarantee is the payment ceiling. In that regard it is stated that the growth in equalization payments from 1982 on will not exceed the rate of growth in the GNP. There is a transitional guarantee, which I will speak about later, which affects Manitoba and Quebec.

In 1980 and 1981 payments were made based on population estimates which, following the 1981 census, proved to be wrong, and they constitute overpayments to certain provinces. What will happen under this guarantee is that the provinces will make the payments and the federal government will return the payments so that the provinces do not suffer a reduction in their equalization payments due to the new population figures in the 1981 census.

Another guarantee is the fiscal stabilization program which protects the revenues of all provinces from a sharp downturn in the economy.

Finally, there is the personal income tax revenue guarantee which is under the tax collection agreement, and which prevents the revenue from personal income tax going below a certain floor in the event that the federal government alters the personal income tax rates.

The other aspect of the bill affects the Established Programs Financing Act which, as I said before, affects health care and post-secondary education in the provinces. At the present time the grants consist of the transfer of equal per capita cash payments to the provinces, plus equalized tax points, plus a revenue guarantee which was introduced in 1972, to cushion the provinces against the effects of the 1971 tax amendments. The provinces have argued that this guarantee affects only general revenue. On the other hand, the federal government argued that it was a contribution to established programs financing. The Economic Council and the task force in the other place recommended that the revenue guarantee be incorporated in the established programs financing. In fact, what happened was that the federal government reversed its position and determined to eliminate the guarantee which constitutes approximately 7 to 8 per cent of the total of the established programs financing. Under this proposed amendment, all provinces now are to receive equal per capita transfers. Under the old system, as I stated, they got cash plus tax points. The problem was that some tax points were worth more to some provinces than to others. As a result, there was no equality in the amount of grants under the established programs financing. What this will do now is make cash grants of differing amounts so that when you add the tax points to the cash amounts you will come to an amount that is a per capita grant for established programs that is the same for every province.

The committee initiated a pre-study of this bill that was not really a normal pre-study. As I understand a pre-study, the subject matter of a bill is referred to a committee so that it can make a report and make recommendations while the matter is still being debated in the other place. What happened here was that we were involved in a series of hearings on the main estimates relating to the interaction of interest rates and exchange rates, and we had a number of witnesses lined up. It became apparent that this bill was going to come to us while we were facing the Easter recess, the Queen's visit and a deadline for payments to the provinces of April 15. We realized that what would probably happen would be that we would get the bill today, at the earliest, and there would not be sufficient time before the Easter recess to properly examine it. So, for that reason we determined on a pre-study, which, as I say, is not actually a pre-study because, in fact, I am making the report after the bill has passed the other place and after it has received first reading in this house. The committee made a fairly extensive examination, but obviously not as extensive as it would have wished had there been more time.

● (2035)

In connection with the hearings on government policy and regional disparities, which has now been going on for two years or more, we had two meetings with the Department of Finance on the subject of equalization and established programs financing. During the course of those hearings we had several discussions on the subject of equalization and shared-cost programs with a number of witnesses, including, I believe, the Newfoundland Minister of Finance, the Premier of New Brunswick, and others.

In the hearings just concluded we had a complete briefing on the act from officials of the Department of Finance. We heard from Dr. Rodney Dobell, the director of the special task force which produced the report Fiscal Federalism in Canada. We had a hearing with the Economic Council of Canada on that body's study entitled Financing Confederation. And, finally, we had a hearing with the Minister of Finance.

Honourable senators, I should like to deal with the points raised by the members of the committee. They are not points that were agreed upon by the committee, but points which were raised during the hearings, and I think the Senate should be aware of them.

First, it was felt by members of the committee that the Economic Council should make a review of the present act prior to the next quinquennial review in 1987. It was felt that if, in considering the act at that time, senators and members of the House of Commons had at their disposal an objective study of the problem by the Economic Council—which had proved, in its study entitled Financing Confederation, that it could do an outstanding job on this subject—it would be useful in debating the legislation at that time.

One of the questions raised by honourable senators was whether the constitutional goal of equalization had been achieved—that is, as I stated earlier, reasonable comparability of services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. Honourable senators will realize that while all natural resource revenues have been brought into the formula, in selecting the five provinces Alberta has been excluded as one of the provinces on which the average is set. That has the effect of excluding a large percentage of the effect of resource revenues on the formula. Also the formula assists provinces with the least developed property tax systems. One has to wonder, therefore, if the five-province standard, which is now substituted for the national average standard, is the fairest method of determining equalization payments. Clearly, something did happen which indicates that it may well not be the fairest step, and that is what is called the Manitoba issue. Despite a weakening economy in Manitoba, equalization rises more slowly there than in several other provinces that enjoy equalization payments. As a matter of fact, the equalization payments in Manitoba would have fallen had it not been for the transitional payments under this act. Those transitional payments are $165 million, paid over three years; but even including those payments, in the five years that the act will be in force Manitoba's equalization payments will increase by 36 per cent, as opposed to Quebec's increasing by 66 per cent, and the Atlantic provinces' by 81 per cent.

Certain members of the committee expressed concern about this. They stated that the very fact there has to be a transition provision indicates that there is a problem with the formula, and that changing it from the national average to the five-province does create an inequality.

It is interesting to note that the problem for Manitoba would have been avoided if the national average system had been used. The Minister of Finance replied to this that the percentage of payments received by Manitoba was greater than the percentage of payments received in the past, if you exclude the last five years. Members of the committee thought that perhaps that begged the question, because under the old scheme Manitoba would have had an increase in revenues that was more comparable to the increase in revenues enjoyed by Quebec and the maritime provinces. In contemplating spending, a government does not look just at the spending it is going to do this year, but in the next four or five years; so that what this has done is to affect seriously the Province of Manitoba in its future spending plans.

It is interesting to note that if an additional payment, over the $165 million, were made under the transition provision, it would have no effect whatsoever on the formula. In other words, if there is a problem for Manitoba, it could be corrected by an additional payment under the transition provision, and the formula would remain the same.

Senators also mentioned the problem of the federal governments' maintaining national standards in provincial fields, most especially in the health-care field.

Finally, honourable senators, this is not an agreement: this is an act of the Parliament of Canada. It can be amended at any time. It seems to me that instead of arriving, five years hence, at the situation that we are in now, if the scheme is not working properly amendments should be made as we go down the road. I think everything possible should be done by the federal government to avoid the kind of situation that we are in today, in which we are considering one of the most important acts affecting Confederation under a deadline and under pressure, and, as Senator Roblin so aptly said, where we are being squeezed.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question. Is it not true that the honourable senators who were concerned about the Manitoba question were the two senators from Manitoba, who were performing their regional function and, I may say, doing it very well?

Senator Everett: Yes, I think that is true. We were the ones who were most concerned. I detected, however, a lot of sympathy from the other senators.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold moved the second reading of Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Establishment Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

He said: Honourable senators, first of all, may I express my compliments to Senator Everett, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, for what in fact could have been my speech?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Or his!

Senator Buckwold: Well, he has already made his, and it is almost—

Hon. Martial Asselin: Dispense!

Senator Buckwold: —embarrassing for me to have to go through many of the points he presented to you so simply. I do not mean “simply” in the sense that it was a simple presentation, but that without complication he presented to the members of this chamber the main thrust of the act, described its implications and drew some conclusions. I must say again that I congratulate him on the grasp he has of this complex subject and on the excellent job his committee did in its pre-study.

As I say, many members have probably understood enough of the general principles of the act as a result of Senator Everett's remarks to say, “Well, that will do for second reading!” I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition and others for the fact that, unfortunately, I am going to have to go through these matters again—and I think it is proper to do so—in a good deal more detail, with regard to this important and complex piece of legislation, which means so much to the future of Confederation and the relations which must exist between the federal government and the provinces.

If you will allow me, then, honourable senators, I will move on to what, obviously, is not a simple bill. We all remember our friend Senator Laird introducing a bill of two or three lines as being simple, and, as a result, falling into a trap. I assure you that this is a complicated and very involved piece of legislation. I hope you will bear with me as I go through some of the steps in more detail than was done in the excellent job done by the chairman of the committee.

Honourable senators, Bill C-97 deals with a number of issues involving the federal government and the provinces, and which constitute the substance of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

As you are no doubt aware, it is traditional in Canada to review the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements every five years. The bill before us now is a product of that tradition. It reflects the numerous consultations which have taken place over the past 14 months between the two levels of government on how to present fiscal arrangements, part of which expired on March 31, and how they might be improved and better adapted to current economic and fiscal circumstances. The bill provides important modifications to those arrangements, modifications which will affect the nature of fiscal relations between the federal government and the provinces for the better part of the 1980s.

In order to underline the importance of this bill I would like, first, to outline the changes which it will bring about. I will then review the various considerations which have led the government to propose these changes, and, finally, I shall explain in greater detail the nature of the major changes proposed.

Honourable senators, the bill seeks to modify the current fiscal arrangements in several ways. First, it provides for a substantially changed fiscal equalization formula, featuring the most comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity—I think we have to remember that expression, “fiscal capacity”, because it does have some relationship to the problem of Manitoba which has been referred to by Senator Everett—since the program was introduced in 1957, as well as a representative average standard.

Second, the bill modifies the established programs financing, sometimes referred to as EPF, that we all know about. It modifies it by eliminating the portion of those arrangements associated with compensation for termination of the 1972 revenue guarantees, and by making EPF transfers to all provinces equally, per capita, but without reducing federal contributions to health and post-secondary education programs. That was well explained, I think, by Senator Everett. I would just remind you that the 1972 revenue guarantees came about with the object of protecting the provinces from what could have been unforeseen consequences arising out of the tax reform program of 1972.

Third, it authorizes the federal government to transfer to oil-producing provinces its share of the federal oil export charge for oil exported during the period November 1, 1980 to January 1982.

Fourth, it provides for special arrangements under which the federal government would make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the equalization program for the 1980-81 and the 1981-82 fiscal years, as a consequence of the June 1981 census of population. Again, this was ably referred to by Senator Everett.

Fifth, it extends for an indefinite period the fiscal stabilization program which protects provinces against a reduction in revenues arising from a sharp downturn in economic activity and, therefore, facilitates their borrowing.

Sixth, it extends the personal income tax revenue guarantee program, which is associated with the income tax collection agreements, for another five years.

The Leader of the Opposition will be glad to know that, finally, it provides for a few technical amendments to sections of the Fiscal Arrangements Act dealing with reciprocal taxation.

Honourable senators, in preparing this important piece of legislation, the government had to reconcile various considerations.

The first set of considerations relates to the current state of fiscal federalism in Canada. As honourable senators know, the fiscal arrangements that exist today between our two levels of government result from a series of developments which began in the 1950s. Our system of intergovernmental transfers was considerably expanded in 1957 with the advent of contributions for hospital insurance and the introduction of equalization payments to financially disadvantaged provinces. Since then, federal cash transfers to provinces have grown from $300 million to some $14 billion a year—an astounding figure. This phenomenal increase has come about largely through the progressive enrichment of the fiscal equalization program and the establishment of new arrangements for the joint financing of health, welfare and post-secondary education.

Major developments have also taken place in the sharing of tax fields between our two levels of government. During most of World War II and up to 1962, the federal government had almost exclusive occupancy of the personal and corporate income tax fields. Provincial-local revenues were drawn essentially from payments made under tax rental agreements, property taxes, consumption taxes and natural resource levies. Since then, however, the federal government has reduced its personal income tax on several occasions in order to provide substantial, what is called, “tax room” to the provinces. As the provinces occupied this additional tax room they sought a more flexible tax structure, and this, to a considerable extent, has been accommodated within the income tax collection agreements.

There are other considerations which had to guide the government in its review of the fiscal arrangements. As was mentioned in a budget document issued on November 12, 1981, the federal government’s initial proposals attempted to reconcile two broad imperatives. One is the pursuit of the national goals embodied in the current arrangements. Equalization, which now constitutes a cornerstone of Canadian federalism to which we continue to be firmly committed, is one of those goals. A second goal is the maintenance in all parts of the country of basic social programs in the area of health and post-secondary education. A third goal is to maintain a reasonable degree of harmonization in the income tax fields.

The second imperative was and remains expenditure restraint. I think we must underline, honourable senators, that the Government of Canada must move in the direction of reducing its expenditures and restraining, wherever possible, the deficit which has been incurred. That has certainly been brought to our attention many times by members of the opposition as well as by supporters of the government.

[Senator Buckwold.]

One of the main reasons for reviewing the fiscal arrangements every five years is the need to ensure that they are consistent with changing economic and fiscal circumstances. As the November 12 budget made clear, current circumstances require the federal government to apply some restraint to all expenditure areas. Since transfers to provinces account for approximately 20 per cent of total federal expenditures, they cannot be insulated from our restraint effort; I think they must be included. However, the restraint which must apply to federal transfers to provinces should be tempered with equity.

In developing its proposals for revision of the fiscal arrangements, the federal government also had to be guided by the views of provincial governments. The content of the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, reflects intensive consultations with the provinces at both the officials and the ministerial levels.

Senator Flynn: This speech was obviously prepared for the House of Commons.

Senator Buckwold: By my reference to “Mr. Speaker”?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Buckwold: Every now and again I do not think it is wrong to acknowledge the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: You were reading.

Senator Buckwold: I do not think it was prepared for the House of Commons because I do not think the House of Commons had as much detail as we have acquired for honourable senators.

Senator Flynn: But you are reading.

Senator Buckwold: I think it important that this information be transmitted correctly so that the facts are recorded.

Senator Flynn: Smile.

Senator Buckwold: Yes, I can certainly do that.

As I say, the content of the bill before us reflects intensive consultation with the provinces at both the officials and the ministerial levels. Consultations with the provinces on the revision of the arrangements began in December 1980.

Senator Asselin: Consultation, but not negotiation.

Senator Buckwold: I did not say “negotiation;” I said “consultation.” I would assume that there was a fair amount of negotiation. As I move into my further remarks, I think you will find that many arrangements were in fact negotiated, as reflected in the final proposals embodied in this bill.

In the intervening 15 months, the Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, met on six different occasions with his provincial counterparts. He also held bilateral discussions with most of them last summer. Moreover, 14 federal-provincial meetings of officials have been held.

The fact that provinces have been consulted does not mean, of course, that the government was able to agree with them on all aspects of the proposed revision. Provinces, for example, have asked that the current arrangements be extended for an additional year in order to allow more time for their review. Such an alternative would have been very costly to the federal treasury since it would have involved additional outlays of some $1.2 billion in 1982-83. It would also involve maintaining an equalization formula which, according to independent observers and most provincial governments, does not meet the economic and fiscal requirements of the 1980s.

However, honourable senators, these differences of view have not prevented a measure of agreement on more specific issues. As I will explain in a moment, the contribution of the provinces has been particularly significant in the development of a new equalization system.

I now turn to the provisions of the bill. They are contained in two parts. Part I modifies the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and, more particularly, the provisions of the act relating to fiscal equalization and established programs financing. Part II of the bill empowers the federal government to accelerate the transfer to the oil-producing provinces of their share of the oil export charge and to make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the equalization program for the 1980-81 and 1981-82 fiscal years as a consequence of the June 1981 census of population.

Among the most important provisions of the bill are those modifying Part I of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, which deals with fiscal equalization. Although the bill provides for an improved equalization formula, the purpose of equalization remains the same. As has always been the case, the program seeks to make it possible for all provinces to enjoy reasonable standards of basic public services without having to resort to unduly high levels of taxation. It is estimated that under this formula about $29.3 billion of equalization will be paid to six provinces over the next five years, as compared with $16.5 billion over the past five years.

With the formula provided for in the bill, overall federal cash outlays will be approximately $1.148 billion higher than the original November 12 budget presentation estimates. Of this amount, $311 million will be delivered through the fiscal equalization program, and $837 million through the established programs financing, which would have higher cash payments as a result of replacing the proposed Ontario standard by the representative average standard, which was referred to by Senator Everett.

In order to understand why these changes are being made, it is important to appreciate that the equalization formula has two fundamental elements. The first is the measure of relative provincial fiscal capacity—that is, the capacity or potential of a province to raise revenues through taxes and levies of various kinds relative to other provinces. Fiscal capacity is measured by estimating, on a comparable basis, the per capita revenue which each province could derive from the various taxes or levies imposed at the provincial and municipal level. The measure of fiscal capacity can be broadened or narrowed by increasing or reducing the number of provincial and local taxes and revenue sources that are taken into account. The broader the measure of fiscal capacity, the more accurate it will be in comparing the overall fiscal capacity of provinces and in measuring their relative needs for equalization payments.

The bill provides for a measure of fiscal capacity that would be significantly broader than the one in effect until last March 31, or the one proposed in November. The November 12 proposal provided for the inclusion in the formula of the entire range of taxes and levies imposed by provinces and local governments on income, consumption, property, wealth and natural resources, including municipal property taxes, the proceeds of oil and gas land sales, and the 50 per cent of other non-renewable resources revenues now excluded.

The bill now provides for the inclusion of all such taxes and levies, and also of a further source of local government revenues, namely, receipts from the sale of goods and services. As a result of the broadening of provincial fiscal capacity, an additional $16.5 billion of provincial revenues will be equalized under the formula in 1982-83.

The second basic element of an equalization formula is the equalization standard—that is, the level to which the potential revenues of certain provinces, based upon the measure of fiscal capacity, should be raised.

The new formula would be based on a representative average standard (RAS), instead of an Ontario standard, as was proposed last November, or a national average standard, as used under the formula which expired on March 31. Under the new RAS standard, the level to which the fiscal capacity of recipient provinces would be raised would be the average per capita fiscal capacity of five provinces collectively considered to be representative of all provinces—namely, Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. These provinces constitute a type of median of the ten provinces in terms of per capita fiscal capacity. They exclude Alberta at the top, and the four Atlantic provinces at the lower end. The two exclusions would be closely balanced, since Alberta and the Atlantic region each account for approximately 9.2 per cent of total provincial population.

In the course of consultations held during the past few months, the provinces expressed a number of concerns regarding the Ontario standard initially proposed by the government. They argued that no single province can be sufficiently representative of the ten to constitute an appropriate standard, and that equalization payments would be unstable with a single-province standard, since that standard would be influenced by economic developments in one province only. The provinces were also concerned that such a formula would result in an undesirable treatment of natural resource revenues because of the relatively small natural resource base of Ontario.

It was in order to meet these concerns that the government agreed to provide in the bill for a more broadly based standard, taking account of five provinces with over 80 per cent of total provincial population.

The bill also provides for a number of additional features which, in certain circumstances, would make the new equalization system more advantageous for certain provinces than the government's initial proposal. One of those is a minimum level of payment or "floor" provision which was added in response to the concerns of certain provinces which feared that their equalization entitlement might drop drastically if they were to experience a sudden upsurge in their resource revenues.

In January—and this is interesting—the government proposed a floor provision whereby, beginning with 1983-84, no equalization-receiving province could have a total entitlement for a fiscal year that would be less than 85 per cent of its total entitlement for the preceding year. As a result of further provincial representations, the "floor" provision proposed in the bill is even more generous. The 85 per cent minimum payment is increased to 95 per cent for provinces whose per capita fiscal capacity is equal to or less than 70 per cent of the national average per capita capacity, and to 90 per cent for provinces whose per capita fiscal capacity is over 70 per cent of the national average per capita capacity but less than 75 per cent.

I am sorry if this is so complicated. Even I am having difficulty following it all the way through, but I am glad to be able to pass this on to Senator Asselin and others to indicate the kind of give that was there when the federal government made these arrangements with the provinces.

Hon. G. I. Smith: The kind of what?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is an unfortunate word.

Senator Smith: I was, perhaps a little rudely, asking the honourable gentleman what word he used when he spoke about something relating to the provinces.

Senator Buckwold: Are you talking about the percentages?

Senator Smith: You used a word which sounded very much like "give".

Senator Buckwold: I think that is what it is. I am not ashamed to use a simple English word like "give".

Senator Smith: The honourable gentleman should not be ashamed to use any such term if it is truthful.

Senator Buckwold: I think that after I complete my presentation you will find that the fairness of the proposals that have been made will be quite clear.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: You have blind approval from the Leader of the Government.

• (2110)

Senator Smith: You had better get to that part, then.

Senator Buckwold: Another new feature is the transitional arrangement protecting provinces against too abrupt a change in the level of their equalization as we move from the current system to the new one.

Following representations from the provinces, and particularly Manitoba, the government proposed in January that any province entitled to equalization in 1982-83 be guaranteed an increase in its equalization in that year at least equivalent to its average annual equalization increase, in absolute terms, between 1977-78 and 1981-82.

The arrangement provided for in the bill extends the transitional protection from one year to three years, and builds steps into it so that the minimum equalization entitlement of each province would be higher in the second and third years.

Honourable senators, in the course of the debate which took place in the other place members of the opposition proposed an amendment to the effect that Manitoba's equalization entitlement be determined on the basis of the growth of the entitlement of the province with the second lowest rate of growth, I shall not go into the details of that, but that amendment was rejected. I think that that amendment was rejected on two grounds. First of all, it would mean that the entitlement of one province would be based upon that of another. This would not make much sense, since the whole idea behind equalization is that it be based upon each province's own measure of fiscal capacity. Secondly, the proposed amendment would raise Manitoba's fiscal capacity above that of Ontario for all five years of the new arrangement, even though Ontario would receive no equalization. Clearly, this would create an unacceptable situation.

Having said that, I have every sympathy with the province of Manitoba and the peculiar problems it faces.

Finally, as proposed in the budget, the bill provides for a ceiling under which the growth of total equalization payments to all provinces would be constrained by the rate of growth of GNP. However, to further accommodate the provinces, the ceiling would begin to apply only in 1983-84. The original proposal was that the ceiling should apply beginning in 1982-83. This is another consideration which was met by the federal government. This ceiling provision is essentially a contingency measure. Forecasts do not indicate that it will come into play. However, past experience suggests that such a provision is advisable.

Honourable senators, those are the essential features of the equalization formula provided for in the bill. It is a formula which would achieve the historic purpose of equalization by means of the most comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity ever used since the inception of the program 25 years ago, and by a more stable standard reflecting economic and fiscal developments in five provinces accounting for over 80 per cent of the country's population and provincial fiscal capacity. The payments in 1982-83 under the new system will grow to $4.7 billion from $4.1 billion in 1981-82.

Honourable senators, I now turn to another major component of our fiscal arrangements known as established programs financing or EPF. These are dealt with in Part VI of the Fiscal Arrangements Act. The transfers made under EPF since 1977 have served two distinct purposes.

First, they provide for federal contributions to the provinces for three important programs—namely, hospital insurance medicare and post-secondary education. Until March 31, 1977 federal contributions to these programs were based on 50:50 cost-sharing formulae. However, the concept of cost-sharing raised several problems both for the federal government and the provinces. The federal government could neither control nor accurately predict costs. The provinces complained that the lack of flexibility in program design caused them to spend more than they needed to spend to deliver a given level of services. They also objected to the federal auditing of provincial accounts. During the 1976 review of the fiscal arrangements, the federal government and the provinces therefore agreed to replace the cost-sharing formulae by a block funding arrangement which came to be known as EPF. Under this arrangement, federal contributions to the three programs are no longer tied to provincial expenditures on the basis of 50:50 cost-sharing formulae. Rather, federal contributions in the base year, 1975-76, are escalated by the rate of growth of the gross national product. Moreover, the federal contributions are no longer made up solely of cash payments. They consist instead of a mix of cash and tax transfers.

A second purpose of established programs financing has been to compensate provinces for the termination of the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee, which has already been explained. This element was added to the EPF arrangements in 1977 at the request of the provinces, although the EPF arrangements were designed to provide financial support for public health insurance and post-secondary education. One personal income tax point and the cash equivalent of a second point were added to the arrangements in 1977 by way of compensation.

Honourable senators, the bill before us modifies the EPF provisions in two ways. The first one stems from a concern with equity. As I mentioned a moment ago, federal EPF contributions have two elements: a transfer of tax room, and a payment in cash. Under present legislation, where the yield from the tax transfer is higher—that is, in the richer provinces—the total per capita federal contribution is higher. As a result, over the coming years Alberta and British Columbia would receive substantially more per person than Quebec or Newfoundland. Since those receiving more are the provinces best able to finance health and higher education, that is inequitable. Consequently, the bill modifies the computation of the EPF cash transfers so that the total value of the EPF contributions to all provinces will be equal per capita.

The second EPF modification in this bill discontinues that portion of the EPF transfers that compensated provinces for termination of the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee. This element was in addition to the basic EPF transfers for the financing of health insurance and post-secondary education programs. In the past, provinces have argued that it should not be taken into account in computing the federal share of the financing of these programs. The data included in the report on EPF issued by the premiers following their twenty-second annual conference last August confirms this view. That report excludes compensation for the revenue guarantee in calculating the share of health insurance and post-secondary education program costs borne by the federal government. Removal of the revenue guarantee element will not lower the level of support for these programs. In fact, the value of the federal contribution to these programs will continue to grow in line with the gross national product over the 1982-87 period. Removing the revenue guarantee element will simply moderate the rate of growth of the total established programs financing transfer in 1982-83.

Honourable senators, it must be remembered also that the effect of removing the revenue guarantee compensation will be partly offset by the increases in provincial income tax revenues arising out of the tax measures announced in the November 12 budget. For 1982-83 alone, the increase in provincial revenues is estimated to be approximately $685 million.

It is important, too, to understand why the government is proposing to reduce the growth of transfers to provinces. Essentially, there are two reasons.

First, the federal government must apply restraint to all expenditure areas if it is to reduce its deficit and move towards a more balanced budgetary situation. As I have already mentioned, since transfers to provinces account for approximately 20 per cent of total federal expenditures they should not escape our restraint effort.

The second major consideration underlying the proposed reduction has to do with the nature of the revenue guarantee program. The latter was designed to protect provinces against unforeseen reductions which might have resulted from the 1972 tax reform. Although in 1977 the federal government felt the program had fulfilled its original purpose, it offered to enrich the EPF transfer then being negotiated by one personal income tax point and the cash equivalent of another point to settle all outstanding issues. The offer was accepted. The provinces have now had ten years in which to adjust their tax rates since the 1972 tax reform. The revenue guarantee portion of EPF therefore no longer has any raison d'être.

Honourable senators, I have gone into this aspect in some detail because it is an area about which great concern has been expressed.

Other provisions of the bill are meant to extend those parts of the Fiscal Arrangements Act dealing with the fiscal stabilization program, the personal income tax revenue guarantee program and the reciprocal taxation program.

Part II of the Fiscal Arrangements Act authorizes the federal government to make fiscal stabilization payments for the period beginning April 1, 1977 and ending March 31, 1982. The bill provides for an extension of that authority for an indefinite period. The purpose of these payments is to protect provinces from sudden year-to-year losses in revenue as a result of a severe downturn in the national economy or in their own economies.

Part IV of the Fiscal Arrangements Act authorizes the federal government to make revenue guarantee payments in cases of serious disruption to provincial financial planning resulting from federal tax policy changes for the five-year period ending March 31, 1982. The bill extends the authority to make such payments to March 31, 1987. The purpose of this program is to encourage the maintenance of a common tax system across Canada.

Honourable senators, the bill before us also provides for the transfer to oil-producing provinces of their share of the revenues which accrued from the oil export charge from November 1, 1980 to January 1982. That is being accomplished through this bill. The bill also authorizes the federal government to make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the fiscal equalization program for the 1980-81 and 1981-82 fiscal years as a consequence of the June 1981 census of population. Again, I think that has been explained quite well by Senator Everett and I will not go into any more detail on that.

Incidentally, just to express the cost of the payments to provinces owing to changes in their population as reflected in the last census, these will result in additional receipts to those provinces which come into the picture. I believe there are five provinces involved in that, for an estimated total of $217 million. Of that, Manitoba's share—and I pass this on to Senator Roblin—is $31 million. This $31 million was literally overpaid to the province of Manitoba and to other provinces, basically in the maritimes. This is a precedent; I would say that it has never happened before. This has never been forgiven; this overpayment is because of a lower population census figure.

In conclusion—honourable senators will be glad to know that I have just about come to the end. I must say that I apologize for the length and detail of my remarks. I just know that all honourable senators have been absolutely fascinated by everything I have had to say.

Senator Flynn: You guessed it!

Senator Buckwold: I know that honourable senators have also been able to understand all of the complications of this bill.

In conclusion, then, I would like to underline the fact that an estimated $105.5 billion will be provided to the provinces under the amended fiscal arrangements over the next five years, as compared to the $61.3 billion which has been transferred to the provinces since 1977. The provisions contained in the bill are equitable for all provinces and will allow the federal government to continue the major role it has played in ensuring that Canadians enjoy the high level of services they expect.

Again, honourable senators, I thank you for the attention you have given me and for the great understanding with which you have followed my presentation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate you on your stamina, but I must begin my remarks tonight on this subject by expressing my feeling of appreciation, first to the chairman of the committee for giving us the flavour of our discussions, and also to the honourable gentleman who has just spoken, who has presented a very complicated subject in a careful and dedicated manner.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: It will not surprise him if I do not agree with all of his conclusions, but I recognize the effort he has made to present this subject fairly to the members of this chamber.

This is an important topic. It is one of the most important that we have dealt with over the last little while. I agree, with the chairman of the committee, that it is regrettable that the matter was not approached by the federal executive in a sufficiently timely manner to eliminate any constraints on our study of the matter. However, we have done the best we can within the limits of time open to us.

This is an important matter because the use of the federal fiscal power to transfer money from the federal treasury to the provincial treasury is a well established feature of the Canadian federal state. Two of the main aspects of such a policy are those which involve equalization and the established programs financing arrangements.

The first great program of federal-provincial statesmanship arose, I believe, because of the response of the governments of Canada to the stresses and strains that were put upon provincial financing in the great depression of the 1930s. In those days, the powerless state of some of the weaker provinces was eloquently displayed in the growing disparities that could be observed between the standards of services that the provincial governments could offer their people and the burden of taxation that they were compelled to impose upon them. This widening gap between services and tax base as between provinces made it starkly clear that, in the national interest, the fiscal position of all of the provinces had to be made somewhat more nearly equal.

Every member of this chamber, of course, understands the long development of these events from which we derive the principle of equalization. That is the first great subject that is being tackled and effected by Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. Indeed, so essential has this concept of equalization become, for the present and for the future of our nation, that it is specifically referred to in the Constitution that we are about to receive in a few days, in which the federal government affirms its duty to assist the provinces so that Canadians, regardless of their province of residence, may enjoy reasonably equivalent provincial services on a reasonably equal basis of provincial taxation.

Thus the importance, in the first instance, of Bill C-97, which seeks to rework the basis upon which, over the next five years, the principles of equalization will apply to every province in the nation, whether it receives equalization payments or not.

I would like the members of this chamber to take note of the fact that equalization takes the form of a block grant. The spending of the equalization payment is entirely within the discretion and authority of the province receiving the grant. The federal government has never made any attempt to interfere with the way in which that money is spent, nor has it sought to control the direction of the expenditure of the funds in question. This has been so since the equalization payments began. There has never been any suggestion of federal interference or demand for accountability. I will refer to that principle later on in my remarks.

The essential feature of the equalization system, of course, depends upon the measuring rod that is selected, by which the provinces which are to receive equalization will be identified, and by which the equalization payments will be calculated. The Constitution is silent on this point and the federal government, I am sad to say, in the present instance has acted as if it had the sole right to decide on this measuring rod. I must be careful not to overstate the case, because there have been representations made in this respect recently and they have received favourable consideration. However, the Province of Saskatchewan, for example, has been complaining that, along with other provinces, it asked for negotiations to commence as long ago as December 1980, so that the new fiscal arrangements that were to be put in place this year could be decided upon. It was agreed by the federal government that a meeting would be held in March of 1981. The only trouble is, it was never held.

On other later occasions, in April of 1981 and in May of 1981, the provinces again asked for a meeting on the ministerial level. That is the point I want to make—officials can meet until they are blue in the face, but anyone who has any experience in these matters knows that, until the ministers meet, nothing is decided upon.

I repeat, the provinces asked for meetings again in April of 1981 and in May of 1981. Nothing happened until November of 1983, and perhaps that was deliberate. I do not know whether I should make such a charge, but it certainly had the effect, at any rate, of downplaying the negotiating feature of these matters. I bring this to the attention of the chamber because I would not like it to be thought that everyone is satisfied with the negotiating opportunities provided by the federal cabinet to the provinces in order to arrive at a suitable solution.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Did you not mean November of 1981?

Senator Roblin: What did I say?

Senator Frith: November of 1983.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for the correction. He is right, and I am rather flattered that he is listening so closely. I did mean to say November of 1981.

Bill C-97 does make a very significant change in the equalization measuring rod. I point out that, when this equalization feature was first introduced, the measuring rod was the average of the two highest provinces in the country. Some time ago that was reduced to the average of the ten provinces, based on certain provincial sources of revenue. This bill enlarges the definition of the provincial revenue base, and I have no objection to what it does in that respect. However, it also changes the measuring rod, as has been pointed out. It is no longer the average of the ten provinces but the average of five selected provinces—British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. This change from the average of all ten provinces to the average of five selected provinces has a significant effect because, as a result of it, equalization is going down now relative to what it would have been under the formula that was in effect up until the end of March.

It is perfectly true, as has been stated, that equalization payments will rise, in dollar terms, over the next five years, and heaven forbid that they should not do so. They will not, however, rise as much as they would rise if the old standard average of ten provinces were maintained. The estimates show that, over the next five-year period, equalization payments under the new formula will be $3.3 billion less than they would have been under the old formula. To that extent, the impact of equalization policy is being diluted.

It is all very well to talk about increases in the tax base and to bring in all these other forms of provincial and municipal taxation that were not in place before, but when one looks at the ultimate result of the reduced measuring rod applied to that tax base, one realizes that the equalization payments will be lower by a very substantial sum of money over the five-year period than they otherwise would have been.

Manitoba, my own province, is particularly affected by the new equalization measuring rod. The Department of Finance's figures show that the change in the formula hits Manitoba hard, harder than any other province receiving equalization. So marked is the effect of the new formula on the Province of Manitoba that the federal government has been compelled to recognize it, which is proof positive that the formula does not work very well, at least, as far as Manitoba is concerned. The government has recognized that extra transitional payments in certain years are necessary in order to introduce some improvement into the situation in Manitoba. I must say that I am glad that the federal government has taken this step, but even after the transitional payments to Manitoba—and I leave out Quebec because its transitional payment is of a lesser amount—have been taken into account along with the new formula in the five years to come, it still means that Manitoba receives a drastically smaller increase in its equalization payments than other provinces.

The equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces will rise by 81.85 per cent over the five-year period. The equalization payments to the Province of Quebec, which has been making a lot of noise on this subject, will rise by 66.1 per cent over the five-year period. Even after receiving $165 million in transitional grants, Manitoba's equalization payments will only rise by 37.2 per cent.

On what grounds of common sense, equity or justice can one explain these great differences? I am not here to maintain that each province receiving equalization payments should receive the same amount. That defeats the purpose of the whole operation, and we understand that. However, there must be a relative and comparative relationship between these various provinces that is just not fair, and, in my opinion, that is not the case with Manitoba.

When you come to the effect of the established programs financing on Manitoba, I think you will find that the situation is even worse. In my opinion, the Province of Manitoba is entitled to better terms in the interest of equity and fairness. Otherwise, either the services or the taxpayers, or both, in that province will feel the effect, in a negative and unpleasant way, of this new equalization policy which the Government of Canada has decided to bring into effect. All "have-not" provinces will suffer because of the new equalization formula, but Manitoba will suffer the most.

I started by dealing with the question of equalization as one of the two important subject matters contained in this bill. I now wish to refer to another system by which federal moneys are transferred to the provinces in order to bind the country together and to provide a standard of service that is reasonably equitable. That, of course, is the established programs financing, by which the federal government over time has developed its policy of supplementing provincial programs dealing with hospitalization, medical care, higher education and, indeed, an aspect of social welfare as well. These programs started out as highly conditional federal grants. Basically, they can be described as a system whereby Ottawa paid half of whatever the bill was in these particular sectors, particularly with respect to hospital and medical care. The arrangement with regard to education was slightly different.

The conditions which applied to hospital and medical care expenditures by the provinces were very close. However, in 1977 a change was made. These conditional grants were converted into block grants which meant that the federal conditions with regard to hospital and medical care were largely reduced or abandoned, although not entirely. There were still the four great underlying conditions about which there is little dispute these days. In any event, the detailed federal auditing of these expenditures was abandoned.

One of the reasons for this was that the federal government was becoming tired of paying 50 per cent. It became clear to them that they were being a little too venturesome in compelling the provinces to match their input into these programs. Under the original plan they, in effect, told the provinces, "You do it our way and pay 50 cents, because if you do not you get nothing." The government decided that this approach was a little too rich, so they decided to put a cap on it. One of the ways they put a cap on it—leaving the surplus, of course, to be handled by the provinces in one way or another—was by abandoning the conditional grants and bringing in the block grant system which, in effect, altered their responsibilities under the program. The provinces liked it because they felt that, as these programs were in their constitutional, if you want to look at it that way, should not be as intensive as it had been. So they brought in the block grants for what are called the established services financing arrangements.

Now, it appears that in this present statute there are some signs that the federal government intends to go back a little bit on the block grant system. In fact, they have issued what one province describes as an ultimatum that they are going to have some say in education, health and medical matters with respect to provincial expenditures, or they will use the federal money power to penalize those provinces which do not agree. One of the significant features of this bill is that the federal government takes unto itself the power to amend—not to cancel or do away with, but to amend, and "amend" covers a lot of ground—the established programs financing arrangements, if they so wish, without let or hindrance.

In the previous statutes and other statutes before this there was always some arrangement to guarantee to the provinces the federal position under certain timetables. This is missing entirely from this bill. So, we find that when, for example, the federal people say to the provinces with regard to education, "We want a bigger say in what goes on", they also intimate that they have the muscle to make their requirements stick—and perhaps they have. The federal government is signalling, I think, that it means business by this feature in Bill-97. This is a matter that should give us some concern. Even in an area like education, which is clearly in the provincial constitutional field, we may find that there is trouble.

Confrontation was the federal order of the day on the Constitution and confrontation was the federal order of the day on the energy bill, and we all know where that has taken us. It seems very likely to me that unless certain enthusiastic ministers are restrained, confrontation may prove to be the course which they now wish to follow with regard to education, health and welfare and the other services under the block grants. Ottawa seems to be seeking to increase its control while at the same time reducing its relative financial involvement. This is an unlikely proposition. However, if there is a reasonable aspect to it, then surely there must be a reasonable way of dealing with the problem, and we discussed this matter in committee.

It seemed to us that it would be useful if the Senate or somebody else could offer some suggestions as to how we could reconcile the provincial desire for its constitutional elbow room in the field and the federal desire to receive more recognition, or whatever else they are looking for, with respect to money they are putting out. The Economic Council of Canada made a number of recommendations. I find problems with their recommendations because they dodge the main issue, that being, how to get a more disinterested view of these matters than federal and provincial cabinet ministers are likely to provide. The suggestion that appeals to me is that we invoke the powers of the Parliament of Canada to function in this area, and that well before the next five-year period is up we have something like the parliamentary task force that looked into fiscal federalism, or a joint committee, to investigate these matters. Such a body could look into this question and establish the facts.

I could go into this business of the charges that the provinces have been ripping off the federal government in the spending of this money. They were not substantiated by anything that we heard in the committee.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Debunked.

Senator Roblin: "Debunked" is probably the word. Whatever it is, the necessity of getting some impartial view of the facts is an important consideration in reconciling federal and provincial desires in this matter. Surely we should stride towards that, and perhaps we should use the Economic Council of Canada as a tool by which this goal can be reached. I do not suggest these ideas as being the solution to the problem, but I am saying that we need a better system than we have now which seems to boil down to confrontation and unseemly disputes over matters of fact which should be established in an impartial and unbiased way. I suggest that is something that we ought to consider.

I should now like to turn to another aspect of the established programs financing, block grants, which is significantly affected by the provisions of Bill C-97. Compared to the former system, the federal contributions to established programs over the next five years—for instance, to education and health—will be substantially reduced. The new formula compared to the old formula yields a dividend to the federal administration of approximately $5.8 billion. In other words, that is the amount that they would have spent under the old system that they will not spend under the new system. When you add that to the $3.3 billion in equalization, you begin to get some big money. That is the effect of the new program for these established activities. The main reason why this is so in respect of the established programs stems from the elimination of that factor of the equation which has been called the revenue guarantee. That has been referred to in this debate already.

The revenue guarantee factor was introduced as a result of a genuine bargain—they did have genuine bargains in those days, I am happy to say—in 1972 when, in order to induce the provinces to agree to Mr. Benson's tax reforms arising from the Carter commission, which affected provincial revenues in a very large way, the revenue guarantee was brought in. In 1977 in order to get the provinces to agree to changes in a health program which was contractual, and to abandon the contract, it was again confirmed for that reason.

It seems to me that the provinces made a bargain about this revenue guarantee aspect of the matter, and they are entitled to have that bargain respected. It was a quid pro quo that was negotiated between the parties concerned and, in fact, has been imbedded as part of health and educational financing. It is inseparable from the hospital, medical and educational payments that are now made. The revenue guarantee was confirmed in 1977 and it ought to be confirmed today. Everybody has been saying to the Minister of Finance, "Don't do it; don't do it, Julie," but he did it anyway.

The Economic Council of Canada told him it was not a proper thing to do, that it was part of the grant structure and should be regarded as such. The task force of the House of Commons that looked into fiscal arrangements said the same thing. I have not heard of any other body except the federal government that thinks that this guarantee should be abandoned now.

Senator Frith: The Ides of March have passed.

Senator Roblin: Well, the Ides of March have passed but we know what is going to happen to big Julie. His Ides are coming and the only question is when.

Senator Smith: His hide is nearly off now.

Senator Roblin: Well, he was looking pretty spry today. I think he is a resilient character, but God knows he needs to be.

However, the elimination of this revenue guarantee saves the federal government $5 billion to $6 billion over the next five years. Yet in the committee today the minister—I do not know how to say this; I should not say "had the nerve" because he is not an impertinent man, and I would not say "had the gall" because he has intestinal fortitude, but perhaps I could say "had a warped view"—was able to tell us that they were not reducing the grants for health and education under this formula—

Senator Asselin: Shame!

Senator Roblin: —when clearly by every reasonable measure, they are reducing it by $5 billion or $6 billion compared to what it would have been had the other policy been maintained over the five-year period to come.

Senator Frith: He is reducing the rate of increase. That is all.

Senator Flynn: That is well put.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend opposite for the explanation that is precisely right. He is reducing, not the rate of increase, but reducing the increase in an absolute sense. It is not the rate that he is reducing because he has abandoned the old standard and he is bringing in a new one, and that is why it is going down. Therefore, any talk of rate of increase—well, it is the accepted word from the Minister of Finance, but I am afraid that writ does not run on this side of the house.

The effect of this policy is to shift part of the burden of the federal deficit on to the less fortunate provinces of the country. The consequence is that those provinces, especially in the "have not" provinces, are faced with the problem of either reducing the services or increasing the taxes, or both, and that is where we are landed with the bill that is before us now.

Regardless of however that may be, the immediate effect of Bill C-97, in the words of the Minister of Finance, is to effect significant savings for the federal government, and by golly, he certainly does that, because the net significant savings that he is talking about on both equalization and the established programs will amount to about $8 billion over the five-year period.

He is an intelligent man and he does not do this without a rationale of his own. There is a rationale that is invoked to justify this switch to reducing the relative level of federal support to the provinces for equalization and for the established programs. I think the rationale is decidedly unconvincing, but I intend to share it with the house this evening.

It is all being done in order to reverse, in the words of the Minister of Finance before the task force of the other place, the "fiscal imbalance" from which the minister alleges Ottawa suffers. As proof of the fiscal imbalance, he points to the large federal deficit and compares it to the surplus position of the provinces as a whole. Of course, there are some provinces that have surpluses—and pretty hefty ones too. Unfortunately, they are not among the "have-nots." Indeed, they do not even include the Province of Ontario. The other provinces, apart from the western three, all have very considerable deficits. In any case, in the words of the Economic Council of Canada, no evidence has been produced in this debate to prove that the transfer of grants to provinces has been a major contributing factor to federal deficits. The parliamentary task force on fiscal federalism reported, and I quote: "Federal grants as a percentage of total federal fiscal spending have been fairly constant since 1970." To quote again: "They grew at a slower rate in the 1970s than in the 1960s." To quote again: "There is, therefore, no ground to suggest that the federal transfers have been getting out of control."

The Economic Council of Canada says the same. They say that there is no meaningful evidence that the increase in the federal deficit in 1975-1980 is linked specifically to federal-provincial transfers. They ask a relevant question: What merit is there in reducing the relative transfers now merely to shift part of the burden of a declining federal deficit, according to the minister's estimate, to the less fortunate governments of this nation, because the federal deficit is programmed to decline no matter what you do with these provincial grants?

That is because there will be a huge increase in the next five years in the federal revenues from oil and gas. Even if the prices do not go up as much as some people have been estimating, there will still be an enormous accrual of money in the hands of the federal government to deal with their deficit problems if they want to. It makes the policy of the reduction of transfers to the provinces quite without justification, and flying in the face of any wisdom or fairness in saying that you are going to solve the federal deficit problems merely by transferring that problem to the provinces, and to needy provinces at that. That strikes me as being no solution at all.

Between 1978 and 1981—and here again, I want to deal with this allegation of the federal Minister of Finance that he is having a hard time—on the basis of the national accounts, which are the government's own figures, transfers to the provinces as a percentage of federal revenue have been going down—not up, but down. They have dropped from 28.4 per cent to 22 per cent. Look at it another way: Transfers to the provinces are a percentage of federal expenditures because revenue and expenditures do not meet these days, as we know. Excluding the public debt, because some people do not like them included when they make these comparisons, they have gone down, dropping from 25.5 per cent to 24.2 per cent. The federal share of government expenditures—that is, the federal share of federal, provincial and municipal expenditures after these provincial transfers—rose in the period from 1978 to 1981 from 40 per cent to 42.4 per cent, and that is the highest level they have reached since 1966.

• (2150)

So, if the federal treasurer is pleading financial imbalance, if he is pleading that giving these moneys to the provinces is upsetting the fiscal state of the nation, it certainly does not appear to be borne out by the facts that can be culled from the statistics of the government itself. The federal revenues over the period from 1981-82 to 1983-84, which is the current period, the budget figures, national accounts basis, show that the federal revenue after taxation is going to increase by 38.1 per cent. That is the revenue. The federal expenditures, after transfers and before interest on the debts calculated, will increase by 31.8 per cent, while the transfer payments to the provinces, both cash and tax points, will increase by 17.3 per cent. Where then is the argument that these grants are crippling the capacity of the federal government to do its fiscal job? They do not exist. They are imaginary.

I want to come back to the Manitoba situation, because that will complete what I have to say—and I thank honourable senators for their tolerance in hearing me for this length of time. I come now to the effect of the switch in equalization as a measuring rod. The effect of the switch in the established programs financing formula means that every province in the country is going to get less than it would have received had the old system prevailed—every province in the country. Remember, this is not equalization alone that I am talking about; it is equalization and the established programs. The one exception is the Province of Prince Edward Island, and I am happy for them, but every other province in the country will get less from federal transfers under Bill C-97 than they would have received had the old plan been in effect. And I have to report that my own province, Manitoba, is the one that is hardest hit, even after the $165 million that we have heard about.

In Manitoba, the total impact of Bill C-97 means that the average family will be worse off to the extent of $2,786 than if the old system had been in effect instead of the new one—the worst hit province in the country. Look at these astonishing facts. The Province of Alberta, which surely must be regarded as financially capable, loses only $1,335. Manitoba loses double that amount per family. Saskatchewan, another wealthy province not getting equalization but getting these other transfers, will suffer to the extent of $1,098. British Columbia, another "have" province, $551. Those three provinces, all in the have-not area, all suffer far less than the Province of Manitoba because of the impact of this new formula on equalization and of the changes in the established programs financing arrangements that are contained in this bill. That is not equitable, I do not care how you slice it. I do not care what fiscal capacities you refer to, those figures indicate to me that the situation is not equitable, it is unfair, and it ought to be changed.

The Province of Ontario is worse off to the tune of only $636, but when we compare that amount with the $2,786 in my own province, the worst hit in the nation, one can understand why men and women who represent that province in any capacity whatsoever have to bring this inequity to the attention of those who can do something about it. I say to this house that we should not allow this to go unremarked or unimproved.

The federal government has recognized that there is an inequity here because it has given a fiscal transfer equivalent to $165 million; but it is obvious from the figures I have quoted, which I believe are correct, that it does not recognize the seriousness of the situation facing my own province. In placing these figures before the house, I am coming to my conclusion. Manitoba is the worst case, and something should be done about it. Under the new program, the federal administration will save, on a national basis, some $7 billion to $8 billion compared to what it would have spent had the old formula been in effect. The federal revenues for oil and gas will amount to an addition of billions of dollars to the revenues of the federal government, and the restraint on the part of the federal government, about which we hear so much talk these days, is restraint that is being exercised on the backs of the other levels of government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I have given honourable senators the figures for the increase in the revenue, and the increase in expenditures involved in these transfer payments for the next two years, which are more than double. So the provincial services and the provincial taxpayers are those who will be contributing some $7.7 billion, or thereabouts, to help the federal government deal with its budget deficit, even though it has its extra revenues from oil and even though obviously it has recognized restraint more in the breach than in the observance.

If ever there was a bill on which second thoughts were called for, I consider this is it. The federal government should reconsider its plan to implement a relative reduction in the transfer to the provinces, a relative reduction in equalization payments and the support payments for hospital and medical care and education. While I am reluctant to be considered a special pleader, I would much rather that the difficulties of the province of Manitoba were dealt with by means of a formula that applied to all provinces, without exception. That is by far the most honourable and satisfactory situation for any province to find itself in. Yet when I think of the difficulties that this new formula is imposing on that province, that by making this transitional payment the federal government has already recognized the fact that it is not fair, it would be remiss of me if I did not say that if we cannot change this formula, if we have to persist with it, then the transitional payments for the province of Manitoba ought to be substantially increased. It would be more consistent with the letter and spirit of the obligations which the federal government has accepted for itself were it to make itself responsible for that clause in the new Constitution of our country which had to do with equalization and fair treatment for Canadians everywhere.

So if the federal government must persist in this matter, then my appeal is for fairness, a reconsideration of the special problems of the province of Manitoba. Indeed, I would like to see a reconsideration of the whole thrust of reducing federal expenditures in a relative sense at a time when federal revenues are so buoyant and are rising, when compared to the transfer payments. When we get a 38 per cent increase in revenues, a 31 per cent increase in expenditures and only a 17 per cent increase in transfer payments in the two-year period that I have mentioned, obviously there is food for thought, and obviously there is room for more generosity to the provinces. That is my appeal, and I believe this body, as a revising chamber, as a chamber of sober second thought, could do the country a service if it made that point perfectly clear to the cabinet and to the federal administration.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

INFLATION—UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the super-minister.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): There are three of us.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I thought there were four.

Senator Flynn: According to Maclean's there is only one, and he is the Minister of State for Economic Development. I do not expect a straight answer, but I just want to test all the qualities that have been described in this article.

The honourable the minister has of late spoken frequently about job creation programs, mega-projects, and like matters.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: I am pleased to have the approval of the Leader of the Government in this respect, because it is an encouragement to continue with my question. I was wondering how the honourable the minister can reconcile all these efforts of the government with regard to job creation programs with the general policy of the government with regard to fighting inflation, which is a job-destroying policy.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the answer to that question is very easy. If my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition had listened carefully to some of the comments I have made in this chamber from time to time he would understand that the rate of inflation, along with the interest charges for new capital investment, and all other economic matters related to that problem that would make Canada uncompetitive, or less competitive, in the international market, is something that any responsible government—and particularly this government—must address itself to, because quite obviously there has been a sharper downturn in the whole international market than was forecast last fall.

What we have to be concerned with, however, is productivity and management's attitude toward what is expected from productivity, and, indeed, other sectors of the economy as well. We have to realize that unless we are able to win, to some degree, the fight against inflation, so that confidence in investment today and in the future is built up, then Canada may not be able to move up as rapidly as some other parts of the world when the international economy does turn around. We have, I think, still some justifiable hope that there will be an increase in economic activity some time after the second quarter of 1982, and I think it is our responsibility to make sure that we remain competitive, and perhaps even improve our competitive position, so that we can maximize the benefit we obtain from it.

● (1405)

Senator Flynn: Am I to understand that the jobs created as a result of the initiative of the government will meet the objective of productivity better than would the jobs lost due to the fiscal and monetary policies of the government?

Senator Olson: That is, of course, one of those questions based on the wrong premise. The fiscal and monetary policies of the government are not the cause of a lot of unemployment, as was implied by my honourable friend.

Senator Flynn: They are not?

Senator Olson: If we had not made the effort to keep Canada competitive, by means of both the monetary and the fiscal policies that are well-known to my honourable friend, the situation would probably be worse than it is. Indeed, the prospects would not be as bright as they are for Canada.

Senator Flynn: Does the minister really suggest that the government's policy of fighting inflation, the way it is proceeding, has nothing to do with the increase in unemployment and the disappearance of thousands of jobs in Canada? After all, this is the risk that the Governor of the Bank of Canada says we should take.

Senator Olson: I can answer my friend directly. I did not say that. I said that, on balance, we have to act responsibly both on the fiscal and on the monetary side. Otherwise we will not remain a country receiving so much benefit from open, free trade in the world; Canada will be left out in that regard because of the competitive factor. My honourable friend knows that as well as I do. I could repeat it to him with, perhaps, some more good examples, if he would like.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The honourable minister has mentioned private investment. How does he explain the complete avalanche of Canadian dollars which are being invested, in absolutely record numbers, in other countries, if it is not because of a lack of confidence in the anti-business and economically illiterate policies of this government?

Senator Flynn: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators will realize that a question based on that kind of argument—

Senator Murray: Based on fact!

Senator Olson: No, that is not fact; that is an opinion. Even my honourable friend will realize that opinion and fact—especially on that side of the house—are not synonymous.

Senator Flynn: What about your side?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend makes the kind of comment which, of course, demonstrates the irresponsibility with which the opposition addresses itself to any economic question. My honourable friend uses terms as extreme as “avalanche” and so forth. He will also realize that there has been massive investment—not only by Canadians but by a whole lot of international and multinational investors—in this country.

We have, I think, demonstrated that that investment has been useful to this country. However, we must also face the fact that, if we are going to carry on an anti-inflation battle, which I think we must, as a responsible government, there will be some disturbances or turbulence in the pattern of investment that has developed in Canada over the past few years and which was predicated on an inflation rate that is no longer sustainable.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I must ask my honourable friend whether he is seriously suggesting to this chamber that there is not a problem concerning the flight of capital from Canada. Is he serious in his effort to gloss over the statement made by my colleague to the effect that this is a critical situation? He knows as well as I do that in 1981 there was a direct “disinvestment” of foreigners in Canada—in spite of the recent statement of my honourable friend—of $5.3 billion. When that amount is added to the direct investments of Canadians abroad, to which my honourable friend refers, it is possible to see that there was a net drain of capital from this country last year of $10.2 billion.

Senator Murray: Shame!

Senator Roblin: That is five times the usual balance in this respect over the past 10-year period. I regret that my honourable friend appears to be so complacent about what has to be a serious situation.

If my friend wants further reference in this matter, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, in his annual report to the Canadian people, underlined in spades the problem with the flight of capital and the effect that that is having on the Canadian dollar and, as a consequence, the effect it is having on the price of money in Canada and the interest rates we are complaining about. My honourable friend's policies in connection with capital investment in Canada are responsible for these serious matters.

● (1410)

Senator Olson: That is just another dissertation or assertion with respect to the selected statistics my honourable friend tries to bring out.

In answering a question a few days ago I gave him the balance. That is where you look at the other side, showing the amount of total investment in this country. But, of course, my friend, following the normal pattern, makes only those selections that are most suitable to his argument of doom and gloom. That is normal and traditional for the opposition, and particularly for the Conservative opposition.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Answer the question.

Senator Olson: I will take those figures, if you will provide me with their source, and give the right balance to them so that we can have the other side of the picture as well. But none of that takes away from the argument I made a few minutes ago that, if we are to have the ongoing, bright future for which Canada has the potential in terms of both human resources and natural resources, and the potential for economic growth and market demand in the international field for what we can produce and fabricate, I believe we are on the right course now—a responsible course.

I can also tell my honourable friend that I have attended about six meetings with senior businessmen, chief executive officers and others, from almost one end of this country to the other—and there is one meeting in Halifax still before us, I believe. Without exception, they have come to the conclusion that, when they talk about macro-economic policy, the government is indeed on the right track.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend expatiates on the prospects of the nation. On that point I certainly agree with him, if there is anything left of our prospects after the country recovers from the fiscal and economic mismanagement for which my honourable friend is responsible. He says he is talking to people all over Canada and that they approve of what he is doing. Well, he certainly does not talk to the people who are making their views known in other quarters these days. When did he last talk to the labour unions? When did he last talk to small business? When did he last talk to the people who are losing their homes and their houses?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: It is all very well to talk about macro-economics and what big business thinks, but what about the people who are suffering?

If we have to suffer, and perhaps we do, at least we ought to give the people who are carrying the burden some credit, instead of trying to gloss over the matter.

My honourable friend asks me for the source of my figures. I say to him: Check the report of the Bank of Canada for 1981. He will find them in there, and if he has not read them, it is time that he did.

Senator Olson: I read them very carefully, but I did not select the statistics that my honourable friend did.

Senator Flynn: No, you selected something else.

Senator Olson: There is a better balance to it than he is suggesting. He is doing what I said before, and I don't need to repeat myself. I have a more balanced outlook on what is happening there.

Despite all this artificial blowing that goes on, I have not heard any suggestion from my honourable friends opposite as to how they would manage the macro-economic, fiscal and monetary policy of this country.

Senator Asselin: You are the boss. Are you asking us for solutions? You are the one who said you had the solutions. You are the boss.

Senator Perrault: Don't get so excited.

Senator Asselin: It is up to you.

Senator Olson: My friends opposite take the same old attitude. They oppose everything, propose nothing and spend the rest of their time just babbling away.

Hon. G. I. Smith: That kind of answer is the refuge of any minister who does not dare to answer questions.

● (1415)

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development with regard to the GATT negotiations between Canada and the United States which have broken down within the past few weeks. The minister will be aware that the United States government was complaining about certain Canadian policies as being unduly nationalistic, narrow-minded, parochial, inward-looking and illiberal. Would the minister bring us a statement as to the issues on which the negotiations foundered, and what Canada's position is in the broader hearings on Canada's trade and investment policies currently under way within the GATT organization?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I suspect that rather than attributing those adjectives used by the honourable senator to the Government of the United States, he ought to attribute them to his own imagination. However, there have been some discussions because of the lack of agreement, and I believe there has been a reference to GATT. I shall obtain some information on that matter and provide it to my honourable friend.

Senator Murray: I thank the minister for that answer. I would simply tell him for his information that when I and a number of other senators were in Washington some months ago with the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, we heard every one of those adjectives, and others that I would not care to repeat in such polite company, applied to the policies of this government.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Well, of course, if the Americans don't like it, then it must be wrong.

[Senator Olson.]

NEWFOUNDLAND

OFFSHORE JURISDICTION—RE-ELECTION OF CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT—EFFECT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate dealing with the election in Newfoundland. Yesterday, the people of Newfoundland resoundingly endorsed the policies of Premier Peckford, particularly as they apply to offshore jurisdiction.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): So say you all.

Senator Doody: Last evening in very conciliatory comments after the election, Premier Peckford graciously asked the Government of Canada to come forward again and resume the negotiations on this subject. Are the comments to the contrary made by the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last evening the definitive position of the Government of Canada, or will they at least come half way in meeting the reasonable proposals of Premier Peckford?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, last night the minister, in what I understand was an informal statement, expressed the position of the federal government, reminding us that the same Conservative government is in place in Newfoundland as was in place before the election.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: It's informal all right.

Senator Perrault: And the Honourable Marc Lalonde stated the federal position with respect to offshore resources, citing the agreement with Nova Scotia as an encouraging model. At all times, the government stands ready to discuss matters of national and provincial interest with provincial governments. I will reiterate, however, what the minister said in the course of his statement, that some of the oratory by Mr. Peckford during the campaign did not accurately reflect the position of the federal government.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He was not speaking on your behalf.

Senator Perrault: It seems to many Canadians rather unfortunate, particularly at a time when it is of great importance to the unity of this country, to have any Canadian, any provincial spokesman—

Senator Donahoe: Or federal spokesman.

Senator Perrault: —speaking in tones of shrill, divisive demagoguery.

Senator Flynn: How can you say that in light of the 1980 federal campaign?

Senator Doody: The Leader of the Government can insult one of the premiers of Canada as much as he wants to in the sanctity of this house, and there is very little I can do about it. However, some 62 per cent of the population of Newfoundland endorsed Premier Peckford last evening. If the honourable gentlemen opposite had anything close to that kind of endorsement in Canada, I shudder to think how arrogant and overbearing they would be. I simply and politely asked the Leader of the Government if the Government of Canada will consider sitting down, at the invitation of Premier Peckford, and discussing in a sensible fashion the offshore situation. I did not invite a hail of insults on the premier about raillery, demagoguery and that sort of nonsense. The people of Newfoundland have had enough of that, and they answered it last night. I am asking now for a reasonable and conciliatory approach to the problem.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made a statement last night, and that statement stands. I shall take the question as notice.

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is a better answer.

Senator Perrault: But, again, it is the view of the federal government that some of the speeches made by Premier Peckford during the course of the campaign did not accurately reflect the federal position with respect to offshore resources. I think it is to be regretted that that was the case. It is simply a matter of fact.

● (1420)

As a purely personal assessment, I have expressed my concern about the quality and nature of certain of the statements concerning the federal government made recently by the Leader of the Conservative Party in Newfoundland. However, the federal government is certainly willing, at any time, to discuss with the premiers constructive initiatives.

Senator Doody: Can I take it, then, that the answer is that the Government of Canada is willing to sit down at the table and discuss offshore jurisdiction and the other problems that Premier Peckford has put forward?

The people of the province of Newfoundland have resoundingly made known their position. Last evening the Premier of Newfoundland put forward an invitation to the Government of Canada. The Honourable Marc Lalonde, perhaps in the heat of the moment, was a little embarrassed seeing the results of his efforts over the past few years being answered by the people of Newfoundland. Their answer to the provincial Liberal Party, which was financed by the national Liberal Party, was rather decisive.

Hon. Lowell Murray: It cost $500,000.

Senator Doody: $500,000 of federal Liberal Party funds went down the drain; the Leader of the Liberal Party has gone down the drain; and the New Democratic Party has been reduced to three per cent of the popular vote.

An Hon. Senator: Question!

Senator Doody: The question has been asked on several occasions, and I will ask it once again now: Is the policy of the Government of Canada one of conciliation and negotiation—

Senator Frith: It always has been.

Senator Doody: —or is it the one put forward last evening by the Honourable Marc Lalonde?

Senator Perrault: Recent events in some Canadian provinces have demonstrated, beyond a doubt, that Ottawa-bashing, fed-bashing and national government-bashing, is no route by which to achieve useful accords and agreements.

Senator Frith: But it is good for winning elections.

Senator Perrault: There is no future for this country and its unity if we are to suffer the continuing provincial political tactic of singling out Ottawa as the main provincial campaign opponent rather than to deal with provincial issues and the other provincial parties. In addition to Newfoundland, this process is under way in certain other provinces at this time.

Senator Flynn: Name them.

Senator Perrault: I am not going to particularize, but in some cases there appears to be a cynical attempt, by certain provincial politicians, to consolidate their political positions at the expense of national unity; and that is not to their credit.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: If Premier Peckford has some constructive ideas with respect to helping Canada and his own province, of course, the federal government is at all times willing to discuss those ideas with him.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, that is a very pleasant change. It is encouraging, indeed, to hear the Leader of the Government in the Senate repudiate the position of the Honourable Marc Lalonde. I take it that the federal government is willing to sit down and negotiate at any time, and that is indeed encouraging.

In the past, a couple of misconceptions have been put forward by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. He has stated that one of the problems arises from provincial governments Ottawa-bashing. It is time the honourable minister and his colleagues realized that what these particular provinces are doing is not Ottawa-bashing; they are federal Liberal government-bashing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: They are fed up with the kind of treatment they have been getting from the federal Liberal government, not with Ottawa. There are a great many people across this country, from coast to coast, who have every bit as much respect, and perhaps more respect than the honourable minister has, for Ottawa, the nation's capital and the people who live here. The provincial governments are bashing the Liberal policies of the Government of Canada.

Sixty-two per cent of the population of Newfoundland have put forth their position. I am pleased, indeed, to hear that the government is willing to sit down and talk with these people.

Senator Perrault: In view of the honourable senator's Question Period oratory, I am inclined to move the adjournment of the "debate."

● (1425)

Senator Doody: The honourable minister can move the adjournment of the debate, and we will ring the bells.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

NOVA SCOTIA

BAY OF FUNDY—TIDAL POWER—EXPORT PERMITS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Economic Development. I would hope that since his exchange with Senator Murray and Senator Roblin his blood pressure has subsided and he is in a cool, calm and collected mood.

This question has no superficiality or selectivity attached to it, such as the minister has attributed to the questions raised by Senator Murray and Senator Roblin. I do not think there was any superficiality or selectivity attached to those questions either.

The report of the Nova Scotia tidal task force demonstrates that tidal power is both economically viable and financially feasible.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That sounds like a Social Credit statement.

Senator Muir: Premier Buchanan has indicated that he will seek early approval for export permits for Fundy power.

Recognizing the boost that this project would give to Nova Scotia's economy, can the honourable minister indicate whether the federal government will act in an expeditious manner with respect to approval of these export permits?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I am not quite sure what the honourable senator is asking for when he uses the word "expeditious" in his question. When we receive a request from Premier Buchanan, we shall deal with it in a careful and serious manner.

I can say that my blood pressure and temperature are exactly the same now as they were when I replied earlier to Senator Murray and Senator Roblin.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He has ice water in his veins.

Senator Flynn: He's a cold fish.

Senator Muir: I am pleased to know that the honourable gentleman's health is so good, and I hope that it remains that way for a long time to come. Perhaps there is the odd occasion when he requires diazepam or, to use the trade name, valium, because he was in a bad state earlier this afternoon, especially when Senator Roblin asked him whether he had met with officials from the unions of this country and others, a meeting which I fully approve.

Senator Olson: The temperature is going up, but not on this side of the house.

Senator Muir: I thank the honourable gentleman for his kind response. I believe that he will do what he can.

[Senator Perrault.]

Assuming he has in the back of his mind that nothing can be done on this by the government, but only by the National Energy Board, may I recall to his attention—in the event that he brings back a reply to the Senate indicating that the National Energy Board makes these decisions—that on page 10 of the 1980 budget—after the National Energy Board had initially rejected an application by the TQ&M pipeline—the government stated that, as a matter of priority, the pipeline would be extended to the maritimes.

Is the minister and the government prepared to make a similar prior commitment to expedite export permits for Fundy power, hence making the project possible?

The minister may be thinking that I am stepping ahead of him, but I should like him to keep in the back of his mind the fact that the government can expedite these matters when it wishes to, and it has done so.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have anything to add to what I have already stated. When we receive that request from the premier, we shall give it careful and serious consideration.

My honourable friend knows that this government meticulously abides by the law. He probably also knows that there are certain requirements that have been put on the government and the whole federal system with respect to laws that have been passed by this house and the other house respecting applications for export permits.

Senator Muir: I have a further supplementary question to ask. In any event, may I ask the honourable gentleman whether it would be appropriate for me to look forward to an encouraging reply regarding this matter?

● (1430)

Senator Olson: You can be certain that this government will respond to the best economic benefit of that and other parts of Canada whenever it has an opportunity to do so.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

TQ&M PIPELINE—COMPLETION DATE

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development arising out of his reply by way of a delayed answer to me last evening concerning the completion date of the TQ&M pipeline. However, I find myself in the unusual circumstance of having to ask him to assist me in asking the question, for the very good reason that the answer he gave last evening is contained in yesterday's Hansard. I am informed that Hansard is not yet available and, therefore, I cannot quote exactly what he said. I must acknowledge that I was offered an opportunity last evening to ask any questions I wished to ask about it, but I did not then have before me the references to the estimated date of completion which I thought, and have now confirmed, varied substantially from the estimate given last evening. Perhaps the honourable gentleman would be kind enough to indicate what his response was last evening, and I will then be able to proceed with my question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not have a copy of that reply in front of me either, but, as I recall, it was indicated that construction in New Brunswick would begin in May 1983, and in Nova Scotia in January 1985, with a target for all of it to be completed in 1986.

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman because that coincides with my memory of what he said. The references which I did not have before me last evening, but which I now have before me, indicate a somewhat different and earlier date than my friend indicated.

In particular, in Hansard for November 18, 1980 the Deputy Leader of the Government, when giving a delayed answer to a question asked on October 30 of that year by Senator Donahoe, said, in part:

—if a positive board decision is reached—

Meaning the National Energy Board.

—by spring of 1981, the pipeline could be delivering gas to Halifax by late 1983 and to Cape Breton Island by 1984.

Further, in the document setting out the National Energy Program, at page 58, it is indicated that the objective is to make gas available in the maritimes in 1983, and that is also set out at page 82 of the same document, with the target of having gas available to maritime consumers by 1983.

My question to the honourable gentleman is: What is the reason for the obviously much later target date, as indicated in his answer of last evening, compared to what I have just noted?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall take that question as notice and try to get a more detailed answer, but Senator Smith is correct that there has been some postponement of completion and, indeed, in some cases, starting dates, but I will try to get the best reasons I can for it.

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman. I am reminded of the hope expressed, I believe, by the Deputy Leader of the Government last evening, about future sittings of the Senate, and I am wondering if I could hope to have those reasons before the date indicated by the deputy leader as a possible date of resumption.

Senator Olson: I will give an undertaking to try to get that answer.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

WORK-SHARING PROGRAMS

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the distinguished Minister of State for Economic Development. Would he confirm that Employment Canada officials concluded two years ago, after a work-sharing program comparable to the current one was put in place, that:

There is insufficient evidence . . . that the benefits of a full-scale program would be sufficient to warrant the additional cost—

● (1435)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes, I can look into it. It would be helpful if my honourable friend would give me the date of the quote and its source. He should not overlook the ingenuity with which this government attempts to maximize the use of these kinds of programs, and we may now be able to do it better as a result of some study and the application of the ingenuity that I have mentioned.

Senator Muir: I agree with the minister. It is quite true that we learn by doing and repeating and getting a little better as we go along. However, in certain cases sometimes that does not happen.

I should explain that I was quoting from an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 7, 1982, which many regard as the great bible of Canada, although I do not fully agree with that.

I have a supplementary question for the minister. It has recently been estimated within the government that the current program would cost up to twice what the unemployment insurance benefits would be if work-sharing were not used to prevent lay-offs. Would the minister obtain from the Department of Employment and Immigration any calculations it has made on the relative costs of the work-sharing program and the paying of unemployment benefits?

Senator Olson: We will check that out.

SASKATCHEWAN

PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to remind honourable senators of the presence in the chamber of Senator Argue. Speaking of Ottawa-bashing, and in view of the election called by Mr. Blakeney in Saskatchewan to express opposition to the position of the present federal government on the Crowsnest rate, I wonder what the minister is going to do about that. Is he going to enter the campaign? If so, on which side will he be—on the side of Mr. Goodale or on the side of Mr. Blakeney?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I have already entered the campaign, and I hope to continue to participate in it. The election campaign in Saskatchewan, as has often happened in the past, is being fought on an issue which is beyond the constitutional jurisdiction of the province and the government involved, and when a government is in rough shape and has important issues to defend, that is probably the only way one can go.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You are fighting against your former party.

Senator Flynn: Will your participation have any effect?

Senator Argue: Which way?

ENERGY

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM —COMPLAINTS OF CANADIAN PRODUCERS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to respond to a question raised on March 17 by Senator Roblin concerning the oil import compensation program. On April 1 my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, announced a series of measures designed to improve markets for, and to increase the production of, western Canadian light and heavy crude oils.

I would like to give the highlights of those measures, but no doubt the honourable senator can assist me because he may already have this information. If he has, that is fine, but to complete my reply I should perhaps place a summary of the highlights on the record so that those who read the record and who may be looking for the answers will find them there. I can then supply further details for the benefit of my honourable friend.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If my honourable friend is referring to the Honourable Marc Lalonde's statement of April 1, then, of course, I have it. I must leave to the minister what he wishes to read into the record.

Senator Olson: That helps me a great deal. I will be brief.

The measures that were announced include, first, an assurance that Canadian heavy oil exports to the United States will continue to be competitively priced by adjusting the export charge as required. Secondly, applications to the NEB for the export of heavy crude oil for terms of up to one year will be welcome. The policy remains to export crude oil that is surplus to domestic needs. Also, exchange of light and heavy western Canadian crude oil via the United States into eastern Canada, without export charge, will be considered by the NEB.

The board will review its own system for allocating light oil into eastern Canada and consider separate treatment of crude oils that are chronically shut-in such as light Saskatchewan sour crude. The National Energy Board will also evaluate whether chronically shut-in crude oil could be considered surplus to domestic needs and be exported.

May I add that we anticipate some improvement in the market for heavy oil to develop in the third quarter of 1982 and become more marked in 1983. I will not give the reasons for that here, but there are a number of reasons related to maintenance, and, indeed, some inventory that is built up for this time, and for about two or three months to come, namely, April, May and June.

With regard to the honourable senator's second question, eastern Canadian refiners may have more offshore crude than required in 1982, but they want to honour offshore purchase contracts undertaken when Alberta crude deliveries were restricted in 1981. I understand that the refiners also want to protect future purchase positions to supply our own requirements in the event of an international crisis occurring before Canada achieves oil self-sufficiency.

I should also point out that the minister has also asked the eastern refiners to minimize the amount that they would be taking under the contracts that were entered into when there was a partial shutdown of the flow of oil from western Canada.

Senator Roblin: I would ask the minister to elaborate a little further on his answer, because he knows just as well as I do that the program proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has not received a very warm reception from the oil industry in western Canada. It is estimated that in spite of what he has done 25 per cent of the conventional oil of Canada is now shut in.

How can the minister explain to the people of Canada that they are being taxed on heating oil and gas, and taxed on their fuel requirements, in order to support this subsidy that is going to foreigners outside the country because some refiners in Canada are able to buy on the spot market as opposed to the OPEC market? How can we justify this idiotic situation, in the light of our foreign exchange problem, and the problem of high taxation and inflation in the country, when we are continuing to persevere with a system of oil compensation and of market allocations, which gives the worst of all possible worlds, instead of taking advantage of market flexibility and cheaper supplies?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is expressing an opinion, and I, as usual, will stick to the facts.

The facts are that some alternative arrangements had to be made when there was a restriction in the supply of oil flowing from western Canada. That is not something that this government created; it was created and initiated by some of the western provinces. I am sure my honourable friend understands that we have to honour those contracts, because certainly neither he nor anyone else was expecting refineries to go without oil during that period. They did, in fact—and this is acknowledged—enter into contracts that have not yet spun themselves out. The Minister of Energy has asked those refiners to minimize the take of offshore oil within those contractual arrangements.

There is an over-emphasis in the opinion expressed by my honourable friend with respect to the effects that spot oil purchases have had on this. I am not saying that there is no effect, but my honourable friend is not in tune even with the industry. This has been a major contributor to this situation.

One other thing that he knows, and knows very well, is that at this time of the year there is a build-up of inventory of all types, so that the largest number of refineries at any time of the year rely on those inventories so that they can do maintenance while they change over to a different product—such as changing from heating oil and a higher level of diesel fuel to gasoline—that will come out after they have made the changeover.

There is always a downturn at this time of the year, not so much in the supply going into the tanks, but in the actual amount that goes through the refining process. That is why I suggested that it will probably be some time after the second quarter of 1982 before there is an upturn. We have given an indication that we expect this to improve the percentage of oil taken from Canadian supplies.

There is another statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and that is this, that if the admonition, if you like, given to the refineries to try to make this adjustment is not effective, or not sufficiently effective, he is prepared to take other measures, which would include an adjustment to make it even more attractive to take Canadian-produced crude.

Senator Roblin: I really do not think the house can be expected to accept the excuses offered by the minister.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): They are not excuses; they are facts.

Senator Roblin: He says that I do not know the facts, and that I am expressing opinions. Well, I do not pull them out of thin air. The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is the source of the estimate, and it is widely supported by the industry. Ask the people in the industry who are concerned about cash flow, already slashed by the NEP policies that my honourable friend is responsible for, and what is happening to it now, with 25 per cent of their productive capacity being effectively shut out of the market because of these policies the government is operating.

Senator Olson: What about the interruption of the oil flow that occurred last summer? That has to be taken into account, too.

Senator Roblin: Certainly, let us take that into account, but that is not the sole or major factor.

Senator Olson: You are just giving an opinion, and I disagree with your opinion.

Senator Roblin: All right. If my honourable friend is going to try to hang it on that, he is going to hang it on a very insubstantial excuse indeed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, sometimes you have to learn that you have to live with the consequences of what you do.

Senator Roblin: We are learning that all right. We have got to live with the consequences of electing this government, and we have to live with the consequences of the National Energy Program. You can find very few people in this country today who will call that an unqualified success.

My honourable friend complains to me that this is the time of year when refineries shut down, and we knew about it all the time.

Senator Olson: It happens every year.

Senator Roblin: Certainly, and my honourable friend knows that, and if he knows it, why did he not take it into account when he was setting up his policy with respect to the import of oil to adjust to this? Does he want to tell us that because the refineries are closed down the Canadian refineries should shut down to suit, but that imports should not? That is the policy he has been suggesting to us.

Senator Olson: It is not.

Senator Roblin: Well, that is the effect of this policy.

Senator Olson: No, it is not.

Senator Roblin: Well, that is the conclusion that one can reasonably draw from the very weak excuses that my honourable friend is putting forward.

The fact is that the government's response to this problem is inadequate, and I want my honourable friend to do something about it.

Senator Olson: That is not a fact at all, honourable senators. That is an opinion. I think the responsibility of the national government in this country is to make sure that there are adequate supplies of crude oil for all purposes in all parts of the country all the time. If the producing provinces chose to apply leverage—and they did it for whatever purpose they had in mind—they have to live with the consequences of making those decisions, and, you know, sometimes it takes a few months, or even longer, for all of that to spin out. This government has acted in a responsible way, attempting more than once to persuade the producing provinces not to upset the flow of oil that goes into this.

This principle does not only apply to oil. I have been in business long enough to know that when you shut off either your customers or your sources of supply you usually have a whole lot of problems for much longer than you anticipated.

There are some particular factors in the oil business. I am referring to the cracking process, and various other processes that are usually set up for a certain grade and quality of crude. If that has to be changed, it takes more time than my honourable friend is willing to admit in order to get it back into the flow, and, indeed, the distribution of the product mix that comes out at the other side. That is not so easy.

My honourable friend also knows that if you shut off 180,000 barrels of sweet crude oil per day and substitute for it some other types of oil, for example, that produce a high percentage of some other product, and you have to find a home for that that you did not have in your marketing pattern before, it takes a little more time. You cannot just throw it away; you have to dispose of it.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend keeps on blaming the shut-off in Alberta—and I, for one, am quite willing to agree with him that this is a factor in the equation. I do not dispute that. I tell him, however, that the estimate is that the shut-in quantity will exceed 300,000 barrels, which is far in excess of the shut-off that my honourable friend refers to. He talks about the dislocations that will result if you shut off the supply. How right he is. The dislocations that will result from the present shut-off of the supply of one-quarter of our conventional crude in Alberta are something that will take a long time for that part of the country to recover from. It defeats the whole purpose of national self-sufficiency that my honourable friends have enshrined as the goal of their policy. They will talk about it, but I predict that they will never, never make it within the time limits they have prescribed.

● (1450)

Senator Olson: That is another opinion, but it is not necessarily a factual one.

Senator Roblin: Yes, it is an opinion, and a good one.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—PREVENTION OF RIGHT WING COUP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Stollery on March 31 concerning the prevention of a possible right wing coup in El Salvador.

The answer I have is as follows: It is not Canada's role to tell the Salvadorans how to form their government. Democratic elections have been held in El Salvador and it is up to the Salvadorans to form a government of their choice.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in public statements, have made clear Canada's concerns about the continuation of the reform process in El Salvador. It should be clear to any Salvadoran government that Canada will only support it if it continues to implement such policies.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—CANADA-FRANCE MARITIME BOUNDARY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Marshall on March 31 dealing with the visit to Canada of President Mitterrand.

The information I have is as follows: During the meeting to be held with Premier Mauroy of France, many bilateral issues will be discussed. However, the purpose of the meeting with President Mitterrand is not to discuss bilateral issues, but is solely to discuss the issues of the upcoming summit.

President Mitterrand has been meeting his colleagues one by one to discuss these issues. In this context, President Mitterrand has already met with his European colleagues, has visited Washington, and is meeting the Prime Minister on his way back from Japan.

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, some information has come to me with respect to the Falkland Islands invasion. This may be of particular interest to Honourable Senator Asselin, who, yesterday, was speaking about sanctions and restrictions.

In addition to condemning the unjustifiable Argentine occupation of the Falkland dependencies on April 5, the government announced several measures, including the recalling of the Canadian ambassador from Buenos Aires and an embargo on exports of military material to Argentina. The government has ordered a complete review of Canada's relations with Argentina. It would be inappropriate at this time for me to speculate on any additional measures that the government might undertake.

Although there have been rumours of Soviet submarines in the area of the Falkland Islands, we have no evidence which would substantiate this report. We are, of course, following the overall development of the Falkland Islands crisis very closely.

With regard to the safety of Canadians who are living in Argentina, I have this information. There are approximately 1,000 Canadians living in Argentina who are registered with our embassy in Buenos Aires. We are following the situation closely with a view to assisting Canadians there, should a need arise. We are not discouraging travel at this time.

We are, as I stated yesterday, aware of the presence of nine Canadians on the Falkland Islands. We have asked Argentina to take all necessary measures to ensure their safety and to facilitate the departure of any Canadians who wish to leave.

This morning, the Argentine chargé d'affaires, in responding to our earlier requests, informed us that his authorities were prepared to co-operate with Canada in providing assistance to Canadians who wish to leave. Our embassy is now in the process of advising Canadians to consider leaving if they have no compelling reasons to remain.

In his call this morning, the chargé told us that all residents of the Falkland Islands may leave whenever they wish, and that the Argentine authorities will facilitate their transport and will eventually compensate them for any damage sustained in hostilities.

There is a tenth Canadian, who is a member of a British scientific team, working on South Georgia Island. According to his father in Montreal, the British authorities are trying to arrange for the team to be picked up by a British research vessel in the area.

THE CONSTITUTION

PROCLAMATION CEREMONY—SEATING IN SENATE CHAMBER

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday, April 6, a question was asked with respect to the forthcoming visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Parliament Hill on Saturday, April 17. Details of the visit are being discussed and negotiated this afternoon. It can be said, however, that, in order to allow Canadians in all parts of the country an opportunity to join in patriation celebrations, the Prime Minister has announced that the proclamation ceremony of the Constitution Act, 1982, by Her Majesty the Queen will be held outdoors on Parliament Hill, weather permitting.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Won't that be fun?

Senator Perrault: In view of the rather late spring, the ceremony could well revert to the original site in the Senate chamber. Honourable senators will, however, be kept posted.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government with regard to the ceremonies to be held on April 17. I understood him to say that, if the weather is inclement, the ceremony will be held in this chamber. At least, I thought that was the effect of his answer.

Senator Perrault: Yes, Senator Smith is quite right.

Senator Smith: I would like to ask him what arrangements, if any, have been made for the accommodation of the spouses of senators and members of the House of Commons if that ceremony should not be held outdoors.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this is a matter that is to be discussed at a meeting later this afternoon. Of course, if the ceremony is to be held outdoors, there will be adequate space for everyone. If the ceremony is held in the Senate chamber, a number of people, including the premiers, have to be accommodated, and the spouses have to be given adequate accommodation. This is one of the matters on the agenda of this afternoon's meeting, and that information should be available shortly. There is Senate representation at that meeting this afternoon.

Senator Smith: I have a supplementary question. If my recollection is correct, during the visit of President Reagan, for example, there was accommodation provided for spouses in this chamber. I wonder just what type of invitee would displace the spouse in the chamber on this occasion as compared to the occasion that I have mentioned.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it should be understood that the ceremony which will be held either outdoors or in this chamber is not a normal parliamentary event. In fact, the details are under the direction of the Secretary of State. There are really no precedents for this type of ceremony. Thus, it is not the exact equivalent of, for example, the opening of Parliament or a presidential visit. Therefore, the answers to these questions cannot be provided at this time. A number of options have been developed, but it would not serve a useful purpose to present that information because, as I have said, discussions will be held later this day.

If the ceremony is held in the Senate chamber, it is certainly the intention to have present all members of Parliament, possibly members of the judiciary and the premiers. There is a great cross-section of Canadians who would like to attend this ceremony. This presents an accommodation problem of some formidable dimensions.

I can say that full consideration will be given to the position of spouses. I know that, in the preliminary plans which have been discussed, there is at least some accommodation for spouses which will be provided in this chamber and in the galleries. I do not, however, believe that at this time it would be useful to go beyond that.

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman for his answer. While it might not be useful to go beyond that, perhaps I would ask him to confirm whether there is any truth in what I thought was more than a rumour that spouses were to be asked to sit in some such room as the Railway Committee Room and to watch the proceedings on television.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a number of options are being discussed. Precisely because so many Canadians wish to attend this ceremony, the Prime Minister has advanced the very useful idea that it be held outdoors so that spouses may be in a position to accompany members of Parliament. I repeat that a number of options have been discussed, including that which has been mentioned by Senator Smith.

• (1500)

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, if I might direct another question to the Leader of the Government concerning the matter of the visit we were discussing, I thought I heard him say in answer to one of my questions that there is representation from this body in the discussions about the program which he said are to take place this afternoon. Did I misunderstand him?

Senator Perrault: I had in mind representation from the office of the Speaker. The Honourable the Speaker will be represented at the meeting, and so will Black Rod.

FARM CREDIT ACT FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE BILL

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH—THIRD READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers.

He said: Honourable senators, when we agreed to have Bill C-88 sent to committee, we also agreed that at third reading the opposition would be given the opportunity of intervening. I believe Senator Phillips wishes to speak on third reading.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my remarks can hardly be called an intervention, because they will be quite brief.

Bill C-88 provides additional financing for the Farm Credit Corporation. No one denies the urgent need for that additional financing, because there is an unfortunate requirement for it. My concern is that the government, having provided additional funds, will now feel that the problem of the farm communities is solved. It is not. In the last several years, honourable senators, farm indebtedness has been increasing at about the rate of 20 per cent each year. Interest rates have also been increasing, and the situation has now become intolerable. At the same time as the farm indebtedness has been increasing, the net farm income has been declining at about the same rate—that is at about 20 per cent each year.

The Minister of Agriculture has forecast that the net farm income will decline by 30 per cent this year. It does not make sense to me, honourable senators, to say to a farmer, "You have been unable to meet your payments at 11 per cent interest on a debt of $200,000; but we will now lend you $300,000 at 16½ per cent at a time when your income is declining by 30 per cent." That, in my opinion, just does not make sense.

By lending additional funds we may keep the farmer on his land for another year or two, but we will have done nothing to prevent the financial doomsday that is almost at hand. I urge the government to come up with some other policy, one designed to increase farm income and to allow farmers to repay their indebtedness. According to what the minister said in committee the other day, 10.6 per cent of the farmers are already on their loans.

Honourable senators, clause 8 permits the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow funds in the form of debentures or other certificates of indebtedness and to lend that money to farmers for a fixed term at a low interest rate. I have no objection to that idea. I am rather pessimistic, however, that it will occur. I wish the minister every success in his efforts, and I give him credit for trying. In committee the other day he was adamant in his view that the funds existed and could be obtained.

Honourable senators, if the Minister of Agriculture can succeed in this effort, I suggest that he be appointed Minister of Finance, and then he will be able to bring down the interest rates for all of us. There is just one problem in that suggestion, however, and that is that they may want to move the present Minister of Finance to the Agriculture portfolio. I hope that never occurs. The farm community is already in enough trouble.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with reference to the speech Senator Phillips has just made, I am sure I can say on behalf of the government that it does not consider that Bill C-88 solves all of the problems of farming, of agriculture, or, in particular, of financing farm operations. It is intended, however, to be a contribution towards the solution of those problems. I think he and I agree on that much, at any rate.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McIlraith for the second reading of Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, first I wish to thank the sponsor of the bill, the Honourable Senator McIlraith, for his expert explanation of the bill and the varied and detailed information he supplied through his introduction. We are rather fortunate to have someone of Senator McIlraith's experience and calibre to introduce this bill. Throughout the depression of the 1930s Senator McIlraith practised law and was familiar with both the problem of those losing their homes and the problem of those concerned with the money they had invested in mortgages. His experience of the depression in the 1930s could well be of benefit to us in the depression of the 1980s. I only hope the government is wise enough to take advantage of his advice.

Honourable senators, on reading Bill C-89 one has the impression that the minister and the officials of the Canada

Mortgage and Housing Corporation do not understand the problems facing approximately 750,000 Canadians who have to renew their mortgages at higher rates this year. The majority of the changes proposed in this bill are designed to assist and protect the Corporation, to facilitate its operation and to make it unnecessary for the Corporation to return to Parliament. There are very few amendments to assist the homeowner. In other words, it is a corporation bill; not a homeowner bill.

Yesterday, when Senator McIlraith introduced the measure, he made several references to the adverse effect of high interest rates. He kept referring to them as "volatile rates." The word "volatile" brings two thoughts to mind: First, that a volatile substance evaporates quickly; second, that it is explosive like a volcano. Well, I see no indication or likelihood that the problem of high interest rates will presently evaporate. But with respect to volcanic eruption—and for some strange reason that is the sense of "volatile" that most readily comes to mind—that is probably what Senator McIlraith had in mind, because the interest rates are somewhat like a financial Mount St. Helens. The ashes and the fallout from the eruption have caused damage to a great many plans of Canadians. The higher interest rates will cost between $2,500 and $3,500 per annum. If we add to that the higher cost of home heating fuel—and the government seems determined that the price will increase—increased municipal taxes, and the higher costs of insurance, repairs and painting, it now costs approximately $4,000 to $4,500 more to run a home each year. As a consequence, Canadians are cutting back on purchases of cars, clothing and their grocery budget, further adding to the depression.

The cost of purchasing a home today is beyond the average Canadian income. The family income required to purchase an average home is $38,000. The average Canadian family income is $27,000, or $11,000 short of that required to purchase the average home. I know a young man who was employed as a trust officer with a trust company. He felt that he was very fortunate to have the responsible position of reviewing applications for mortgages that came to the trust company. One day he saw a property that he thought was reasonably priced and decided that he would like to buy it. However, upon applying for a mortgage to the trust company for which he worked, he was very chagrined to learn from that company that he was deemed unacceptable because his income was not high enough.

I feel that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in preparing this legislation, has concentrated too much on its own problems or difficulties. There is more to the housing problem than those problems that are concentrated out on Montreal Road. I would like to see the corporation take a new look outwards at the problems faced by the average Canadian.

The sponsor mentioned the Interest Deferral Plan. I notice in reading the Hansard of the other place that my colleagues over there have said that this plan originated with the banks of this country. Actually, I do not think that is correct. Deficits are now taken as the normal course of events in Ottawa. It is only a short step from that idea to say, "If the government can operate on a deficit and defer payments, why can't a mortgage holder do the same thing?" If interest deferral is such a good idea, can Senator McIlraith tell me why we do not apply it to our income tax? Those of us who find our income tax too high could, say, defer our payments for two years. I wonder what the attitude of the government would be if that were to happen.

Hon. Lowell Murray: They would charge interest.

Senator Phillips: Yes, they would charge interest at 18 per cent.

Those who require more than 30 per cent of their pre-tax income to pay the principal, interest and taxes on a home will be able to defer up to $3,000 per year. This seems like a good idea, until you remember that that $3,000 is then added to the other end of the mortgage. This same idea was used in the AHOP program. Under that program, many of those who purchased a home made payments for five years only to find upon renewing their mortgage that they had a larger mortgage than that they started out with. Many of those people, of course, said, "What's the use?"—and just walked away.

I do not think this program will be as successful as the government anticipates. There should be some indication that the economic situation will improve in a year or two years to give reason for the deferral. It is all right to say, as Senator Hayden did in his verbal report the other day, that the situation down the road may be different, but that is not sufficient. There should be some concrete evidence that the situation will improve. The interest rates are not the only source of difficulty for the homeowner with a mortgage. Unemployment is another reason. What is the use of an unemployed person deferring $3,000 a year in interest payments if he has no income to pay when it comes due?

The bill has a specific provision for those who have less than 5 per cent equity in their home. As Senator McIlraith will tell you, very few people buy a house with less than 5 per cent equity. There is, however, a form of rank discrimination here against the individual who works, saves and attempts to put into a home a larger equity. You can imagine the situation where someone is, for example, $5 over the 5 per cent equity, and his neighbour is $5 under. The neighbour, of course, would receive the $3,000 grant whereas the person who had put in the $5 extra would not, and would probably feel that he was discriminated against.

I suggest that the only people who will benefit from this program are those people who purchased their homes under the AHOP program. I ask the sponsor of the bill how many of those qualifying for the one-time grant of up to $3,000 purchased their homes under AHOP. These people have already received assistance on one occasion. Are we now to assist them again while the vast majority of Canadians receive no help whatsoever?

The sponsor stated that only 50 per cent of those eligible for the interest deferral plan would make applications. Surely that should tell us something. If that program were effective and of any value, more than 50 per cent of those who are eligible for it would apply. It is small wonder that the deputy leader did not wish the minister to appear before the committee. A member of this chamber, possibly even a Liberal, might have asked him an awkward question, and that would never do. Also, I suppose the Deputy Leader of the Government really did not trust the minister to give a proper reply, and that probably has more to do with his non-appearance.

In the now deceased November budget there was provision for assistance for the construction of 15,000 rental units. At the time of the budget cabinet ministers were boasting that this was a wonderful achievement. It was stated that these 15,000 units would flood the market and that we would probably have a surplus of rental units. However, a few days after the budget was presented the honourable member for Vancouver Centre, Miss Pat Carney, advised the government of difficulties that would be created in respect to MURBs. This instigated the first change in the budget. The construction of 10,000 MURB units began in Vancouver.

I will digress for a moment, honourable senators, to point out that if one Conservative member from Vancouver could be responsible for 10,000 MURBs being built, think what three or four Conservative members from Montreal could have done for the situation in that city. That could have been the best solution to the housing problems in Montreal.

The federal minister refused to attend the housing conference in Vancouver on February 8. At that time, a Canadian Press story came out with some very interesting facts. The regional manager of the CMHC in British Columbia said that because of the building of MURBs there was too much activity in Vancouver and that the construction of rental units would be delayed. Anyone who has looked at the rental situation in Vancouver will know that that city has the highest rents in Canada and has the lowest vacancy rate. The government picked this centre to delay the construction of rental units. Honourable senators, whoever came up with the idea to stop construction of rental units should receive some type of award—and I am not thinking of a monetary award.

The same article stated that, due to construction costs in British Columbia, the Government of British Columbia was asking that the loan per unit in that province be increased from $7,500 to $12,000. It said that this matter was under negotiation between the two governments. Would the sponsor of the bill tell us where the negotiations stand in that regard?

A recent announcement indicated that the number of assisted rental units had been increased from 15,000 to 30,000. I am inclined to wonder, honourable senators, who prepared this rather unusual announcement which emanated from the minister responsible for housing. Great emphasis was placed on the number of jobs which would be created, but the writer almost forgot to mention the number of housing units that would be built.

What happened between February 8 and March 23 that we now have a need for an additional 15,000 units? Was the problem there all the time and the government failed to recognize it? That is a distinct possibility.

I suggest, honourable senators, that this announcement was in response to an open letter from the "Gang of 10" in Montreal. That open letter was not addressed to the minister responsible for housing; it was addressed to the top guru, the Prime Minister. The letter itself was unusual, but even more unusual when we consider who signed it. It was signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a senior cabinet minister. One would expect that occasionally, in the corridors, she would meet the minister responsible for housing. It was also signed by a Minister of State without responsibility, Mr. Joyal, and a number of hard-core Liberals from Montreal, who are every bit as hard core and inward looking as the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): What have I done now? I go to a dentist in Perth. Perhaps the honourable senator's practice is falling off.

Senator Phillips: Obviously, these members of Parliament felt that the situation was so serious that they had to do something about it.

Then the leader of the Liberal caucus in Ontario and numerous other Liberals joined in, and we received this announcement in response.

Honourable senators, the response seems to convey the idea that housing and unemployment are synonymous. They are both serious situations, but they are not synonymous. There are at least 1.25 million unemployed, and we are providing assistance for 30,000 rental units; therefore, they cannot be synonymous. We should deal with the problems separately.

The announcement then went on to link the new program, the Canada Home Renovation Plan, to unemployment. This passes on to the unemployed the fight against unemployment. Imagine this situation, honourable senators: An unemployed worker having difficulties meeting his home payments and in feeding and clothing his family. Along comes the minister responsible for housing and says, "Ah, we've got the solution for you. Go down to the bank and borrow $10,000 to renovate your kitchen. Never mind the fact that you cannot afford to keep any groceries in the cupboard; renovate the cupboard and put oak doors on it or go down to your rec room and build a new wall unit and install a large TV screen; you have lots of time to watch television while you are unemployed. The government will come to your assistance. For every $7 you spend, we will lend you $3, and we will forgive that over a five-year period. Increase your house payments from $500 to $700 a month; what difference does it make? We will probably come up with another deferral program in the future."

That is not going to do very much for the unemployed worker who is laid off from the CNR or Canadair, or, for that matter, the unemployed automobile worker. Those people could not get jobs as carpenters even if they did have a hammer and a saw; the carpenters' union is not going to let them in.

The response went on, further to compound the situation, to state that the government was going to tie the assistance to the unemployment in the area. The need for units is in Vancouver and Calgary, but those cities cannot qualify. The units must be built in areas of high unemployment such as Windsor and Montreal. I do not think that will do very much for those who need rental units in Calgary or Vancouver. It is a long way to commute from Montreal to Vancouver in order to go to work every day. For that reason, I think the program will fail.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, the next item I should like to touch on is the Mortgage Insurance Fund. I am not going to go into the establishment of that fund and its purpose, because the sponsor of the bill did an excellent job of doing that yesterday. However, in the late 1970s that fund had $600 million in excess funds. That is where the problem arises, Senator McIlraith. No one around here ever heard of a fund having an excess before. Therefore, the situation was intolerable. That fund had to be raided, and it was raided for AHOP. Now the fund is becoming depleted because of that.

In his explanation in the other place, the minister said that if the insurance had been done on an actuarial basis, the premium would have been 8 per cent instead of one per cent. I asked the minister what the new premium would be now that the corporation has the sole responsibility for establishing the premium. I asked him whether it would be 8 per cent or 10 per cent.

AHOP was supposed to be a social housing program. Will those buying homes in the future be required to pay for that social housing program, as well as the cost of their own home?

In his explanation in the other place, the minister gave a sort of whispered hope that the additional flexibility granted to the corporation would, in some mysterious way, afford some help for first-time home buyers. There were no specifics given, just that whispered hope. I presume that that was only given because it was politically expedient to do so.

It has been two months since the minister made the suggestion that there would be help, so can the sponsor of the bill give us some specifics on the type of assistance planned for those first-time home buyers?

In my brief remarks, I have referred to the method used to raise funds by the Farm Credit Corporation. I presume that the Farm Credit Corporation received the authority to do so with the blessing of the government. I find it strange, though, honourable senators, that one corporation has received authority to raise low-cost, long-term funds, yet another corporation has not received such authority.

The Farm Credit Corporation received authority, which should be of assistance to its clients, yet Canada Mortgage and Housing, which has not even asked for that authority, has not even considered the idea, according to this legislation. I ask the sponsor of the bill to tell us why it has not received that authority.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before Senator McIlraith closes the debate, I just wish to make a comment regarding the attendance of the minister before a Senate committee.

Senator Phillips has perhaps forgotten that the minister appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. So, the minister did make himself available to the Senate by way of appearing before the committee pre-studying the subject matter of the bill.

That was during the week we managed to get along, with difficulty, without Senator Phillips' being in attendance. Perhaps that is the reason he did not realize that the minister did make himself available to the Senate committee.

Senator Phillips: You have difficulty, even when I am here.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator McIlraith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, because of what I understand is the wish of honourable senators to get on with dealing with the rather important Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 Bill, I shall be brief in my remarks in closing the debate. So, if I fail to deal with some aspects of Senator Phillips' remarks, that I would normally deal with at some length, I hope honourable senators will understand.

I shall also try to confine myself to those parts of Senator Phillips' remarks that are relevant to the bill now before the Senate. I say that because some of his remarks, although very interesting and on important aspects of national housing and housing subjects, were not related to this bill but derive their authority from the act that is being sought to be amended. I shall not go into those programs.

I should clarify a couple of points at the outset. The Canada Home Renovation Plan, to which the honourable senator made reference, is totally unrelated to this bill. The authority for that is in the existing act. An announcement was simply made to indicate an allocation of $30 million under the existing act. That is not related to this bill, in any way, as I said.

There was reference made to those homeowners who have been assisted under the Assisted Home Ownership Plan, and a question was raised as to whether or not they could also receive benefits under the new plan that does become operative under this bill, namely, the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan. The answer is, quite specifically, that those who were assisted under the Assisted Home Ownership Plan by way of grants are not eligible for assistance under the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan. Those who received interest reduction loans—which loans are repayable in the ordinary way—may apply under the new plan, but will not be differentiated from any other mortgagor who wishes to apply. I think that that is the answer to that question.

There were also remarks made about the deferral plan, and a question was asked as to if we were granting a deferral of payments by mortgagors, why should we not grant income tax deferrals? The answer to that question is rather simple and specific. Income tax is assessable against people who have incomes, and the interest deferral plan is designed—and I will not go over its provisions—to assist those who have little income and who are paying more than 30 per cent of their household income for mortgage interest, taxes, and so forth. Perhaps I do not need to elaborate on that.

Senator Murray: The Tory program would have been better.

Senator McIlraith: On the question of unemployment, I do not think I should open up that subject, other than to say that the building of an additional 30,000 units, as will be provided for in this legislation, certainly is going to provide a great deal of employment. I will not argue how much employment that will create, but it will be of considerable assistance to those who are unemployed. I am sure that is of concern to every honourable senator.

● (1540)

Reference was made to the Mortgage Insurance Fund, as to why it did not receive similar authority to the Farm Credit Corporation. I cannot answer that question because they are two different situations and have no relationship to this bill.

Before concluding my remarks, I should like to thank Senator Phillips for his co-operation in abbreviating the proceedings perhaps more than he would have were we not pressed for time.

Honourable senators, at this point I will conclude my remarks so that honourable senators may pass on the bill as they see fit and so that we can move on to consideration of the next important bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McIlraith: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Buckwold for second reading of Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, when I moved the adjournment of the debate yesterday after Senator Roblin's speech, it was because no one on the government side had risen to take the floor. I assumed that none of the honourable senators wished to speak, and therefore, if there are any honourable senators who would still like to comment on Senator Roblin's speech, I am prepared to step aside now and speak to this subject later on. If no one wishes to speak, I shall give you my comments right now.

Hon. Martial Asselin: The senators on the government side all agree with Senator Roblin, that is why.

Senator Flynn: I suppose it is because they are at a loss as to what to say after Senator Roblin's comments.

Honourable senators, all previous speakers in the debate on this subject have said, and it was said in the committee that made a preliminary study of Bill C-97, that it is a very important piece of legislation, since it concerns the renewal of fiscal arrangements concerning both equalization payments and payments to the provinces for what is referred to as established programs financing. The bill also contains further provisions, which, I feel, are of fairly minor importance. I would like to say, as an introductory comment, that equalization payments and established programs are closely interrelated.

We are discussing the subject of equalization payments in this bill at a time when we are expecting a visit from Her Most Gracious Majesty, who is coming to give royal assent to what is called our Constitution, our own Constitution, although the decision was made elsewhere. In section 36, the Constitution refers to equalization and regional disparities. When the new Constitution, or that part of the Constitution that is contained in the Canada Act which was passed by the House of Commons and the House of Lords at Westminster, is proclaimed, section 36 will apply to the legislation we are being asked to pass today. Section 36 reads as follows:

● (1550)

Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

- (a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;
- (b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and
- (c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Clearly, this part of the section consists of pious platitudes. There is a host of such pious platitudes throughout this constitutional document. The second paragraph is specifically concerned with equalization, and reads as follows:

Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

I must say that the French version is very poor. I fail to understand what is meant by "niveau de fiscalité". It says:

—pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

Now, "niveau de fiscalité" and "niveau de qualité" should not be combined. In any case, we know quite well what is meant. This document, which was prepared against a background of political intrigue, is a stylistic disaster. In any event, it will soon be part of our new Constitution.

The public services referred to are public services that fall under provincial jurisdiction. Clearly, health and post-secondary education are in this category. That is why I said earlier that equalization payments concern not only all other services that fall under provincial jurisdiction, but also those that are part of the established programs financing referred to in Bill C-97, namely, health and post-secondary education. With the new Constitution, the question arises, first of all, whether the bill passes the test in section 36(2) of the Canada Act. If the provinces do not agree, since, after all, the bill constitutes a unilateral decision by the federal government, the question arises whether at some time a given province could challenge the act's constitutionality. Manitoba might wish to do so, since from what Senator Roblin said yesterday and from comments by Senator Everett, it seems the province considers it is not being treated fairly compared with the other provinces. In any case, all these points of law raised by our new Constitution are going to be put before the courts. The government has purposely avoided giving Parliament and the legislatures too much leeway. Perhaps there is a lack of confidence in the stability of parliamentarians at all levels, in view of certain recent events, but at any rate, this is the first question that might arise. Does the bill meet the test in section 36 of the Canada Act?

Let us consider what equalization means. The concept was first defined by the Rowell-Sirois Commission, which recommended at the time, in 1940, that the federal government introduce a system of subsidies aimed at achieving the following:

Their purpose is to enable each province to provide services to its citizens according to a national standard, and thus remedy poverty and other regrettable conditions that are a threat to national unity and a handicap for many Canadians. They are an expression of the Commission's concept of a federal system that is capable of ensuring sound local autonomy and building a stronger and more united country.

The report was published at the beginning of 1940; the war had just broken out in September 1939 and evidently it was impossible at that time to implement that recommendation immediately. Moreover, the imperatives of war had led the government to ask the provinces to surrender their main taxation rights, such as income tax, taxes on corporations, succession duties, in exchange for automatic payments while the provincial taxation authority was granted to the federal government for the duration of the war. Evidently, once those powers were transferred, the federal government and Parliament were not prepared to let them go after the war. They had such good results and enjoyed a rather unusual freedom of action. The central government then proceeded in peacetime to renew those arrangements which had been concluded on account of the war. Finally, what happened is that rather than relinquishing these powers completely, an equalization system was proposed in 1957, based more or less on the principle to be found in the quotation I made from the Rowell-Sirois Commission, and more specifically in the second paragraph of section 36 of the Canada Act that I also quoted. I remember that at the time, Mr. Duplessis, who had opposed this takeover of provincial taxation powers by the central government, pointed out that equalization was a step in the right direction.

Of course, the problem of the have-not provinces has always been that they have not really objected when the central government has tried to solve their budgetary problems. Revenue guarantee has always been a very strong argument used by the central government in its dealings with the provinces. If anyone can tell us about that, it is certainly Senator Robichaud, a former premier of New Brunswick, a province which has always been very interested in obtaining these equalization payments and did not have to complain of having rented its taxing powers to the federal government during the war.

The equalization system was therefore established and in nearly every case it was subject to arrangements every five years, in 1957, 1962, 1967, 1972 and 1977. We finally come to March 31, 1982, the date of expiry of the latest arrangement.

In 1957, the system was based on rather simple rules which were adjusted every five years following negotiations, and in nearly every case they were subject to an arrangement. However, there is no agreement this year.

Of course, it must be said that there have been negotiations. I do not deny this; there have been studies, there have been reports, including an excellent one from that parliamentary task force and the report of the Economic Council of Financing Confederation. This matter has been the subject of reviews for over a year, but there has been no arrangement, mainly because the purpose of the present federal government was to reduce its payments under the equalization program and for established programs financing, or at least to limit the increase in these payments. This is undeniable. Of course, the provinces deeply regret this. The Minister of Finance had first said: We shall use the province of Ontario as a basis for the formula, that is Ontario's average fiscal capacity. Since this was not acceptable, the minister then said: I shall take the five provinces already mentioned during the debate, namely, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, leaving aside, of course, the richest province, Alberta, and the Atlantic provinces. But we still find, as Senator Manning indicated in committee, that while the formula itself can be discussed in the context of the bill, it has been chosen with one objective in view, and that is to reduce the payments for equalization and other programs. In other words, the rationale behind this government's selection of the formula is not so much its logic but the fact that it enabled the Minister of Finance to reach his goal. The minister said to himself: I will give the provinces such an amount—what formula should I use to avoid giving more than what I feel should be the right proportion of my budget?

Concerning equalization payments we should ask ourselves: Are the payments adequate to ensure that all provinces have the same level and standard of services? Clearly, when we link that to equalization payments only, we could entertain doubts. But there is also the established programs funding. It must be remembered that the majority of established programs stem from the fact that after the war the federal government had such large revenues, after invading taxation areas of traditional provincial jurisdiction, that it wanted to get involved into more things, especially education. It is a fact, for instance, that the Arts Council of Canada was established because the federal government, thanks to estate duties, had received large sums of money from the estate of Sir James Dunn and another multi-millionaire.

Senator Goldenberg: It was Mr. Killen.

Senator Flynn: That's it. The government did not know what to do with all that money; they had an enormous surplus, so, on the one hand, they established the Arts Council and, on the other hand, they offered grants to universities. That caused a lot of problems at that time, but eventually this was resolved in 1959-60, with the Province of Quebec in particular, because other provinces did not object. But the Province of Quebec, of course, was right, because it is very jealous of that field, as being specifically its own. It did not wish the federal government to get involved, and opposed that.

That was the first factor, the first involvement in the area of post-secondary education.

Then came the issue of medicare. They said: If you want to establish medicare according to your own standards, we, the federal government, will give you monies. So the provinces had no alternative, for they said to themselves: If we do not do so, they will hand out grants to the others and we will not get anything, but we will still be responsible for the services we are now providing while trying to improve on them as best we can.

● (1600)

This is how the federal government came to be involved, first in health and, later, in hospital insurance, through medicare. Those were then provincial responsibilities, but no reference was made to equalization, that is, the equality of resources. The idea was to involve all provincial governments on practically the same basis. The government was saying: We are going to share with you, Ontario, as we are sharing with Newfoundland, 50 per cent of medicare. Then, it was clearly no longer the equalization principle—

Hon. Louis J. Robichaud: No.

Senator Flynn: Yes. At first, it was 25 per cent for medicare, then they made it 50 per cent if the provinces exceeded the four standards they were using at the time. This was adjusted gradually with percentage points, but, initially, that is what it was. They were saying to the provinces: We are going to give you the same amount per capita. Later on this was rearranged. That is why I am telling you that the implication now is quite different, even if there are corrections to compensate for the varying fiscal capacities of the provinces.

It remains, however, that Ontario, under the Established Programs Financing Act, is receiving $4 billion a year and that Alberta, I think, is receiving nearly $1 billion a year. Yet, these provinces can certainly afford to assume the burden of their responsibilities for health as well as post-secondary education.

Whatever the case may be, these are the facts.

Now, for lack of an agreement, the federal government is foisting this solution on the provinces, and then it suggests that it wants the provinces to be accountable for these funds. On the equalization payments, sure, it is no. It says: We are giving you this money and you can use it as you please, and that is your responsibility. As to the others, which were introduced subject to certain standards, there are rumours that the provinces will be made responsible for the spending of those funds.

In my opinion, this is one aspect of a tendency which came to light following the Rowell-Sirois Report and the wartime tax arrangements, when the federal government insisted on keeping the taxation power in order to achieve a sort of fiscal centralization. It wanted a strong central government, which it felt was in a better position to know what was to be done in virtually all areas, and which could prescribe standards in the areas of education, health and many others.

There are other areas; let me mention, for instance, unemployment insurance. The Rowell-Sirois Commission stated that the federal government should handle it, and the provinces agreed. So, the Constitution and the British North America Act were amended accordingly and that responsibility was entrusted to the federal government. Very well! But, with those new agreements, the will of Ottawa to intervene in areas that are strictly of provincial jurisdiction continues to assert itself—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is not what the Rowell-Sirois Report said.

Senator Flynn: No, when I mentioned the Rowell-Sirois Report I was referring mainly to the fact that it laid down the principle underlying the equalization payments. I did state that in the case of those payments, the federal government asks no questions. It merely says to the provinces: According to such-and-such a rule, we will hand you over this amount so that you can discharge your responsibilities. However, such is not the case with the grants for the financing of established programs in the areas of health and post-secondary education.

As I say, in those areas, the government wants to move in and operate very differently; it wants to set itself up in such a way that it can see exactly what goes on, and have its say. That situation is now taken for granted. We heard Mr. Slater, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, tell us in committee that he, naturally, took the situation for granted, but that the Council having looked into the problem had decided not to commit itself. Still, he did acknowledge that point of view through the dissenting opinion of one of its members, Mr. Pierre Lortie.

[Senator Flynn.]

Mr. Lortie, in his dissent on the matter, states very clearly, and I quote from page 133 of the English text:

In my view, nothing has happened during the ensuing period—

That is, since 1977.

—that would call into question this fundamental policy direction. In fact, the evidence contained in the Council's research indicates that Established Programs Financing has worked well.

Obviously then, the provinces were not accountable to the federal government. I go back to my quotation:

With respect to the options available, I would have preferred consideration of further substantial disentanglement of federal-provincial programs.

The English text uses the word "disentanglement". In short, what is wanted here is more than a disentanglement; the federal government is to get out, so to speak, of the administration, while doubtless continuing the financing, through equalization payments, however. If I may, I shall finish quoting the paragraph:

This disentanglement could be achieved through replacement of some of the present cash payments by an unconditional transfer of tax points, supplemented by adjustments in the Equalization Program.

If the equalization formula was intended to enable the provinces to provide a nationally comparable level of services in the field of health care and post-secondary education, we could simply have improved the existing equalization formula or added to it rather than developing this other formula through which the federal government intervenes directly and is now asking that the provinces be accountable for their administration of the subsidies.

For my part, I do not consider that this bill improves the situation; it simply shows that the federal government still wishes to act unilaterally every time it sees fit to do so, whether or not the Canada Bill or the new Constitution is in effect. The trend toward centralization which began before and during the war and which now covers areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction is still being followed.

I believe that this is extremely unfortunate and that it will cause conflicts. We shall see what happens.

This is why, personally, I shall vote against this bill.

[English]

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Buckwold speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, first I should like to say that I feel enlightened by the presentation made by the Leader of the Opposition, who has a great knowledge of the historic development of the fiscal relationships between the federal government and the provincial governments. I am sure that it was enlightening to all of us to hear about the development of the relationships and the changes that have taken place over the years. The honourable senator made two or three points to which I should like briefly to respond, keeping in mind that we have had a fairly extensive debate, in this series of speeches, upon this particular subject.

The first question raised by the honourable senator concerns section 36 of the constitutional resolution, wherein the federal government commits itself to providing sufficient revenue to the provinces to ensure the provision of comparable levels of public service at reasonable levels of taxation—or words to that effect. One of these days, I presume, we will all know the Constitution off by heart. I think this is a valid point and one which can be responded to reasonably well.

In my opinion and, I believe, in the opinion of the government and, indeed, of some provinces, the formula that has been developed, the program that has been established, and the financing that has been made available do meet the criteria set out in section 36. These criteria do provide for the kinds of services that are reasonable and sufficient funds that are available so that levels of taxation will also be reasonable. With all due respect to my learned friend, I sincerely believe that the federal government has made a real effort to meet the objective, which is a very high one, of providing these kinds of services to all of the people of Canada.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Buckwold: The Leader of the Opposition then moved on to the point that the federal government imposed this particular bill upon the provinces and that the formulas were developed in a unilateral way. He did agree that a good deal of consultation took place. I think he would also agree that it is extremely difficult, these days, to reach agreement with all of the provinces. However, as I have indicated, most provinces have found the new arrangement quite acceptable.

I think it should be kept in mind that, yes, the federal government did require some fiscal restraint. I do not think that anybody can apologize for that part of the exercise which was aimed at holding down, although not reducing, the growth that we have seen develop over the years in terms of equalization payments. This has come about because members of government and people all across the country are demanding some restraint in government expenditures. Twenty per cent of the federal expenditures will go to the provinces by means of federal-provincial transfers. It is true that there will be some reduction—although it does not run into a large sum of money—in the growth of equalization payments. I do not think that this growth is unreasonable, keeping in mind the financial situation this country faces.

I can say to my learned friend across the way, and to the provincial governments, that any responsible federal government must look at this aspect of its expenditures. This is the kind of thing that I believe Canadians will have to accept, not only with regard to this program, but, perhaps, with regard to a wide variety of programs. There may have to be some changes made. However, we still want to provide reasonable and sufficiently high levels of services.

The Leader of the Opposition then moved on to the subject of the established programs financing and, linked with it, equalization. He presented a good argument, but the point is that the two have been kept separate. It may be possible to lump them into a basket and present them to the provincial governments, saying, "There you are; take it all; don't account for anything." I can find some sympathy, personally, for the federal government's request that there be some reasonable control over the funds of the established programs and how they are spent by the provincial governments. I do not know whether this constitutes a terrible interference with provincial rights, keeping in mind that, historically, the hospital and medicare programs, as well as the university programs, were accountable.

When the federal government was making 50-50 payments, the financial results of these programs were examined. The federal government saw what the provincial governments were doing. The provinces did not really like to be held accountable, and that was changed. Therefore, we see some effects upon universities and upon medical and hospital expenditures in a variety of provinces, which utilized, in many cases, federal funds for other provincial purposes. I believe that this point was explained thoroughly in some of the previous speeches that we have heard here in the Senate. It is for this reason that I do not find it reprehensible that the federal government should ask for some reasonable standard, some means by which to talk to the provinces about how the money is being spent.

I again thank the Leader of the Opposition for drawing these matters to our attention. It is to be hoped that, as a result of the discussions which he has referred to, there will develop the kind of relationship that will give the best value for our dollars across the country in all of the programs that are financed under what we call the established programs financing.

If I may, I will refer briefly to the speech of Senator Roblin, who certainly presents a very good case for Manitoba, which is understandable, from his point of view. I know that Senator Roblin is a very sober man; he is known for his sobriety.

Senator Asselin: What about a solution? You are just talking about sobriety.

Senator Buckwold: Yes, I am just talking about sobriety. If you would like a solution, I can take you upstairs, where we have some of that kind of solution.

I would like to refer to the use of statistics. There is an old adage which goes something like this: Some people use statistics like a drunk uses a lamp-post; more for support than for illumination.

Senator Flynn: They use a lamp-post for other things, too, occasionally.

Senator Buckwold: Well, you should know; I am sure you have had lots of experience.

As I was saying, I am not blaming the sobriety of Senator Roblin; certainly not. I will say, as well, that the government, on its side, uses statistics to its advantage.

● (1620)

As I say, Senator Roblin made a good case, particularly for the province of Manitoba, saying that the problem that was created because of the changes involving the determination of the equalization formula did, in some way, adversely affect the province of Manitoba. But that was recognized by the federal government. It was recognized to the extent that an additional $165 million was given to Manitoba over the next three years to help them during that particular period.

On the other hand, from the point of view of the Manitoba situation in relation to the other provinces, we should recognize that the federal government's approach has been most fair. When we applied this new system of 33 different revenue sources to 1982-83 we arrived at a standard based upon the average per capita yield of the representative tax system in five provinces of $2,541. I am giving these statistics because I think we should have them on the record.

What do these figures mean, honourable senators? They mean that the average yield of the system in these provinces is $2,541 per person living in the province. Those provinces whose yield is below that amount are entitled to equalization to bring them up to that level. However, in the case of Manitoba, whose per capita yield under this formula is only $2,201, the amount will be raised not to $2,541 but, because of the transitional arrangements, to $2,620. In other words, Manitoba will be raised to a level higher than that of any other province receiving equalization. Incidentally, I don't call that discrimination, honourable senators.

It is instructive as well to note that after equalization Manitoba's yield of $2,620 per capita will be even higher than that of Ontario, whose yield is estimated at $2,596. In other words, not only will Manitoba be raised to a level higher than that of the other five provinces receiving equalization, but it will be raised to a level higher than that of Ontario, one of the rich provinces not receiving equalization. Again I say that that is surely a generous provision. Manitoba's equalized yield will continue to be above that of the other equalization receiving provinces in 1983-84 and 1984-85. It will remain above that of Ontario in 1983-84.

Honourable senators, those figures indicate the extent to which the government has gone, at a cost of $165 million, to protect Manitoba. Only one conclusion can be reached, and that is that the province of Manitoba is being treated in a fair and generous way.

Senator Flynn: Obviously!

Senator Buckwold: Thank you for agreeing.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Honourable senators, I should like to read into the record the share of total equalization paid to Manitoba, by fiscal periods, since 1957, when the equalization program began, as referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps the opposition is not interested in these statistics, but I think they should be on the record.

Senator Flynn: Certainly we are interested in them.

Senator Buckwold: In the forthcoming five-year period, the equalization for Manitoba is projected to be 8.15 per cent. That percentage is higher than the percentage of 7.22 that applied from 1957 to 1962. It is higher than the percentage of 7.82 that applied from 1962 to 1967. It is also higher than the percentage of 6.83 that applied from 1967 to 1972, or the percentage of 7.44 relating to 1972 to 1977. It is lower than the percentage of 9.73, which applies to the last five-year period from 1977 to 1982, and that is where the problem arises. The point is that what they will be receiving is historically higher than they have been receiving, except for the last five-year period. By historic standards, Manitoba is receiving an above-average share of total equalization, and once again we have evidence of the very fair treatment being accorded to that province.

Perhaps I may be permitted to move on to some of the other points raised by Senator Roblin. He touched on what is probably the most argumentative procedure in the bill, the revenue guarantee element. A great argument is taking place with respect to whether or not this is in fact part of the established programs financing. Again it comes down to the way people use statistics. It is interesting to note that at the provincial premiers' meeting last year, 1981, a communiqué was issued stating emphatically that as far as the ministers were concerned the revenue guarantee element and the funds received from that revenue guarantee had nothing to do with the established programs financing.

The established programs financing comprises a substantial amount of money which, as we have heard two or three times during this debate, was put in to ease the position of provinces as we changed some taxation relationships. That financing was there as a transitory measure, as I have said before. It was never intended or expected to be a permanent program. Well, if you remove that financing, which amounts to $5.8 billion—and that is where the major financial saving to the federal government is—then you really should not argue that the government is reducing its support for established programs. In fact, that support will continue at the same level as it has, related to the gross national product. If the argument is that it is the guaranteed revenue aspect of the whole package that is upsetting the provinces, then I must repeat that just last year the premiers indicated that the revenue guarantee had nothing to do with the established programs financing.

So that is where the federal government does in fact make its major saving, its major economy in this restraint program which all of us know is expected of us. The universities, the hospitals, the medicare program will all benefit from the same amount of money, the same growth, as they have had traditionally in the past, related basically to the gross national product. No doubt we will hear arguments on both sides, but I think the federal government has a reasonable case there.

Senator Roblin, I believe with some objection, also spoke about the right of the federal government to amend. I referred to that earlier in response to Senator Flynn, and I say again that I feel that, although some people might object, the federal government, in passing on the kind of money it is doing, should have the right to expect the provinces to perform. That is really what we are talking about here. I do not find it offensive at all that the federal government has suggested that it should have the right to make changes, if necessary, if the programs are not being carried out in a responsible manner, in order to meet the national standards that have been laid down.

Senator Roblin also endorsed the idea of the Economic Council of Canada that there should be some pre-study for the next round of federal-provincial negotiations in respect of fiscal policy. I agree with him 100 per cent. I should like to see that done by a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. I do not think we should wait until we are close to the expiry date of the present arrangements before we make a major study of fiscal federalism. Such a study would be effective, and the Economic Council itself might play a role in that. I am pleased that Senator Roblin saw fit to endorse that particular program.

Senator Roblin said that the federal government is shifting the burden of the federal deficit on to the less fortunate provinces. To a degree there is a shifting of the burden because of the nature of the deficits and the financial restraints, but I think Senator Roblin was ill advised to use the term "less fortunate provinces." It is being spread over all of the provinces and part of it is being paid for by everyone.

Senator Flynn: Well, "all of the provinces" includes the "less fortunate provinces."

Senator Buckwold: Again, I can only say that when we have fiscal restraint being demanded by the people of Canada, then certainly there will be some burden on all of the provinces and on the federal government itself.

● (1630)

Finally, he talked about energy revenue and said something to the effect that the federal government would have so much money coming in that it should not be too niggardly with funds for the provinces. Let me remind honourable senators that even with the optimistic—and, in my opinion, they are optimistic—revenue figures that may come out of the new energy programs, there would still be a significant deficit right up to the fiscal year 1985-86. Certainly, we need those revenues, but they in themselves are not enough to eliminate the need for the fiscal restraint which I have talked about.

Honourable senators, I think I have answered the points raised by Senator Flynn and Senator Roblin. I commend this bill to you for second reading.

Before I sit down, I wish you all a very happy Easter, and I wish those of my faith a joyous Passover.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Buckwold: Certainly.

Senator Smith: The honourable senator made reference to the possibility of a pre-study of the equalization problem before it comes up for review the next time. Is the honourable senator aware that the whole basis of this kind of equalization calculation was worked out by a committee called the Tax Structure Committee, appointed by a federal-provincial conference presided over by the Prime Minister of the day, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, approximately 20 years ago? Would the honourable senator endorse that kind of study as one that is suitable for the pre-study which he mentioned?

Senator Buckwold: I would have to say in response that I cannot answer in the affirmative or in the negative. I really do not know how conditions may have changed since that time. Certainly, it is an approach that could be carried on in a co-operative way, along with the responsibilities of Parliament in this regard. It seems to me that such a committee would be very useful. I presume it would also have to be tempered by a variety of other factors that go into determining the final agreements that are reached.

So, if I am not being absolutely definite on this point, I must say to the honourable senator that it is because I really do not have the background to give a definitive answer.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, with leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to explain why we have given leave to proceed with the third reading stage at this time. Normally, even if a bill has been the object of a pre-study—in this case, by the National Finance Committee—we on this side, at least, would require that the bill be referred to the committee for normal consideration after passing the second reading stage. In that instance, we would have taken the opportunity to ask the provincial governments and other interested bodies or groups to appear before the committee as witnesses.

As I mentioned before, negotiations with the provinces have been going on for some time, but, in fact, the bill was introduced at the last moment. We were told that if the bill is not passed by April 15 the payments to the provincial governments would be delayed and that they would therefore suffer. Thus, we have worked within a time constraint which left us in the position of not being able to do what we normally like to do with a bill of such importance, namely, to have witnesses appear and to hear the grievances explained in more detail and more directly to the committee. We have been put in much the same position as the House of Commons, that position being that we are forced to pass this bill quickly, bypassing the normal process of consideration before a committee of this place, and agreeing to allow the third reading to proceed.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Forced to agree.

Senator Flynn: In any event, I felt that it should be on the record that because of the time constraint this bill is receiving third reading now. Furthermore, it seems to me that the Senate has shown that it does not consider that it can do very much about this bill, in light of the few members who have taken part in the debate or who have expressed reservations or worries about the bill. So, under the circumstances, it seems to us, even though we are not happy with the bill or with the time constraint, that there is nothing else we can do but let it go.

Before resuming my seat, I would like to inform Senator Buckwold that a consequence of a reduction, if not in the amount proper then in the growth of the contributions, is that the standard of health care and post-secondary education may decrease. Perhaps it will show that what we have provided in the Constitution under section 36 is not worth very much. In any event, the provinces are faced with either decreasing the quality of their services or increasing their indebtedness. This is the result of the imposition by the federal government of programs that infringe on an area of provincial responsibility and that force them to change their priorities in accordance with the central government's wishes.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I wonder if I may just take a moment to perhaps correct the impression I may have left by the question I asked of the sponsor of the bill a few minutes ago. The bill, of course, deals with more than equalization. My question dealt only with the formula for equalization and not with the established programs financing.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

7 April 1982

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 7th day of

[Senator Flynn.]

April, 1982, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,

Your obedient servant,
Jacques Noiseux
for Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 27, 1982, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

He said: Honourable senators, my information is that the other place will be adjourning tomorrow and returning on April 19. It is expected that the House of Commons will be kept occupied, during the last two weeks of April, with the energy bills that were the subject of the agreement between the house leaders. According to my understanding, those bills are to go to committee in May.

Of course, we cleared up much of our work while the House of Commons was not sitting. We cannot expect to have anything from the other place during our second week of adjournment, and that is why I have moved that we adjourn for an additional week.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Another reason we should adjourn for two weeks is, of course, that we are all exhausted as a result of the work we have been doing in the Senate since we came back in late January. I think we deserve to be away for two weeks.

Senator Frith: Well said.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting loans to farmers.

An Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment, I should like to wish all of you a Happy Easter, Joyeuses Pâques, Buona Pasqua.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 27, 1982 at 8 o'clock in the evening.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 27, 1982

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Parliamentary Librarian for the fiscal year 1980-81.

THE SENATE

CHAMBER CLOCK

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if Senator Donahoe has noticed that our clock shows Halifax time and decides it is in his honour he should feel free to enjoy doing so. It will probably be changed to Eastern daylight saving time tomorrow.

Hon. C. William Doody: We easterners think it is a nice gesture.

Senator Frith: I couldn't get it to the half hour in time for you.

Senator Doody: Nobody would believe it anyway.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-97 TABLED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, on April 6, 1982, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, Senator Everett gave a verbal report on the subject matter of Bill C-97, explaining that a written report would be tabled at a later date.

On behalf of Senator Everett, I have the honour to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the subject matter of Bill C-97, An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, and to ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of today and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND DRAW TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SENATE THE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, April 28, 1982, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine and draw to the attention of the Senate the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I want to say a word about the Notice of Motion that has just been given. I have discussed it with Senator Godfrey, and want also to inform honourable senators that tomorrow I may have something to say about an aspect of the wording of the motion that raises a question of order, although not a terribly serious one—more a matter of irregularity.

● (2010)

Senator Roblin: Tell us now; do not keep us in suspense.

Senator Frith: I should like to leave it as a cliff-hanger.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON PURCHASERS OF WHOLE LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The November 12 budget proposed to tax unrealized gains on individual whole life insurance policies—a shocking situation—and premiums on company-paid health and dental benefits. As a result, thousands of protesting letters have been sent to the Minister of Finance and the Liberal caucus by unhappy policyholders and employees.

Will the distinguished leader advise the Senate whether these proposals have been deleted from the budget or modified in any way? I consider this to be a most important question.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a number of representations have most certainly been received from the insurance industry and policyholders in various parts of the country. An explanation of government policy was given to the Senate a number of sittings ago. However, the question will be taken as notice and the reply updated if further information is available from the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Martial Asselin: This question was asked previously.

Senator Perrault: An answer was provided previously. Senator Nurgitz asked the same question earlier and a response was made.

Senator Asselin: Is it the same answer?

Senator Perrault: I will seek an update.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF FUND TO FINANCE JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A short while ago I drew his attention to the situation whereby the Minister of Employment and Immigration was loading the Unemployment Insurance Fund with costs of programs which he hopes will ameliorate the unemployment situation in Canada.

At that time I asked whether it was the intention of the government to use the Unemployment Insurance Fund for these purposes, or whether it was the intention of the government to provide those funds at a later date from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I raise the question because to use the Unemployment Insurance Fund for such purposes would constitute, of course, a direct tax on hundreds of thousands of workers in the country.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question is a relevant one and will be taken as notice.

Senator Roblin: Three weeks have now elapsed since I originally asked this question. Will the leader give me some indication as to when I may receive an answer?

Senator Perrault: As yet, the reply is not available.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, will the Leader of the Government tell us whether he expects the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board to attend in the chamber this evening?

Hon. C. William Doody: He is waiting for a re-count in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): We are hopeful that the minister will be here this evening, but whether he will arrive in time for Question Period is a moot question.

Senator Roblin: Is there any truth to the rumour that he is being detained by crowds of enthusiastic Liberal supporters in Saskatchewan?

Senator Perrault: I can say that the semi-monopoly position established by the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan last evening may well invite an investigation by this government.

Senator Roblin: If you do not know now, you never will.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ACQUISITION OF INTEREST IN SAVIN INC.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Following earlier questions concerning the CDC purchase of Savin Inc., Senator Austin has refused to give complete answers claiming that he would not comment on the day-to-day operation of the corporation.

This evening my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relating, perhaps, to Savin, but more specifically to the general matter of government accountability of taxpayers' dollars.

Two senior officers of Savin Inc., who continue to be employed at annual salaries of about $US300,000 a year, received modified—and I think this was the term used by the newspaper—golden handshakes from the CDC when the Savin purchase took place.

Hon. Martial Asselin: What are we doing here?

Senator Nurgitz: Both officers have been paid approximately $US4.25 million.

An Hon. Senator: Scandal!

Senator Nurgitz: Since the CDC is 48.5 per cent owned by the taxpayers through the government, would the Leader of the Government provide a full accounting of this expenditure and explain, if he can, how this apparent gross extravagance could ever have been perpetrated upon the Canadian taxpayer?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had not been aware of these allegations. However, if information is available, it will be provided.

● (2015)

Senator Doody: It is a wonder the Conservatives didn't get 64 seats in Saskatchewan.

Senator Roblin: If they had heard about this, they would have.

ENERGY

EAST COAST—OFFSHORE OIL EXPLORATION

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I would have preferred to direct my question to the minister responsible for economic development, but he has not yet graced us with his presence, although I understand he may come later—when Question Period is safely over. I will, therefore, address my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

We hear quite often that by 1990, or some such year, we will have achieved self-sufficiency in oil, and we are given to understand that that will depend in large measure on what takes place off the east coast. Given the importance of the development of resources off the east coast, why do federal officials not yet have a formula for deciding which drilling permits the oil companies must return so that they can proceed to drill on the ones they may keep?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

Senator Donahoe: I thank the honourable senator for the attention that will be given to my question. There is a supplementary that goes with it. In March and April respectively, BP and Shell announced substantial delays in their east coast drilling programs because it has taken such a long time to renegotiate offshore drilling permits with the federal government.

Is the minister not of the view that it is in the national interest for east coast drilling to proceed, and for decisions on allocations of drilling permits to be taken with dispatch? Surely that is a question that does not need to be taken as notice, because it is an expression of what the minister has on his mind at this moment.

An Hon. Senator: Very little!

Hon. R. James Balfour: Apparently no one wants to reply to that question.

Senator Perrault: I am taking it as notice.

VIABILITY OF MEGA-PROJECTS

Hon. R. James Balfour: May I address a question to which ever government member might care to respond to it? Senator Austin is perhaps best qualified.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That does not improve the situation much.

Senator Balfour: My question relates to the Cold Lake project, the Alsands project and the Alaska Highway gas pipeline project. Are those projects still viable or not?

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State): Honourable senators, I will have to take notice of that question for Senator Olson. Those matters are within his particular responsibility.

Senator Flynn: Well done!

[Senator Roblin.]

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I notice that recently the government has launched a $5 million advertising campaign entitled "Helping Canada Work" which, according to the chief of advertising for the sponsoring department, is also to suggest that the economy as a whole is working.

Is the Leader of the Government, amid all the ministerial talk of restraint and of cutbacks, able to justify this massive advertising campaign, which, to me at least, has no concrete objective other than to persuade Canadians that conditions are other than what they really are?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, surely that is a rather negative attitude demonstrated by Honourable Senator Nurgitz. Canadians who are out of work deserve the active sympathy of all of us, regardless of party.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Unfortunately that is all you can give them. You have no dough.

Senator Perrault: The government information program is designed to inform these unemployed Canadians of the work opportunities that may be available under certain government programs. For example, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy has announced a program to provide employment for certain categories of unemployed in various Canadian provinces, a program which will "top up" their unemployment insurance benefits and provide incentives and opportunities for people to work in the forestry, mining and fishery industries, and so on. Those who are unemployed and are entitled to participate in that program deserve to be apprised of the facts. Surely the honourable senator is not suggesting that those programs should be undertaken secretly, in some covert fashion, so that the unemployed are unaware of their existence.

● (2020)

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question anticipating the answer I have just received.

An Hon. Senator: Which anyone could anticipate.

Senator Nurgitz: No one would doubt the validity of an advertising program that would tell someone how to apply for a job or for retraining. My argument with the Leader of the Government—what was meant to be a question has now turned into an argument—is that this does not do that at all. This really is an advertising campaign that has no directives. If the expenditure of $5 million on advertising by the Department of Employment and Immigration was absolutely necessary at this time, would it not have been better to draw the attention of Canadians to the many training programs to enable them to apply for jobs, rather than engage in what I suggest is window dressing?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can only say that the details of the program will be ascertained and information brought to the Senate. An alleged figure of $5 million has been bandied about. Whether or not that is an accurate figure, I do not know, but I will attempt to equip myself with the facts. I say again that government information programs are necessary to enable the unemployed to know their entitlements and the work opportunities that exist in this country. I suggest that the spokesmen for the Conservative Party should be somewhat more optimistic and positive in their attitude towards measures designed to assist the unemployed.

Senator Flynn: We want you to be more efficient.

Senator Nurgitz: I am aghast at the absurdity of the answer. Would the Leader of the Government be kind enough to furnish the Senate with information on the cost and also a copy of the advertising, because it says nothing of the kind?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Nothing of the kind.

Senator Nurgitz: It tells Canadians that they are better off, but not how to become better off. It tells them they are working when they are not working. That is my point.

Senator Perrault: I would appreciate it if the honourable senator would send to me, across the chamber, at this moment, a copy of the advertisement. Obviously, he has one on his desk. Let us have a look at it.

Senator Flynn: I thought you knew what you were talking about.

Senator Perrault: We are talking about an advertising program which is alleged to be in existence. The honourable senator does not appear to have any copies of the alleged advertisements or tapes. I will undertake to get the facts. Obviously, the honourable senator has not brought any with him this evening.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. A few moments ago he said—and I will quote him to the best of my recollection—that the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy now has a program in place which allows Canadian citizens to “top up” their unemployment insurance. Does the Leader of the Government mean that seriously? Is that one of the answers to Canada’s unemployment problem, that citizens are going to be encouraged to “top up” their unemployment insurance?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government is interested in promoting and achieving as much co-operative federalism as possible. The employment program involves the federal government and certain provinces such as Ontario and British Columbia. We welcome the participation of other provinces as well. These governments believe that the unemployed men and women of Canada today would far sooner be working than be on the unemployment insurance rolls.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: In addition to providing unemployment insurance benefits, the federal government, in co-operation with certain provincial governments, is working to provide additional amounts to the unemployed in exchange for work which will enhance our forestry, mining and fishing industries in the various provinces. This is a constructive initiative. It is not a substitute for full-time employment. Of course not.

• (2025)

The fact is that as far as the forest industry is concerned, there is widespread unemployment in the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and the west, largely because of the—

An Hon. Senator: Liberal government.

Senator Perrault:—very low level of housing starts in the United States of America. Honourable senators are aware that Canada draws most of its forest wealth from its export sales to the United States and other countries. When houses are not being built, especially in the United States, then forest workers in Canada are in trouble.

Rather than adopting the attitude that we are unable to help the unemployed, on rather than refusing to do anything constructive, we have gone to the provinces and have said, “Let us work together to help them.”. For example, just last week in the province of British Columbia a federal-provincial announcement was made which could mean 10,000 jobs. That is an example of the federal government and a provincial government working together constructively. We have a forestry program in place in British Columbia and Ontario. We are working with the Social Credit government of the province of British Columbia and the Conservative government of the province of Ontario in that regard.

Canadians do not want federal-provincial bickering at this particular time; they want governments to get together to work for the unemployed. They do not want confrontation; they want co-operation—and that is precisely what we intend to achieve.

An Hon. Senator: Then why don’t you resign?

Senator Roblin: Tell that to your Prime Minister.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I want to thank the honourable minister for unburdening himself of all his guilts. He has managed to expunge his conscience and get all the problems of the unemployed off his mind, but it certainly did not add up to anything about topping up unemployment insurance. Be that as it may, at least we know what one minister got from Meach Lake.

Senator Flynn: He wasn’t there.

THE ECONOMY

MEETING OF CABINET AT MEACH LAKE, QUEBEC

Hon. C. William Doody: I wonder whether the Minister of State for Economic Development can report to us on the meeting at Meach Lake in terms of the economic and fiscal policies of the government as of Sunday.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I was not here earlier, but I presume from that question that a similar one has already been asked this evening of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No, don't worry about that. Give your answer.

Senator Olson: In any event, I am surprised that my honourable friend, who has served in a cabinet, would allow his memory to fail him as to the oath he took at the time he joined that cabinet. This was a cabinet meeting. He knows very well that matters discussed at a cabinet meeting, even the agenda, are not to be disclosed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, even with that primitive and somewhat archaic system of cabinet solidarity, in Newfoundland we were permitted to make releases on policy when the meeting ended. I can even remember from that dim, distant part of my career that on matters of social policy social ministers would respond, and on matters of economic policy economic ministers would respond. All I could discover from the meeting at Meach Lake, which was held to discuss the economy and Canada's situation in terms of the economy of today, were the statements made by the Secretary of State, the Honourable Gerald Regan.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The Minister for Sport.

Senator Doody: I feel that the Minister for Sport probably has some sort of ironic interest in the economy, but I would really feel more comfortable if the minister responsible for economic development would report to the Senate on the policy direction taken by the government in terms of the economy of the country as of today, after the meeting at Meach Lake.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I find it unfortunate that my honourable friend chooses to distort matters. From his own experience, he knows very well that after cabinet meetings such as the one at Meach Lake, one of the ministers is assigned the responsibility of issuing a statement or communication. In this case it was the Secretary of State and also the Minister of Justice. If the honourable senator is unable to obtain a copy of those statements, I suppose I will have to do his homework for him. I will be only too glad to do that.

Senator Roblin: There is nothing in those statements.

Senator Doody: I would be quite pleased if the minister would do some homework in that area, since he is the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Economic and Regional Development. Certainly there is nobody in this chamber more qualified to do that kind of homework. I do not think I would cringe from doing the job if I were given that responsibility.

● (2030)

I wonder if the minister has any comments to make on the economic policy of the government? Is there any change at all? Is the recession we are looking at now going to stay in place? Is the unemployment picture going to change? Are there some more cheerful prognostications for the immediate or longer term future? I notice that the Honourable Charles Lapointe, Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism—who must surely by this time have one of the smallest constituencies of cabinet, since people are going out of business day after day after day in alarming numbers—is quoted as saying that if there were a recovery in the United States he is not sure that we would be able to get on the bandwagon.

Is that the assessment of the seriousness of the situation in Canada now, or is there a more pleasant prognosis after Sunday's meeting?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, one of the very serious concerns of the government is that costs of production, and a number of other component parts of our competitive position, are not adjusting as rapidly as is the case with some of our major trading partners. The remarks of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism were made particularly with regard to the United States. It becomes increasingly difficult, or worrisome—whichever term you like best—to see that inflation rates in the United States and Canada are five points apart.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Why?

Senator Olson: In certain months the difference has been even wider.

Senator Balfour: Why?

Senator Olson: Well, it is due to a variety of reasons, but one of the things that we are aware of is that the average wage settlement in Canada is still running four to five points higher than that in the United States, which does, in fact, create difficulty with regard to remaining competitive.

Senator Balfour: Eighteen cents a gallon is another reason.

Senator Olson: Yes, well, we have also benefited from a lower price for energy going into the CPI, for example.

These peculiar little comments, however, that my honourable friend Senator Balfour keeps putting in are really not matters of fact, but matters of opinion, and I disagree with him. I was, if he will recall, asked a question by the Honourable Senator Doody. I suppose if Senator Doody had wanted him to answer the question he might well have directed it to him. Unfortunately, he asked me. He wanted to know why, for example, we were concerned about perhaps not being able to maximize the economic benefit of an upturn when it comes along, and I tried very quietly to give him some of the explanations. They are very intense and valid explanations of some of the problems.

Senator Doody: I certainly appreciate the minister's efforts to answer that question, because it is indeed a very important one.

I got as far as the five-point difference, however, and then we sort of got sidetracked. The reason for the five-point difference was given by the minister as being due to the difference in wage settlements.

Senator Olson: It is not the only reason. I said that that was one of the reasons.

Senator Doody: That is what I said—one of the reasons. It is the only one I heard. I am trying to reconstruct the pattern of conversation.

Senator Olson: Perhaps you should talk to Senator Balfour about that.

Senator Doody: The minister gives higher wage settlements in Canada as being one of the reasons for the five-point difference, but surely the trend being established by the Government of Canada in wage settlements is not very conducive to cooling off the situation that the minister just gave as a reason for the difference in spread. My understanding is that the wage settlements that the Government of Canada has recently made with some bargaining groups have been well in excess of the rate of inflation.

● (2035)

The engineering and land survey group received 29 per cent over two years, which amounts to more than 14 per cent each year. The federal nurses recently received an increase in wages of 12½ per cent, which is hardly the sort of example that encourages the private sector to try to cool wage demands. If that is the only sort of example we can provide to demonstrate the reason for the five-point spread between the American and the Canadian economic performances, I really do not think it is satisfactory.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, although he does not demonstrate it very often, I am sure that the Honourable Senator Doody would like to be fair. It is a matter of fact, if he wants to look into it, that the wage settlements in the federal public service during 1981, for example, were 11.6 per cent. For a long while a policy has been established whereby the federal public sector would follow, not lead, the private sector. The average increase for the public sector in the federal area was almost identical to that of the private sector. It is disturbing to note, however, that during the same period the average provincial government settlement was 13.2 per cent. I would remind my honourable friend that most of those governments are made up of his colleagues.

Senator Doody: Yes, it is pretty difficult to find a government that is not.

Senator Olson: It is also important to note that, at the first ministers' conference, the Prime Minister made what I believe is a sound, well thought out offer.

Senator Balfour: If so, that is the first one he has ever made.

Senator Olson: If my honourable friend wishes, I can go over the formula. The aim of the offer was to reduce that settlement, with a view to setting a good example. As a matter of fact, the offer was turned down by the provincial leaders.

ENERGY

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development which arises out of a speech given recently in Vancouver by Mr. Thomas d'Aquino, the president of the Business Council on National Issues. In that speech, he called upon the government to reassess the National Energy Program and, in part, said:

The evidence is clearer now more than ever. Oil and gas exploration is down considerably; the Program's incentives are not achieving desired results; foreign investment has been greatly curbed; our trading relationships have suffered. All this was predicted a year ago by the Business Council Task Force on Energy Policy. The Government of Canada would not listen then. We are hopeful that it will consider some changes now.

In view of that statement issued by the authoritative Business Council on National Issues through Mr. d'Aquino, its president—who will be known to the minister as a former special assistant to Prime Minister Trudeau—will the minister state whether the government is indeed giving consideration to reassessing the entire National Energy Program and making the important changes advocated by the Business Council?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, it is always amazing to me that some people can demonstrate their hindsight to be somewhere near what is expected of the government in terms of foresight. The honourable senator talks about what happened a year ago. I am sure that he is aware that a year ago at this time we did not appear to be anywhere near reaching agreement between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada. That agreement, of course, was reached on September 1, 1981. Furthermore, there have been a number of significant changes in the international circumstances with respect to supply, price, and a number of other factors which are involved and which have had a profound effect on some of the projections made by the private sector and, indeed, by both levels of government since.

Obviously, any responsible government—I have said it before and I will repeat that I believe we are a very responsible government—takes into account the significant changes in the economic conditions that are prevailing at any one time.

Hon. R. James Balfour: You're joking!

● (2040)

Senator Murray: Is it still the expectation of the government that Canada will be self-sufficient in oil by the end of this decade?

Senator Olson: If the kind of investments are made in time in the projects where we know the resources are in this country, we will be.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: But will they be?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the minister. I am not going to ask him to indulge in any retrospective considerations, but to observe the fact that the Government of Alberta quite recently recognized the bankruptcy of the National Energy Policy Agreement of September 1981 with respect to the production of oil in the province of Alberta and that government has, as a result, drastically altered its royalty regime for oil and gas.

My question is: Does the present Government of Canada recognize that there is a continuing problem there, and does it intend to deal with its half of the equation so that the oil and gas industry of the country may be put back on a successful basis?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my friend knows that in the energy agreement that was entered into on September 1, 1981, that Alberta gave an undertaking to reassess its royalty base.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: They are not playing politics.

Senator Roblin: What about the responsibility of the federal government to deal equitably with this matter. My honourable friend accuses us of hindsight. Well, this is not hindsight, but experience. We know that that industry is starved for cash. Without cash it does not work. It is starved for cash because greedy governments, particularly my honourable friend's government, take too much of the money. Are they going to reconsider their position?

Senator Olson: When, my honourable friend puts a question in that context with such a preamble—

Senator Balfour: Yes or no?

Senator Olson: Well, yes or no—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He has never answered yes or no before so he won't start now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Balfour's questions this evening are "Why?" or they require yes or no answers.

Senator Olson: That kind of squeeze or problem is experienced not only by oil and gas industry but also by a number of other sectors in the Canadian economy, and even more severely in other economies. I do not know how many more times I have to repeat that when there is a significant change in economic circumstances surrounding a sector, it is obvious that any responsible government looks at it.

Senator Flynn: There is.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to hold my honourable friend responsible for the difficulties in other countries because he has far more than he can handle on his plate right here in Canada. What I want to know from him is whether the government is giving some consideration to altering its fiscal regime with respect to the National Energy Program in Alberta to deal with the problem that he has on his own plate.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend never likes us to refer to difficulties outside our borders, but what he does have to accept is that 25 to 30 per cent of our total production is dependent on the economies of other countries because they are the customers for it. When they experience great difficulty—and the Leader of the Government mentioned the forest sector a few minutes ago—that has a profound influence on what happens inside this country. No matter how much he wants to blame the government for it, those economic factors are there just the same. That is the real world.

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Well, the real world is that we happen to be talking about respecting the oil and gas industry. Why does my honourable friend not bring in the textile industry? Why does my honourable friend not bring in the shoe industry? Why does he not bring in the automobile industry? He might just as well. We happen to be talking about oil and gas in western Canada and what can be done to revive that industry, and my honourable friend is dealing with a Canadian industry which is being choked not by exports in international situations but by the policies of this administration. He will not even allow them the fiscal elbowroom to get the stuff out of the ground and sell it to Canadians. He is paying millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money to support the import of foreign oil and is restricting the extraction of that commodity from our own soil.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators—

Senator Roblin: I'm not finished. He better sit down until I'm through with him, because I'm not through with him yet.

Senator Frith: What about a question?

Senator Roblin: I have a question for him all right. Not only does my honourable friend appear to me to be turning a cold shoulder to the real problems of the oil and natural gas industry in Canada, but it appears to me that he also wants to take a little more of the tax cut than he already has. I should like to ask him whether it is the intention of the government to follow through on the implied threat, indeed, the clear statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that they would be taking advantage of the changed cash and profit position of the oil and gas industry in Canada to increase the take of the Government of Canada.

Senator Olson: That is wrong. That is your impression again, but I have learned that you have to separate opinion from fact especially when you are talking. I have to remind my honourable friend that raising his voice in his rhetoric does not change the facts. For example, some of the facts with respect to the shut-in production amounting to over 200,000 barrels a day at the present time has a severe impact on the cash flow of the industry. What he forgets very conveniently over and over again is that it was not the Government of Canada that shut that oil down; it was the government of the Province of Alberta that shut down that production.

Senator Perrault: Shame!

Senator Olson: I have to remind him again that if he or the premier of any producing province or anyone else seriously—

Senator Charbonneau: He's beginning to sound like Lévesque.

An Hon. Senator: Order!

Senator Olson: —seriously believes—

Senator Balfour: Why did they shut it down?

Senator Olson: They did shut it down to the tune of 180,000 barrels a day.

Senator Balfour: Why?

Senator Olson: If they seriously believed that the rest of Canada was going to go without heating oil, and we were going to fail to make alternative arrangements for substitute supplies from some other place, then, of course, they were not displaying the level of intelligence that even a most elementary person would display.

Senator Balfour: Why did Alberta shut it down?

Senator Olson: Of course, those refiners, with the support of the Government of Canada, did in fact make some alternative arrangements. Some of them called, by the way, for longer term agreements. The Government of Canada honours its agreements.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: In addition, we have announced a program of expediting and maximizing Canadian production going into those refineries. That was done on April 1. We intend to move as rapidly as we possibly can on that.

Senator Murray: The policy is a disaster.

Senator Donahoe: Resign!

Senator Olson: Let's not have the kind of rhetoric that tries to lay on this government the responsibility for shutting down Canadian oil production.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend is so selective of his facts—

Senator Olson: Those are the ones you brought up.

Senator Roblin: All right. On April 7 in this chamber we discussed this same question and the minister had no problem in dealing with the Alberta situation because that was not the point in issue. It is the quantities over and above those that were shut off at various times in the province of Alberta that we are talking about. The estimate is that 300,000 to 400,000 barrels will be shut in.

Senator Olson: It is 120,000 barrels.

Senator Roblin: I will believe that when it happens.

Senator Olson: You always multiply by two.

Senator Roblin: Is it my honourable friend's position then that if some other government does something that he does not like, that has results that he does not like and that perhaps some of the rest of us do not like, he is not going to do anything about the permanent ongoing problems of this industry to get itself on its feet? That is either spite or an excuse. Take your choice.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is trying to give an interpretation, that is exactly the opposite to what I said less than five minutes ago. I said that—

Senator Flynn: It is what you said on April 7.

Senator Olson: Yes, I did, but my friend did not understand it then. I said that when there are significant changes in the circumstances a responsible government would look at it, but I am not ready to make the announcement this evening. My honourable friend knows very well that no matter how much he complains about this I am not going to do it. It is only a few days since the Province of Alberta made these changes that they were committed to make on September 1, and now we have to assess the impact of that, and we will make some response in time.

Senator Flynn: Why didn't you say that in the first place?

Senator Roblin: That is a little more like it. It is like extracting teeth to get my honourable friend to say that he is even going to consider it. I think I may have made some yards because on April 7 he was not going to consider it, but this evening, if I understand him correctly, he says that he is going to consider it.

Hon. C. William Doody: The Minister of National Fitness is going to make the announcement.

Senator Frith: Just because the Jets are not in the playoffs!

Senator Roblin: That reproach really hits home. I have to admit that that is a disappointment to me, but—

Senator Frith: You're not blaming us for that?

Senator Roblin: —my honourable friends are not going to be in the playoffs either the next time they hit the electorate.

• (2050)

Let me tell them that. They are going to be left at home, and I can tell my honourable friend that if he wants to present a better image to the public of western Canada he had better have a better oil policy than he now has.

Senator Olson: My only comment, honourable senators, is that it seems as though one has to explain things from two or three different angles, even though one says the same thing, before Senator Roblin understands.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend would give me the simple truth, in the first instance, he would be saved a lot of trouble.

Senator Olson: I said the same thing a few moments ago and some months ago.

Senator Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the minister. The minister mentioned a few moments ago that deals had to be struck for offshore oil because the Alberta government shut in or stopped supplying Canada with 180,000 barrels of oil a day.

I have raised this question with the minister several times during the past couple of years, but it seems to me that the deal which was made to import Mexican crude oil, which is of low quality, was made before the Alberta government shut in its supplies—

Senator Roblin: Long before.

Senator Charbonneau: Long before. Bearing that in mind, could the minister explain the reasoning behind the answer he gave a short while ago?

Senator Olson: Yes, I can explain that, but it would take a little longer than what is considered normal under the rules for Question Period.

Senator Roblin: That did not stop you before.

Senator Olson: There are some explanations that are involved, and I would be pleased to bring a long and detailed explanation as to why some of these diversions had to take place, what the consequences are and, perhaps, how long it will take to remedy them to maximize—which is our determination—the benefit to the Canadian oil industry.

Senator Flynn: You're getting as bad as Paul Martin!

An Hon. Senator: Or worse.

Senator Roblin: That is not fair to Paul Martin.

Senator Charbonneau: I have a further supplementary question for the minister. Would the minister tell us the status of the three mega-projects in the west? I am speaking specifically of Cold Lake, Alsands and the Alaska pipeline. Could the minister answer yes or no to the question: Are those alive or dead?

Senator Olson: No, I cannot give a yes or no answer, because as far as two of them are concerned negotiations are taking place. I believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has already indicated that the government does not intend to discuss these negotiations either through the press or here in Parliament. The negotiations are being conducted on behalf of both levels of government and the consortium involved.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Asselin on April 6 concerning the withdrawal of ambassadors from Argentina.

The Honourable Senator Asselin wanted to know if any countries other than Canada had recalled their ambassadors as of April 6.

The answer is that Belgium also recalled its ambassador for consultation; New Zealand broke off diplomatic relations altogether; and Australia has withdrawn its ambassador from Argentina.

NEWFOUNDLAND

OFFSHORE JURISDICTION—RE-ELECTION OF CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT—EFFECT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on April 7 the Honourable Senator

[Senator Roblin.]

Doody, in commenting on the results of the Newfoundland general election, asked whether the federal government would "come half way in meeting the reasonable proposals of Premier Peckford" on the offshore question. I believe those were his words.

At that time I noted that the federal government stands ready at all times to discuss matters of national interest with provincial governments. He also observed that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had said in the course of a statement made the previous day that some of the oratory by Mr. Peckford during the election did not accurately reflect the position of the federal government.

I can note that references to Newfoundland's policies on offshore jurisdiction made by Premier Peckford during the election campaign were presumably those discussed during negotiations conducted by the two governments prior to the election. The Newfoundland government had been advised that the federal position on offshore jurisdiction was set out in the agreement reached with Nova Scotia on offshore matters on March 2 and made public. However, if the Newfoundland government has any new proposals, the federal government would be very pleased to know about them and to discuss them.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT—BEAUFORT SEA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on April 1 the Honourable Senator Nurgitz asked if the federal government is prepared to give its approval in principle to Dome Petroleum's oil and gas development timetable in the Beaufort Sea. In addition, he asked when the government expects to clarify its position on the timing and pace of Beaufort Sea development, thereby removing any uncertainty currently existing within the industry.

Honourable senators, before the federal government can give approval to production plans associated with an oil or gas discovery, the companies involved must complete delineation drilling to provide some indication of the nature and size of a discovery, and there must be evidence that commercial production can be achieved. The production plan must also be examined in an environmental review process and, as well, the viability of transportation plans must be established. At that stage, the project would receive development plan approval, this being a prerequisite for a production licence. The procedure for government approval is well established and it applies to all production proposals. The timing of that approval depends on the progress made by the companies involved in establishing the overall viability of a production proposal.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked by Senator Murray on March 31 concerning the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program.

The special Industrial Labour Adjustment Program (ILAP) measures were announced in the 1980 budget when a special $350 million fund was established. The Industrial Labour Adjustment Program comprises changes to the Canada Labour Code, as well as specific program elements including community-based industrial labour adjustment measures, industry-specific measures and restructured critical trades skills training. In addition, $50 million of the $350 million ILAP fund was set aside to support special programming under the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. Its objective is to accelerate diversification of community economic bases by reducing present dependency on textile, clothing and footwear industries. A further $25 million was reserved to fund special 1981-82 winter works initiatives.

Since the introduction of the ILAP initiatives, 10 communities have been designated for industrial labour assistance measures, and two sectors have been selected for industry-specific assistance.

Actual expenditures, which I think was a particular concern of Senator Murray's—

Hon. Lowell Murray: They were the only concern.

Senator Frith:—have been somewhat limited because, first, these initiatives required detailed applications and substantial planning time; secondly, there have been delays in parliamentary approval of some program components; and, thirdly, many community designations are quite recent.

By February 28, 1982, commitments of federal funding were as follows:

| | $ Million | Designation Date |
|---------------------------------|------------|------------------|
| Asbestos, Quebec | — | March 25, 1982 |
| Brantford, Ontario | 1.0 | January 21, 1982 |

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe, subject to correction either by Senator Roblin or Senator Flynn, that all orders stand.

Before moving the adjournment of the Senate, I should like to inform honourable senators that I have done a study of the legislative program that might be before us between now and the summer adjournment. I should like to say now, perhaps to invite requests for more details, if any honourable senators are interested in more detail, that as most honourable senators are aware the splitting of the energy bill into eight different bills was accompanied by an agreement that all of those bills be sent to committees of the other place by the end of this month, and that those bills would be the subject of study by committees of the other place during the month of May. I believe the understanding is that there will be a vote by the end of June.

● (2100)

Those appear to be the major items of legislation. There are some 35 bills presently before the House of Commons for consideration, including the eight energy bills. I expect that we will receive some bills during the month of May while the energy bills are being studied in committee.

Furthermore, I believe some initiatives are being taken by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, within whose jurisdiction energy bills fall, to establish a pre-study of these bills to assist us when the bills actually come before us.

That is the program as I see it, and I can give some further detail. I do not mean, in any way, to foreclose further discussion of the legislative program.

Bill S-24, the Canada-Germany Tax Agreement Act, 1982, is now before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The 35 bills before the House of Commons, including the eight energy bills—two or three of which may be most controversial—will certainly make up the “plat principal” of our legislative menu between now and the summer adjournment.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): My honourable friend has made no reference to the expected resolutions and bills in connection with the financial measures proposed in the budget of November 12. May I take it from that that it is unlikely we will be receiving any of those pieces of legislation before the summer adjournment?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I cannot say that. I should have underlined the budget proposals more than I did. I thank Senator Roblin for drawing my attention to that.

My honourable friend knows that at the present time the subject matter of much of that legislation is before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. He is quite correct to include that as another ingredient of the plat principal.

Senator Roblin: I ask my honourable friend to specify which of those financial measures he expects to be considered by this chamber.

Senator Frith: I will try to do that in due course, honourable senators.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): When the deputy leader mentioned the 35 bills, was he referring to the program for the present session? Is the idea that we should not only adjourn at the end of June, but that when we re-convene in the fall we should commence a new session? If I am not mistaken, this rather lengthy session started two years ago on April 14. Would the passage of the 35 bills enable the government to commence a new session in the fall?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I take the point raised by Senator Flynn. However, at this moment I cannot say whether those 35 bills would complete the program, nor can I say that the government may be willing to drop a few of them from the order paper and start a new session. This is exactly the kind of question that I think is reasonable and which I will look into in order to provide further information to the Senate as soon as it is available.

Senator Roblin: What comment would my honourable friend care to make about the fact that the taxpaying public of Canada is twisting in the wind, so to speak? We had a budget on November 12 and, as yet, no legislative steps have been taken to bring it into effect, yet we are told to act as though it is in effect. At regular intervals, we hear of budget changes by press release. There was one the other day in connection with charitable funds. This places the public in a very difficult position. What comfort can my honourable friend offer?

Hon. R. James Balfour: None.

Senator Frith: That is the answer: None, at this time.

I want to express my gratitude to Senator Balfour for furnishing me with such a pungent and simple answer to the question as to what comment I would like to make. I do not think it is appropriate for me to make a comment at the present time.

I understand the difficulty of the taxpayer. It is not an unusual process, but I agree it does have some rather unusual dimensions this year.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Would the Deputy Leader of the Government obtain from the Minister of Finance, or from the appropriate minister, a formal statement of the government's plans with regard to the budget legislation? Some of us are under the clear impression that the plan of the government is that the legislation will be presented sometime within the next month or six weeks, that it will be left for some form of public consultation over the summer months, and that Parliament will not be called upon to discuss or deal with it until the fall.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not know whether I can obtain a formal statement. My intuitive reaction is that I doubt whether the Minister of Finance will authorize me or any other minister to make a statement before he is ready to make one in the other place. When he is ready to make such a statement, I am sure that he will give us an opportunity to inform the Senate in due course.

I will draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the question raised by Senator Murray.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have with me two letters, although I have only one copy of each, unfortunately—

Hon. Martial Asselin: Not enough!

Senator Olson: I have a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Secretary of State of the United States, and the reply of the latter, that are being made, or have already been made, public today, regarding the respective positions of the two governments in connection with the construction period of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline. I expect to have copies of these letters in my possession in a few minutes. Unfortunately they are only in the language in which they were written. I would be prepared to give copies to the honourable gentlemen opposite. If they would like me to read the letters now, I will do so—they are relatively short—or perhaps, if they prefer, we can deal with this matter during Question Period.

I might say, honourable senators, that there have been some questions asked about this subject both here and in the other place. There has also been a lot of press speculation about it during the last few days. Therefore, I think it would be better to clear up the positions of the respective governments.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Read them when you are better equipped.

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Barrow, Hicks, Lewis and Steuart be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Cottreau, Graham, Buckwold and Langlois on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA SURVEY

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development.

A Conference Board survey, released yesterday, found that 75 per cent of Canada's top executives feel that it is a bad time to invest, as compared to 55 per cent three months ago, and that one-third of the chief executive officers surveyed planned to cut back on investments which had originally been scheduled for the next six months.

Does the minister intend to take measures to offset this alarming state of affairs?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, if you read the rest of the article—and I read it—you will see that according to what was reported of the Conference Board survey a variety of reasons was given, but more particularly that of a downturn in the economy.

It is difficult to answer the question the way it was put, because whether we intend to take steps to offset that or not, I do not believe the government intends to take steps to offset the total amount of investment that is referred to.

● (1405)

However, we certainly are extremely concerned about this downturn in the international economy, and we want to take such measures as are appropriate in the circumstances. We must also bear in mind one other thing stated by these business leaders, if that is how they are described, and that is that high interest rates, inflation and the relationship between those two factors also have dramatic effects on their investment intentions.

Senator Charbonneau: Is the minister telling us that the government has absolutely no policy to put forward in an effort to improve the investment climate in this country?

Senator Olson: No, the minister is not saying that at all. That was not the question asked by the honourable senator a moment ago. He asked whether or not the government had any policies to offset or substitute for this decline in investment intentions. I answered his question honestly when I said that we do not have any intentions to fully substitute for the amount that is involved in normal investment by the private sector.

Senator Charbonneau: I do not think that I stated my question in those terms. When I said "measures to offset," I did so assuming that "measures" can mean policies of this government. I think those policies are not conducive to investment. I am asking the minister whether those policies will be changed in order to offset this sad state of affairs.

Senator Olson: Again, it becomes a matter of opinion. My honourable friend is like his deputy leader in that his opinions are not necessarily facts.

The point remains that one of the dampening effects on investment intention is the level of interest rates and, indeed, the competitive position of Canadian industries in the international market. Whether my honourable friend agrees or not, the government does have policies in effect at present to try to cope with that situation. We believe that we must have in effect a fiscal and a monetary policy that will cool off inflation and, at the same time, bring about a decline in interest rates so that they are at least comparable to those of our international competitors. Only when there is some sign that this is in effect will the confidence in further investment in Canada be restored. Investors will be satisfied only when they can be competitive in Canada. Furthermore, we have heard from a number of senior businessmen over the last few days indications that they have been losing relative to their competitors in the international market.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had a question for the Honourable Senator Argue, in view of the fact that he is the only member of the government who participated in the election in Saskatchewan. I was hoping he would be here today to give us his interpretation of the result. I do not know which side of the fence he was on, but some people have told me that he was supporting Mr. Goodale, the Leader of the Liberal Party of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Unlikely!

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I would like to hear Senator Argue's interpretation of the result of the election, especially in light of the Crowsnest announcement that was made by the government some months ago. Does the Leader of the Government know where Senator Argue is and why he is not present? Is he in hiding?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I note that the Honourable Senator Argue is absent this afternoon. He is occupied in serving the public with his usual ability.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Flynn: Agreed! You could not have said it better. In the interests of the country, he is absent.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE REQUESTED FOR SMALL- AND MEDIUM-SIZE BUSINESSES

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development.

Recently, Quebec and federal ministers met in order to determine how unemployment in Quebec could be reduced and assistance provided to small- and medium-size businesses, which are now in dire straits. After the meeting, the federal government said that Ottawa and the provincial government both had their own programs and that the meeting did not seem to have resulted in any breakthrough.

However, the Quebec government has decided to help small- and medium-size businesses through a $200 million investment. The Minister of Industry and Commerce, Mr. Biron, said yesterday that he wanted to meet with the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to see whether the federal government was willing to take part in this program to help small- and medium-size businesses. The minister should know that the amount invested by Quebec will create 25,000 jobs and that 50,000 jobs could be created in small- and medium-size businesses if the federal government agreed to invest in this program jointly with Quebec.

Has the minister heard whether the federal government would be willing to participate in this program, and if so, how?

● (1410)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the first thing I will have to do is check with my colleague, the minister involved in the discussions, in order to have his view of what took place. I do not have that information in front of me, nor have I had a direct conversation with him about this meeting. I will undertake to do that, and perhaps I will receive a reply for my honourable friend.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SENIOR STAFF APPOINTMENTS

Hon. John Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In his column on the Department of External Affairs that appeared in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen, Richard Gwyn said that two decades ago there was an "under-secretary, comparable to the deputy minister at the head of all other government departments, and four assistant under-secretaries." He followed that by saying:

At the top of External Affairs there are now 42 assistant under-secretaries. Also nine assistant deputy ministers. And two deputy ministers. And, as the last tier of the wedding cake, a single, solitary under-secretary."

I realize that he will have to take this question as notice, but how many assistant under-secretaries are there actually in the department today, and how many assistant deputy ministers?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: And when were they appointed?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice, honourable senators, but I should like to point out that the period referred to has seen a substantial development in the range and extent of Canada's relations with other nations of the world, and we have witnessed the evolution and implementation of a highly successful foreign policy.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Martial Asselin: My question is for the Leader of the Government. In view of the critical situation between Argentina and Great Britain concerning the Falkland Islands—

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: “Malouines” in French.

Senator Asselin: “Malouines”, if you insist. I thought that the minister would consider it his duty to report to the Senate on the present critical situation. Could he tell us, for instance, what role Canada is playing as mediator between the two parties involved to prevent the war which seems imminent?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do have information on the subject of the Falkland Islands crisis and I will provide that information to honourable senators now, as I know there is general interest in the matter. Actually, I have information relating to a number of aspects of the situation.

On April 12 the government imposed a ban on imports into Canada of all goods of Argentine origin. I will cite to you the legal authority used, the time when the ban will be in force and the value of the trade involved.

The Export and Import Permits Act provides that the Governor in Council may establish a list of goods he deems it necessary to control for various reasons inter alia to implement an intergovernmental arrangement or commitment. Such arrangements are now being finalized with the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community. The necessary Order in Council required to implement the decision should be signed shortly.

With respect to the value of the trade, Canadian imports from Argentina were in the order of $36 million in 1980, and $79 million in 1981.

With respect to how long the ban on Argentine imports will be in force, that will depend on events in the South Atlantic.

The government will keep this and other measures adopted under review. It is our hope that a mutually agreeable peaceful solution to the Falkland Islands crisis can be reached and that, therefore, the Canadian sanctions can be revoked as soon as possible.

• (1415)

I come now to the question: How will Canadian importers who have Argentine goods en route be protected from losses resulting from the ban on the importation of Argentine goods?

Once the order in council is signed a notice to importers will be widely distributed. This notice will outline the details of the implementation of the importation ban. There will be “grandfather” procedures aimed at protecting Canadian importers who may, for example, already have paid for Argentine goods which are still en route. Our European allies are adopting similar procedures.

As far as the suspension of export credits is concerned, the question was asked: The government took its decision on April 12 to suspend official export credits for new transactions with Argentina. What does the government mean by “new” transactions?

All transactions for which the Export Development Corporation had given, as of April 13, a documented indication of interest to consider the provision of financing—subject, of course, to standard EDC evaluation criteria—will be considered “prior,” not “new,” transactions. We understand that most of our European allies are taking a similar approach.

The next question is: If armed conflict between Argentina and the United Kingdom breaks out in the South Atlantic, will the government break diplomatic relations with Argentina, which is the clear aggressor in this affair?

As American mediation efforts are still taking place, it would be most inappropriate to engage in public speculation as to whether armed conflict might occur and what Canadian responses might follow from such conflict. We have urged both parties to make every attempt to achieve a mutually agreeable diplomatic solution, and representations have been made to that effect.

Senator Asselin asked about the return of the Canadian ambassador.

Ambassador Fulford was recalled to Canada on April 5 for consultations. As the Government of Canada was most concerned about Argentina's unjustifiable use of force, we ordered a full review of Canada's relations with that country. The ambassador's presence in Ottawa enabled us to consult fully and quickly with him in this regard. The government subsequently, on April 12, announced several measures aimed at demonstrating, in concrete terms, our firm disapproval of the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands. Now that these measures have been implemented, we believe Ambassador Fulford's presence in Buenos Aires can only help us to monitor developments in Argentina and to represent fully and forcefully Canada's interests during this difficult period.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Does the material the Leader of the Government has contain any reference to assistance that Canada may be giving to Argentina, either technically or by way of the export development fund, with respect to the Candu nuclear reactor that is being built there?

Senator Perrault: I have information on the reactor and I would be pleased to provide all the information made available to me. As the Prime Minister stated last Friday, there was a series of questions concerning leaked documents, and perhaps the reports on those leaked documents promoted the honourable senator's question.

This is a serious matter, and the police are investigating it. Canada-Argentina nuclear relations take place under a January 1976 bilateral agreement that meets the requirements of Canada's December 1974 policy—that is, non-explosive use commitment, prior consent on retransfers and reprocessing, fallback safeguards and physical protection. Canada-Argentina nuclear co-operation is restricted to the Embalse reactor and the material, nuclear material, equipment and technology necessary for that reactor.

Argentina has been clearly advised by this and previous governments that any future nuclear co-operation with Canada is contingent on Argentina satisfying the additional requirements of Canada's December 1976 policy—that is, that Argentina ratify the NPT or make an equivalent non-proliferation commitment and accept full-scope safeguards on all its nuclear activities.

The Embalse reactor and all nuclear exports from Canada to Argentina are subject to IAEA safeguards. Argentina, however, has not signed the NPT or put all of its nuclear activities under safeguards. This falls short of Canadian policy and is therefore a matter of continuing concern to us.

● (1420)

Questions have been asked as to why the Embalse project is going forward.

In 1976 the Canadian government decided to proceed with construction of the Embalse reactor, and we see no reason to change our position at the present time. The January 1976 bilateral agreement and related safeguards agreements with the IAEA satisfy Canadian policy that our nuclear exports should not be used for military or explosive purposes. Canada's December 1976 policy covers further multilateral aspects of which we are not the sole guardian.

The shipment of fuel for the Embalse reactor referred to in the newspaper article a few days ago is part of the AECL's contractual commitment and for that reason has been permitted to go forward. It is being fabricated from Argentine-origin uranium imported into Canada for that purpose in 1981.

We are very closely monitoring the situation with respect to AECL personnel in Argentina, but we have no plans to remove the AECL personnel at the present time. The approximately 71 AECL employees at the site are there to ensure, as far as possible, that the project is brought to a successful conclusion.

Construction at the site is 95 per cent completed. The reactor is in the early stages of commissioning, and the expected completion date of the project is April 1983.

It is inaccurate to say that Candu reactors are the most difficult to safeguard. The Candu has unique characteristics that have to be taken into account in developing safeguard systems. Canada has been very active in devoting financial and personnel resources in support of the IAEA in the development of such systems. This has resulted in the most comprehensive analysis of safeguards procedures for a nuclear reactor that has ever been carried out. We are in the final stages of commissioning a full-scale operational safeguards system that will come into effect at two Canadian reactors—Gentilly 2 and Point Lepreau—in a matter of months.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What is the date of that document?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is dated April 26.

No material has yet been received on the subject of further financing of reactors.

Senator Asselin: Has the Leader of the Government stated that, if an armed conflict occurs in that area, our country will break diplomatic relations with Argentina?

Senator Flynn: That is what he said.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question was: If armed conflict between Argentina and the United Kingdom breaks out in the South Atlantic, will the government break diplomatic relations with Argentina, which is the clear aggressor in this affair?

The answer is: As American mediation efforts are still taking place, it would be most inappropriate to engage in public speculation as to whether armed conflict might occur and what Canadian responses might follow from such conflict.

We would urge both parties to make every attempt to achieve a mutually agreeable diplomatic solution. We are trying to play a constructive role in preventing armed conflict from breaking out.

Senator Flynn: That was the situation five days ago. What about today; do you suggest that there is no armed conflict?

Senator Perrault: No, there is no armed conflict, as yet.

Senator Flynn: Was the re-taking of South Georgia done without arms?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It was done by peaceful osmosis—no conflict involved.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators are aware of the delicate nature of this international situation. An announcement was made this morning, I understand, by public news sources, of a British sea and air blockade. This was announced this morning by the Government of the United Kingdom. That does not mean that efforts cannot proceed to attempt to prevent full-scale warfare and large-scale conflict breaking out. Canada is trying to play a constructive role in preventing that kind of conflict.

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting that mediation by the U.S. Secretary of State is continuing? I thought that was abandoned at least three days ago.

Senator Perrault: There were some reports that it had been abandoned but, as of this morning, efforts are still being made by the Secretary of State of the United States. There are reports of efforts being made by other countries to resolve this matter peaceably.

● (1425)

Senator Flynn: What stage must their differences reach before the government considers that they are in armed conflict, and at what point will we consider the idea of breaking off relations? Must there be an invasion of Argentina, or what?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can only repeat the words provided for me by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that it would be "most inappropriate to engage in public speculation as to whether armed conflict might occur"—

Senator Flynn: Might occur!

Senator Perrault:—"and what Canadian responses might follow such a conflict."

Senator Roblin: May I ask my honourable friend to clarify the meaning of the expression "armed conflict" in this discussion, because it appears to be somewhat misty?

I had the impression that when the Argentine soldiers invaded the Falkland Islands they carried arms, and by force of arms compelled the British troops to go somewhere else. I was also under the impression that some people were killed when the Argentines took over South Georgia in the first place. It seems to me that that was armed conflict, but obviously that does not appear to be the definition of "armed conflict" which would be accepted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

We certainly do not want any bloodshed, nor do we want to fish in troubled waters, but it would be helpful to get a more precise definition of the limits of Canadian policy with respect to armed conflict and our attitude toward the whole problem.

It seems to me that it is much too hazy to leave it in the position in which my honourable friend has left it, and we need a more precise definition of what the government's policy goals are in this respect.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I think that the Honourable Senator Roblin is aware of the fact that there has been no declaration of war either by Argentina or the Government of Great Britain. This creates a situation where some of the facts remain unclear.

What we do know, as far as recent military developments are concerned, is that on Sunday, April 25, British forces landed on the South Georgia Islands. Apparently, some casualties were recorded. An Argentine submarine was also reportedly attacked.

In reply to that, it can be said that it has been Canada's firmly stated view from the beginning of this crisis that, without prejudging the eventually negotiated disposition of the question of sovereignty, Argentina is clearly in violation of the U.N. Charter and the U.N. Security Council.

The government deeply regrets that force had to be used in the re-taking of the South Georgias and urges both the United Kingdom and Argentina to intensify mediation efforts in order to avoid the possibility of much heavier bloodshed with respect to the Falkland Islands proper.

It is still our view that the United States is best situated to mediate.

Canada has made it clear on various occasions to British, Argentine and American authorities that we would study most closely any request from the principal parties to the dispute to participate at some stage in the mediation process. Canada has not yet been so approached.

The suggestion has been advanced that a state of war exists between Argentina and Great Britain, yet I understand that news people from both countries circulate with relative freedom in both Argentina and the United Kingdom. There have been no reported actions against British citizens in Argentina. Apparently, there has been no establishment of civilian detention camps. If there is war, it is very much a "twilight" war, at least at this stage.

There may be a real opportunity for a peaceful settlement, which would prevent a major conflict.

Senator Roblin: I have to agree with my honourable friend that declarations of war seem to be out of style these days. Wars take place without any formal declaration, as we used to know the meaning of that term, but that is not the point; the point is the definition of the expression "armed conflict". By any normal definition of "armed conflict," I submit we are in a situation where we are witnessing armed conflict. I should like the government to re-examine that statement and decide whether they would not want to give us another expression of their policy because, to the ordinary listener, it would appear that there is a state of armed conflict and the government is trying to say there is not. Whatever the more diplomatic language might be, I think my honourable friend ought to provide us with a clearer statement.

● (1430)

I leave that with him, but will now ask him a few questions about the nuclear power situation in Argentina. Am I correct in understanding from what he said that the Argentines have not subscribed to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I think it would be helpful to bring a statement on this question and the previous one to the Senate tomorrow afternoon. As far as the references to armed conflict are concerned, I fail to see the object of the question. The Argentines have stated that there is no armed conflict and the British say there is no armed conflict. It is a rather good reason then for Canada to state that, indeed, there is no armed conflict. There are the beginnings of a possible conflict, but I will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs for a statement which can be brought to the Senate tomorrow afternoon. I think the important thing is that Canada has expressed its willingness to mediate, to assist and to help achieve a peaceful settlement.

Senator Roblin: I dare say the 20 Argentine soldiers who were killed on South Georgia Island in the first instance would probably think that an armed conflict did take place.

Senator Perrault: Who said that there were 20 Argentines soldiers killed?

Senator Roblin: It was reported by British troops to the British press that that was the case when South Georgia Island was taken over on the first occasion. However, we are not getting anywhere with this argument so I leave my request with my honourable friend.

I should like him to tell me, in addition to my question about the non-proliferation treaty, whether or not I understood him correctly to say that the Argentines also refused to have an inspection of their nuclear establishment and, if so, what safeguards there are that the Government of Argentina will not take advantage of the fact that they have our nuclear expertise there and that they may develop fissionable material that can be used for bombs and military purposes. What is my honourable friend's assessment of the likelihood of that situation being violated?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the questions will be taken as notice.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it is a supplementary to the very interesting and timely question of my colleague, Senator Asselin, on the Falkland Islands' situation. It concerns the activities of the OAS. We all remember a few years ago when the government announced with considerable fanfare that Canada was assuming the status and role of a permanent observer there, which is the next best thing to being a member.

In these recent and very important discussions at the OAS, I am wondering whether the Canadian chair has been filled, whether the Canadian representative has been asked to make this country's views known, and, if he did so, in general what sort of discussions have been taking place between Canada and the members of the OAS who, as we know, have been anxious for our country to join that body for many years. In light of the extremely important international issues, it seems to me that this is a crucial time with respect to Canada's role in Latin America. If the minister does not have that information perhaps he would bring it to us tomorrow, because this strikes me as being a highly significant phase in our intra-hemispheric diplomacy.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the questions will be taken as notice.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether it is the intention of the government to withhold the export permit for the supply of 3,000 nuclear fuel bundles to the Argentines from various Canadian sources.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that question was answered earlier this afternoon.

Senator Asselin: The minister said he intended to make an official statement tomorrow on this matter.

Senator Perrault: I said I would make an updated statement.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Asselin: Before he makes his statement tomorrow, would the leader provide a copy of it in advance to the official opposition?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will certainly strive to provide an advance copy for the opposition.

[Translation]

Senator Leblanc: During a television interview, a British member of Parliament is reported as having said that if the mediation efforts of the American Secretary of State were to fail, there had been talk in Westminster lobbies of offering the role of mediator to the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau. Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether this is a fact or simply a rumor?

Senator Asselin: Mr. Trudeau does not like war!

• (1435)

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

THE ECONOMY

BUDGET PROJECTIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development, based on the fact that Mr. MacEachen's budget had projected that the unemployment rate would be 7.8 per cent during this year. Today the Department of Finance projects that the unemployment rate will be 9.2 per cent. Further, the budget projected real GNP growth of 2.2 per cent, whereas the Department of Finance is now projecting no growth; it is projecting a rate of minus 0.5 per cent.

In view of the fact that those important assumptions of Mr. MacEachen have turned out to be so wildly wrong, can the minister explain why a new budget is not now in order?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, it is correct that there have been some changes—

Senator Murray: More than 300 per cent wrong.

Senator Olson: There are perhaps six significant changes in the economic performance concerning projections of unemployment levels and a number of other things, all, of course, related to a downturn in the economy. There is no question about that.

My honourable friend's next question was whether or not the overall thrust of the budget is or is not appropriate for dealing with those problems. I could repeat a lot of what I said yesterday about the war against inflation and all of the investment costs that go along with that, but it is our view that the main thrust of the budget, as stated at the time, is appropriate in dealing with the root causes of most of the other problems.

ENERGY

EAST COAST—OWNERSHIP OF OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have eight delayed answers, some of which are rather long.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What else is new?

Senator Olson: If honourable senators would like me to read them, they will receive a lot of information; but if they would prefer to read them quietly in their offices later on, I will gladly file them as though they had been read.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I rise on a point of order. Since the minister has clearly indicated that he does not understand the answers, why should they not be appended to today's proceedings? That would enable those honourable senators who wish to ask questions to make further inquiries.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the last thing I want to do today is be provocative, but that is exactly what my honourable friend knew I was leading up to. Some of the answers are rather long. Perhaps I could identify them and suggest that they be printed in Hansard as though they had been read.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Smith on March 16 concerning ownership of offshore resources on the east coast.

I can inform the honourable senator that in the negotiation of new exploration agreements with existing holders of exploration rights on the Canada Lands, the government is implementing a selection process under which 50 per cent of the lands now under permit will revert to the Crown over the life of the new agreements. In applying this system, the government will ensure that company exploration programs are not impeded. If, in any particular case, a reversion of 50 per cent would prevent a company from drilling the number of prospects it wished, the general standard would be relaxed to enable the company to maintain its desired level of activity during the term of the agreement.

The government's purpose in introducing this new regime is to ensure that landholdings correspond more closely to the industry's ability to explore them. Most of the exploration rights which existed under the previous regime covered tracts of land that were large by world standards. As the majority of permits had been held for over fifteen years, companies had sufficient opportunity to identify the most promising areas for future exploration. The new system will ensure that these prospective lands can be retained: explorers will retain all lands on which significant discoveries have already been made and all prospects which they commit to drill during the life of the new agreements. In addition, explorers will be given the first opportunity to select other lands which they wish to retain without making any drilling commitments. The effect of this system will be to allow companies to keep all discoveries made either before the new agreements were put in place or during their terms. Only lands which companies are not prepared to drill will be subject to reversion.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Murray on April 7 concerning GATT and Canada-U.S. relations.

I am informed that on February 17 Canadian officials met in Geneva with U.S. officials in response to the U.S.A. request for consultations under Article XXII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade regarding U.S. concerns about certain practices under the Foreign Investment Review Act. The U.S. concerns generally relate to the undertakings given under the FIR Act with respect to sourcing in Canada and with respect to export and to their consistency with international obligations under the General Agreement. The consultations provided an opportunity for both sides to review the practices in question as they pertain to the GATT. At that meeting, Canada undertook to give full consideration to the U.S.A. representation.

It is my understanding that following careful examination of the matter, our government maintained that the practices referred to in those consultations are consistent with our international obligations under the GATT panel in accordance with internationally accepted procedures. The U.S. Administration has been informed of our government's position. Accordingly on March 31, in response to the concerns raised by the U.S.A. and their request the GATT Council agreed that a panel will be established in the near future.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

TQ&M PIPELINE—COMPLETION DATE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I now come to a question raised by Senator Smith concerning the reasons for the delay in the original target date for the completion of the TQ&M pipeline.

The dates for commencement and completion of the maritime portion of the TQ&M pipeline were given to the honourable senator on April 6. Since then I have made several inquiries on his behalf and have been informed that the reasons for delay are associated with the Quebec, not the maritime portion of the line.

Initially there were start-up difficulties related to financing in Quebec. In addition, I understand there were also routing problems and the route from Montreal to Quebec City had to be changed. As well, I am sure the honourable senator is aware of labour difficulties, including work slowdowns and stoppages, which have contributed to the delays on the Quebec portion.

Hopefully all of these problems have been resolved and the Quebec portion can be continued so that no further delays will interfere with the commencement of the maritime line.

THE ECONOMY

QUEBEC—BUSINESS FAILURES—NUMBER IN RECEIPT OF RDIA GRANT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I now come to the reply to a question raised on March 10 by Senator Marshall which concerned recovery of RDIA grants from bankrupt businesses in Quebec.

I have been informed that two companies in receipt of RDIA grants in Quebec have filed for bankruptcy. The files of these two companies were reviewed and claims for recovery of funds through the normal procedures practised during cases of bankruptcy have already been made in one case, and are now being made in the other.

FORESTRY

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have here a reply to a question raised by Senator McElman concerning federal funding for the Forest Research Centre in New Brunswick.

I can inform the honourable senator that a decision on this matter is expected shortly. I will endeavour to keep him apprised of any developments in this regard.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

IRAQ—CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT WITH GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question raised on March 30 by Senator Asselin regarding the cancellation by Iraq of a contract with General Motors for an order of 12,000 Malibu cars.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): There is a lot of good bedtime reading here.

Senator Olson: Well, you know, honourable senators, the honourable senator was asking me to do his homework for him and make some inquiries, and I have done that. That is what is in the reply.

Hon. Martial Asselin: You have the people to get the information; I do not.

Senator Olson: You do too, if you want to use them. When I was in the opposition I had one secretary, and I did more of this kind of work than I see in a week here.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): That goes back to when you were a Social Crediter.

Senator Olson: You had to work harder to stay in office then.

Senator Flynn: And you didn't.

Senator Olson: I did for a while.

[Senator Olson.]

I am informed that last year, further to a sale of 13,500 Malibu passenger cars to Iraq by General Motors Market Development Ltd, the company signed an amendment to the contract for an additional order of 12,000 cars as well as an option for 20,000. The contract contained a clause which made it subject to the approval of the Iraqi higher authorities. It seems that General Motors produced the cars prior to receiving the letter of credit and the final approval from the Iraqis. In spite of my colleague the Minister of International Trade's personal intervention with the Iraqi Minister of Trade, it would appear that the mechanical problems of the original 13,500 (transmissions, clutches, starters and air filters) although they were being corrected by a team of GM technicians in Iraq, convinced the Iraqis that they should not confirm their intention to complete the order.

General Motors Market Development Ltd. had contracted an insurance policy with the Export Development Corporation for 90 per cent of the sale value or a maximum of US$65 million. When the crown corporation did not extend that insurance policy on its expiry date at the end of February, the company on the advice of its lawyers filed a claim. EDC is presently reviewing the necessary documentation to determine what its obligations should be under the terms of its policy with General Motors Market Development.

With regard to a question raised by Senator Roblin on the same subject I can inform him that it is my understanding that the Export Development Board will not be investigating this matter. As previously stated, the Export Development Corporation is presently reviewing the situation.

ENERGY

COLD LAKE, ALBERTA—HEAVY OIL PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I would now like to respond to a question raised on March 30 by Senator Roblin concerning the Cold Lake project in Alberta.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is deader than mutton now, but you might as well put your reply on the record.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator has indicated his concern over the repayment of the $40 million advanced to Imperial Oil by Petro-Canada. I would like to refer the honourable senator to Bill C-101, an Act to amend the Petro-Canada Act, which received first reading on April 5. Section 10(1) of the bill states:

Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the Minister of Finance may pay to Petro-Canada (in this section referred to as the "Corporation") out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund a sum not exceeding . . .

(b) fifty million dollars in respect of amounts used by the Corporation to make advances to Imperial Oil Limited in order to maintain the Cold Lake Project in existence pursuant to the direction set out in Order in Council P.C. 1981-875 of March 26, 1981.

Of course, this bill must receive royal assent before any refunds would be forwarded to Petro-Canada as repayment of the $40 million that the corporation advanced to Imperial pursuant to the March, 1981, agreement.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

WORK-SHARING PROGRAMS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the last reply I have is to a question raised on April 7 by Senator Muir with regard to work-sharing programs.

A report evaluating the work-sharing program was completed in November, 1980. The report concluded that there was insufficient evidence, given the then current economic conditions, that the benefits of a full-scale program would be sufficient to warrant the additional cost. The report went on to conclude that should the unemployment rate rise above the levels prevalent at that time, then the additional cost of the program might seem worthwhile.

At the time this report was published, no new work-sharing agreements had been signed and, in fact, the program was not reactivated until December, 1981.

The main reason for reviving the program was the fact it could respond immediately to the deteriorating employment situation. The program could prevent a large number of indeterminate and short-term layoffs in a number of regions and industries. Given that the short run economic outlook is bleak, this program remains an attractive alternative to job creation programs that would, in all likelihood, have to be implemented to deal with worsening unemployment.

With reference to the honourable senator's questions concerning the cost of these programs, the evaluation of the work-sharing projects in effect during 1977, 1978 and 1979 indicated that the payout from work-sharing benefits was 2.4 times greater than they would otherwise have been if only regular U.I. benefits were available.

The evaluation pointed to the waiving of the two-week waiting period and to the automatic re-qualification of work-sharing benefits for normal benefits should a subsequent layoff occur. Of course, these extra costs may not in fact materialize because employees may keep their jobs. I would like to emphasize, however, that there are many advantages to work-sharing which were not taken into consideration:

- Employees in a work-sharing unit get more wages and benefits than if they were laid off.
- By not being laid off, workers maintain their skills and work habits.
- An employee is spared the uncertainties and hardships that come with total unemployment.
- The employer gains too. The work force remains intact and this eliminates the need to recruit and retrain when production is again increased.

I would suggest to the honourable senator that these benefits should be given every consideration.

THE BUDGET

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Honourable Senator Olson.

In November 1981, and in December 1981, I asked the honourable minister for a list of plants that were imposing layoffs as a result of the government's unemployment policy. At that time the minister assured me that he would provide an answer. Would he now provide the answer, or would he state that the answer is that one of the government mega-projects has failed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not believe, subject to identifying the page in Hansard, that I gave an undertaking to do that kind of work. I think I did give some very valid explanations to my honourable friend, although in the light of the nature and structure of the question he asked at that time it was nearly impossible to answer. Furthermore, the government does not have a policy for promoting unemployment.

Senator Phillips: May I say to the minister that he specifically stated he would provide an answer, and if he wishes I will be happy to send him a copy of the Hansard which he has not read.

Senator Olson: I would be glad to see that, because my memory is usually accurate on these matters.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Your memory is not all that good.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You are the only one to believe that.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES AS CAUSES OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—
DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "Child at Risk", tabled in the Senate on 16th October, 1980.—(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I wonder if I may speak on this order in place of Senator Bonnell.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I want to make a few remarks today concerning the report entitled: "Child at Risk," tabled in the Senate on October 16, 1980. Those who have spoken before me on the report have done an excellent job of describing its contents, and I will not repeat what they have said.

I hope that all young lawyers who will act for the defence during their careers, together with every magistrate and judge, will have a copy of the report in their libraries, and that they will take the time to read this report, because it will help them to gain some insight into the real reasons why the people they deal with are in the courts.

Honourable senators, the remarks I make today are in praise of Senator McGrand, who showed great perseverance and strength in pushing the rest of us to sit on his committee and attend its meetings. I want to praise him especially for the time and effort he put into the selection and pursuit of the many excellent witnesses who appeared before the committee. The subject matter was fascinating, and the witnesses interesting and informative.

When I first came to the Senate in 1975 I was seated directly behind Senator McGrand. Whenever I missed a meeting I could be sure to receive a stern look and a few well chosen words to point out that his committee meetings should be attended. The fact that I was from the Yukon and that we were at that time discussing the Alaska Highway pipeline legislation, was not sufficient excuse, in his opinion, for my not being at his meetings. He had a way of intimidating me which made it easier for me to attend his meetings than to find excuses for not being there.

Honourable senators, "Child at Risk" is a good report. It contains much useful information, which will be of help to many young people who are unfortunate enough to be affected by the pre-natal and post-natal conditions described in it. While "Child at Risk" is a Senate report, and many people worked long hours to produce it, it bears the personal stamp of Senator McGrand. I personally want to thank him for the time and effort he put into the report, and I think that we, as senators, should all be very proud of the work he has done on our behalf.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Bonnell, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

REFORM—MOTION RE ELECTION OF MEMBERS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C.:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

[Senator Lucier.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, Senator Phillips told me he had a point of order, but I notice he is not here.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think Senator Phillips wants to ask Senator Bosa if he will be speaking to this matter soon, since he may have something to say on it himself.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Leblanc proposes to speak on this order tomorrow, and that Senator Bosa will be yielding to him. We will see what happens after that.

The Hon. the Speaker: I notice that Senator Phillips is now in his seat, so he may raise his point of order.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, to be perfectly honest about it, I went out for a smoke, expecting a little more time to be consumed.

I presume we are now on Order No. 8, the resumption of the debate on the motion by Senator Roblin, seconded by Senator Deschatelets, and, I would say, originated by Senator Frith.

My question is: When do we intend to proceed with this item? Senator Frith expressed urgency on the subject when he went to the press, but that was two months ago. It has taken him longer to make his notes and prepare his speech than it took the British armada to get from England to the Falkland Islands. Honourable senators, I might say that at times I thought the British armada was sailing in reverse. I ask the honourable senator: What is the problem? Is Senator Frith prohibited from speaking by the Prime Minister? I would not suggest that he is prohibited by the Leader of the Government, because normally Senator Frith gives instructions to the Leader of the Government. What is the delay? Can the honourable senator explain the two-month delay and can he tell us when he intends to proceed?

● (1450)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we spoke of this subject while Senator Phillips was out having a smoke, but I see that he seems to have a sore tooth again today, so I point out to him that the order stands in the name of Senator Bosa, not in my name. While Senator Phillips was out of the chamber briefly, I explained that it is my understanding that Senator Leblanc is proceeding with this order tomorrow and that Senator Bosa will yield to Senator Leblanc for that purpose. Therefore, on his question about when something is going to happen on this order, the short answer is: Tomorrow.

Senator Phillips: I appreciate the reply of the Honourable Senator Frith, but there are two points that rather puzzle me. I address Senator Frith as an individual—not, as I usually address him, as Deputy Leader of the Government or as boss of the Grits—when I ask him why the matter was so urgent when he went to the press. It was absolutely necessary at that time that Senator Frith be in the forefront of reform. I ask him, now, where in the Falkland Islands is he? Why has he not spoken?

I have no hesitation in saying that, for various reasons, when I went to Florida on a holiday, one of the things that worried me greatly was the possibility of my missing his remarks.

Senator Frith: I'll bet you hardly slept a wink!

Senator Phillips: Senator Bosa has been adjourning this matter for two months. I have, in the past, heard him say that the Senate should not have anything to say in the legislative process.

Honourable senators, I would like to hear from both these gentlemen before I speak. Why can they not give me their views? Are they being held back, are they waiting for instructions, or are they simply afraid?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, to set the record straight—for the sake of those who read it—the motion to which Senator Phillips is speaking is Order No. 8, a motion of Senator Roblin and one I had nothing to do with.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: I wouldn't say that!

Senator Frith: I may have provoked it, true. The item I want to hear about from all senators—including Senator Phillips—is the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. It also deals with the question of Senate reform.

I can honestly say that I have not been worried about waiting to hear what Senator Phillips has to say on this subject. But we welcome his views on it, and I do not understand why he must wait until he hears my views, or those of anyone else, before speaking himself. What is he afraid of?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am not afraid of anything, including the Honourable Senator Frith. This is a very simple matter. Normally, the loyal followers of Senator Frith are not allowed to speak unless he approves of the subject matter in advance; Senator Frith is not allowed to speak unless he has his speech approved by the office of the Prime Minister. I am simply waiting to find out the official position of the office of the Prime Minister. Let us have two or three honourable senators—perhaps Senator Bosa, perhaps Senator Bonnell, perhaps even Senator Godfrey, who will hold his nose and read his notes—deliver their speeches and give me the official Liberal position. Could I have that before I reply?

It is unusual, honourable senators, to have three Conservatives give their viewpoints on a motion only to find that not a single, solitary Grit is interested enough in the Prime Minister's views to stand up and give that viewpoint. I repeat, it is an unusual situation and all I ask of the Grits is to stand up and give the viewpoint of the Prime Minister. Then I will reply to it.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is he aware that the Deputy Leader of the Government has been urging me to speak on this issue almost every day for the past five weeks? I have not spoken on it because I had other pressing business to attend to and have not had an opportunity to do all the research I wanted to do in order to enable me to fully present my views. I say this for the sake of the record, and I wonder whether the Leader of the Government is aware of it.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can only suggest that Senator Phillips' diatribe today is inspired by the fact that he is speaking from his experience as a member of the Conservative caucus, where other disciplines may apply. I can, however, confirm what the Honourable Senator Bosa has stated.

Senator Flynn: I suppose that Senator Bosa is one of the loyal supporters of the deputy leader, but there are not very many of those.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Legislation normally comes to this house on Tuesday evenings at about 8.15 and is expected to be passed at 2.15 on the following Thursday afternoon. I find it difficult to understand why so much time is required to debate whether or not to elect senators, when within 15 minutes a billion dollars' worth of estimates is passed. What is the reason for Senator Bosa's delay?

Senator Perrault: Don't bother answering him; it is not Question Period.

Order stands.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Guay, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Cotreau, for the adoption of the Second Report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages.—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a word to say about this matter. You will notice that in the Orders of the Day Order No. 12 concerns the adoption of the second report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, while Order No. 14 has to do with the first report of the same committee, both orders standing in Senator Murray's name. I realize it is a small matter, but it seems more logical for the two orders to have their positions on the Order Paper reversed so that the first report of the committee can be dealt with before the second report. I understand that Senator Murray intends to deal with the two matters at the same time. Perhaps he will not object if the sequence of the orders is changed for next week. That may be more convenient for him when he does speak to them.

Order stands.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND DRAW TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SENATE THE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, April 27, moved:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine and draw to the attention of the Senate the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Explain!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before the mover of the motion speaks to it, I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate a point of order. It may be that senators speaking to the motion will want to refer to this aspect of the motion as well.

There are two points involved. The first is that the motion as put by Senator Godfrey states that this joint committee "be authorized to examine and draw to the attention of the Senate" only, and not the House of Commons as well, "the subject-matter of clauses of Bills" and so on. I want to hear from Senator Godfrey why, although the motion has to do with a joint committee, it refers only to drawing the attention of the Senate to the subject matter, and so on.

The second point is related to the first. It concerns a problem raised on previous occasions concerning joint committees; whether or not only one of the houses of Parliament can instruct such a committee. As a matter of course, the Senate chamber gives instructions to and refers subject matters to Senate committees, and the House of Commons does likewise with its committees. In this case, however, we are concerned with the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, and that, as honourable senators know, has a permanent order of reference defined by section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act. That section provides as follows:

Every statutory instrument issued, made or established after the coming into force of this Act, other than an instrument . . . shall stand permanently referred to any Committee of the House of Commons, of the Senate or of both Houses of Parliament that may be established for the purpose of reviewing and scrutinizing statutory instruments.

The Statutory Instruments Act appears as chapter 38 in the Statutes of Canada of 1970-71.

[Senator Frith.]

Just to complete the chain, honourable senators, you will find that in the Senate Journals of 1970-71-72, at page 412, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments was, in effect, set up, the Senate having given its authorization for the committee to be set up to implement the provisions of section 26 of the statute I have just referred to.

I want to make it clear that I am simply drawing this matter to the attention of the Senate. The Senate will decide whether it is concerned with whether one house of Parliament can refer a matter to a joint committee. With that in mind, may I give you the relevant precedents I know of?

First, the 19th Edition of Erskine May, at page 680, states that:

A joint committee has only such authority, and can exercise only such powers, as have been conferred upon it by the two Houses concurrently, nor can the powers of a joint committee be enlarged by an order of one House alone . . . For a joint committee to act on an authority which had been delegated to it by one House only would be ultra vires.

Then Beauchesne, in the 5th Edition, states:

A mandatory instruction can be given to a joint committee only with the concurrence of both Houses.

So, honourable senators, on the basis of those two authorities at least, the traditional procedure is for the Senate to frame the order of reference and then send a message to the Commons "requesting that that House do unite with this House for the above purpose." But the motion as actually presented by Senator Godfrey is simply: "That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly." Incidentally, the traditional procedure is the practice that was followed in establishing, for example, the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, and to give you the reference, it is in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of May 27, 1980, at page 136.

Honourable senators, other phraseology to the same effect has been used. For instance, in the House of Commons on December 2, 1980, they referred to a message being sent to the Senate "to acquaint Their Honours thereof," then adding these words, "and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action."

I am bound to say, honourable senators, that the precedents are not without exception. Those are the principal authorities for the proposition that the order, to be regular and correct, ought to provide for a message being sent to the other place, either asking them to concur or asking them to join with us, which in effect is the same thing just worded differently.

Now let me cite to you some of the exceptions. On March 29, 1966 the Senate referred the subject matter of Bill S-3 to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit, and it sent a message to the House of Commons to "acquaint that House accordingly." That, of course, is the wording of Senator Godfrey's present motion.

On December 20, 1974 the Commons sent a message acquainting the Senate that the document "Guidelines for Motions for the Production of Papers" and the subject matter of Bill C-225, the freedom of information bill, had been referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments—again, just acquainting the Senate with the fact that they had done it.

• (1510)

On July 17, 1975 the House of Commons sent a message acquainting the Senate—again, just acquainting us—that Bill C-70 was referred to the Employer-Employee Relations Committee. Again, on November 7, 1975 in the House of Commons and on November 20 in the Senate a message was sent by the House of Commons to the Senate acquainting the Senate that Bill C-52 had been referred to the Employer-Employee Relations Committee. In that case, there was an added feature. Senator Langlois, the then Deputy Leader of the Government, said:

—I believe that the wrong procedure was followed in this case. Even though no message had been sent to the Senate in connection with this referral to the special joint committee, instructions were given to our committee clerks by the Clerk of the other house to call a meeting of the committee this afternoon. That is most irregular, and that is why I have insisted on moving such a motion today—just to indicate to the other place that we are not to be dictated to by anybody outside this House.

Senator Langlois then moved a motion for concurrence. At the time Senator Flynn made two observations. First, he agreed that that was the preferred procedure and, for what side interest it may have, he urged that we get on with the matter because there was an important meeting of the committee to be held that afternoon.

We have another example on November 24, 1980 when the House of Commons sent a message to the Senate acquainting the Senate that the subject matter of certain clauses of the Canada Post Corporation Bill had been referred to the Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee.

On May 19, 1981 a message was sent to the Senate again acquainting the Senate that the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages had been referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages. There may be other examples.

In summary, the situation is this: The texts on procedure seem clearly to support the view that a joint committee, since it is set up by both houses, should not be instructed or have material referred to it by only one house. That is, the other house should be advised of the action of the originating house and invited to concur in the action of the originating house. However, as I have pointed out, there are a number of precedents for exceptions to that rule.

It seems to me that the preferred procedure is to have the motion that presently is before us provide that a message be sent to the House of Commons advising them of our motion—if it is our order and if it is adopted—and asking that they unite with us or concur with us in that provision. It is, of course, possible that when such a unilateral reference, if we can call it that, appears before the committee, it could be objected to by the members of the other place because the matter had not been referred by that house. A member could say, "Though the Senate has moved such a motion, the House of Commons has not, and as a member of the House of Commons I object to the committee's dealing with it since it was not properly referred by this house."

I want honourable senators to understand that we are dealing with a question of regularity in form and, also, to hear what they have to say on this procedural point as well as on the substance of the motion. I have nothing to say on the substance of the motion just now.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is obvious that the objections or comments of the Deputy Leader of the Government are well founded, but they concern a matter of form. I do not believe that we are faced with a very difficult problem because it can be solved simply by amending the motion. It is clear that if the Senate were to refer a matter to a joint committee without the concurrence of the other place, the committee would be powerless; there is no doubt about that.

Senator Godfrey: Perhaps I should have spoken first.

Senator Flynn: It seems to me that the solution is clear. Instead of the words, "draw to the attention of the Senate" we could use such words as "and report on the subject matter of clauses of bills", and so on. With regard to the second paragraph, the wording could be "That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly and invite it to join with us in this referral." I do not see any difficulty at all. It is obvious that one house cannot instruct a committee without the other house concurring. In fact, it would be silly to tell the committee to report only to the Senate and not to the House of Commons as well.

So, with those two corrections in mind, I do not see why we should delay any longer the adoption of this motion which, I think, in substance is entirely satisfactory.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would have preferred to speak after Senator Frith and before Senator Flynn had committed himself quite so definitely. Senator Frith mentioned a number of incidents. Another such incident took place with regard to the green paper on the freedom of information legislation. That paper had been referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

With regard to the occasion on which Senator Langlois objected, as I understand the debates on that occasion, the House of Commons did not even acquaint the Senate with the matter. They simply passed the motion and then proceeded to have the Clerk of the House go ahead and instruct the committee clerk, who was a Senate clerk, to go ahead and call a meeting.

The reason I took this action is that I wanted to get ahead and put something in place now so that we would have the mechanism to look at bills that originate in either the House of Commons or the Senate, thereby allowing the legislative branch to consider whether or not those bills infringe on the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Nearly two years ago the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments published a report which made recommendations on the reform of the regulatory process. Some of those reforms could have been introduced without any trouble at all and without too much controversy. For example, we asked that the enabling clauses of bills, those clauses that enable regulations to be passed—and this has some relevance to what we are discussing today—be referred to our committee so that we could draw to the attention of the committees actually dealing with the bills any suggestions we might have, so that the committees could then consider and deal with them. It is a year and a half later, and we have heard nothing from the House of Commons, so we have no official authority to adopt this procedure.

After sitting around for over a year waiting for something to happen, and considering that Parliamentary reform has been a topic of discussion for I do not know how many years, our committee has instructed its counsel to unofficially look at the enabling clauses. If he finds something we should draw to the attention of any committee, then we do so by a letter to the chairman. Just a few weeks ago in connection with Bill S-24, we drew to the attention of the committee concerned the enabling clause in that bill. In fact, the same clause has appeared in four previous acts ratifying international tax treaties since 1976, and nobody noticed, at the time they were considered in the House of Commons and the Senate, a very grave defect in the enabling clauses of all these acts. If it had not been for the unofficial action taken by our committee on the advice of our counsel, this defect would have been overlooked again.

Why I say that we should merely acquaint the House of Commons with this motion is that they are then left with three choices. Incidentally, I have talked to the Joint Chairman, the Honourable Perrin Beatty, who is completely in accord with this procedure. If we await the concurrence of the House of Commons, God knows when it will come. Things could go on for another year, a year and a half or two years before they arrive at a decision.

The first of the three choices open to the House of Commons is that it can ignore our motion and do nothing, which is exactly what the Senate has done on six different occasions with similar House of Commons motions, but which did not prevent the joint committee from operating. The House of Commons can ignore us, but the committee can still go ahead. Some people may think that our action would be ultra vires but, in fact, the committee, from a practical point of view, would have accomplished what we set out to do.

● (1520)

Secondly, the House of Commons can concur in it, and that is exactly what the Senate did in the case mentioned by Senator Frith, when Senator Langlois objected. Thirdly, they can instruct our committee not to go ahead. These three options are open to them.

[Senator Godfrey.]

The same thing would happen if the members of the House of Commons on our committee objected to this reference. Of course, in that event we would not go on since we are very sensitive to that type of objection.

Senator Flynn drew attention to the wording. I deliberately chose the words “draw to the attention of the Senate” rather than “to report”. If you report something, it might imply that you have the power to make a recommendation. I want to make it absolutely clear that what we are asking for is not that we should recommend that certain sections of a bill be amended because it contravenes the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Senator Flynn: “Draw to the attention” and “report” mean exactly the same thing.

Senator Godfrey: I have a reason for using that phrase. In effect, I was inspired to take this action by an action taken by the Australian Senate. That body created a Senate Standing Committee for the Scrutiny of Bills. This was created at the instance of someone whom I know very well, Senator A. J. Missen, a leading Australian senator who is also chairman of their Regulations and Ordinances Committee, which corresponds to our Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. The terms of reference of that committee were:

That a Standing Committee of the Senate, to be known as the Standing Committee for the Scrutiny of Bills, be appointed to report, in respect of the clauses of Bills introduced into the Senate, and in respect of Acts of the Parliament, whether such Bills or Acts, by express words or otherwise—

(i) trespass unduly on personal rights and liberties;

We could set up the same sort of special committee here but, in fact, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments is already set up, under the Statutory Instruments Act, to look into the question of whether a regulation transgresses against the Bill of Rights known as the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights.

Our committee already has very competent counsel at its disposal, and, to me, he would appear to be the most obvious person to look into this matter. The Australian Senate committee had to retain a very famous law professor, to whom they forwarded all bills because, obviously, they felt that their members required the assistance of counsel. Honourable senators, Mr. Graham Eglinton, our counsel, is well qualified to deal with this matter.

Hopefully, this committee can proceed immediately and we can show some initiative. If we have to wait for the House of Commons to agree, we may wait for years.

Senator Flynn: It is the same thing.

Senator Godfrey: If the House of Commons objects in any way, then we will be very sensitive and not go ahead. In the meantime, I see no reason why we should not proceed in this manner here, when the House of Commons has done it on at least five occasions since 1975, with no objection from us in any way, shape or form. We objected in only one case where they did not acquaint us of their motion, and in that case our objection took the form of concurring in their motion.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Senator Godfrey has said that his fellow joint chairman is aware of this motion. Has he approved the wording of the motion?

Senator Godfrey: Yes, he has. Furthermore, he will, eventually, propose such a motion himself in the House of Commons. He wants to go ahead and do exactly the same thing, but he does not know how long it may take in the House of Commons for approval to be obtained.

Senator Flynn: What difference does it make? If you accept the amendment, that will meet the objections of Senator Frith. It does not change the situation at all.

Senator Godfrey: If we accept the amendment of concurrence—and I will accept it if it is the feeling that I should do so—it infers that we have no legal power to go ahead.

Senator Flynn: We certainly have not.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in support of what Senator Flynn has just said, Senator Godfrey said that the House of Commons would have three alternatives if we go ahead with his wording, and it does seem to me that they have exactly those three alternatives with my suggested wording. If the honourable senator has an objection to using the word “concur,” perhaps we should use the words “invite you to join us”; then, the same three alternatives would be before them.

Then we will have worded it in a way that we consider more regular. Meanwhile, as Senator Flynn says, we are in no different position.

Senator Godfrey: I will agree.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I should like to address a question to the honourable senator who raised the point of order concerning the precedents. Do I correctly understand him to say that on previous occasions the House of Commons has phrased motions of this sort with no particular reference to the rule laid down in Beauchesne, that it requires the support of the other house?

Am I correct in my understanding that, when that happened, we immediately rushed in to pass a motion of our own to go along with it before it reached the committee? I should like to know if that is the case because, if we did that, it indicates that we sort of validated the thing, but we did not seem to surrender our right to go to the committee and say, “Well, the House of Commons is going to do this, but they did not ask us about it and, therefore, we are not going to do it.” If I understand the situation correctly, in the past we may have made good the deficiencies of a House of Commons motion by our own; thus, the committee could work.

My fear is that if we go the route proposed by Senator Godfrey and the House of Commons does not officially concur, then, in spite of what Mr. Beatty says, certain members of that committee may decline to deal with the matter. This is a quandary in my mind, and I wonder if the point can be clarified.

Senator Frith: I cannot say that we have in every case remedied the deficiency. On the occasion in 1975 Senators Langlois and Flynn agreed that it ought to be remedied. However, I am afraid that even after that, in 1980, the House of Commons sent a message to the Senate regarding the subject matter of certain clauses of the Canada Post Corporation Bill and said that it had been referred. In a way, that is precisely why I felt myself to be in somewhat of the same quandary. This is a good opportunity for us to re-establish the principle.

Senator Roblin asked what the committee did in the cases I mentioned. Although I did not check the committee proceedings, I presume that they went ahead. I can answer the question as to what happened in each house, but I cannot say what the committee did in each one of those cases.

Senator Roblin: It may be that Senator Godfrey can throw some light on this, and I hope he will.

This brings to my mind another question. So far we have been talking about alleged irregularities in the House of Commons, but it is quite another thing to have an alleged irregular motion going to the House of Commons from the Senate. Our attitude is sometimes a little more accommodating than that of the House of Commons.

Have we ever lent ourselves to an irregularity of this sort in the past? If we have, what did the House of Commons do about it? If that has not been the case, my concern is that the House of Commons might get on its high horse and say, “We are not going to play.”

Senator Frith: Of the precedents I have cited, five involved the House of Commons sending a message simply acquainting us. In one instance Senators Flynn and Langlois resolved the matter.

Senator Flynn: We never did it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on March 29, 1966 the Senate sent a message to the House of Commons acquainting that house that the Senate had referred the subject matter of Bill S-3 to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and, for whatever reason, they did not ask for concurrence. That is the only exception I know of.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, when Senator Langlois objected it was because the House of Commons did not even inform us. It was not a question of asking for concurrence; they did not even acquaint us. The message did not arrive in this house because of an error. Originally, the motion was to send it to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, and it was pointed out that they had agreed to send it to the joint committee, and they forgot to include in the amendment to the motion that the Senate was to be acquainted with what they had done. So, the reason for Senator Langlois' intervention was that they did not even notify us.

• (1530)

Since then, on two different occasions they referred matters to the Regulations Committee, without asking the concurrence of the Senate, and I saw no reason to object to that.

To terminate this discussion, I must say that I have so much admiration for the legal opinions given by Senator Frith—when he says that the three options would still be open to the House of Commons, if I accept an amendment, that are open to the House of Commons under my present motion—that I am prepared to accept the amendment.

The amendment I would prefer is the amendment to the effect that we invite them “to join with this house in the aforementioned action.” I am quite happy to accept that amendment, based on the legal opinion and assurance given by Senator Frith that the three options are still open to the House of Commons and that the committee can proceed if the House takes no action.

Senator Flynn: To “report to the Senate” is also a provocation.

Senator Godfrey: The only reason I used the expression “report to the Senate” was because I did not know that with a motion that was not concurred in by the House of Commons we should report to the House of Commons, but if you think that that is in order, I accept that.

Senator Flynn: You only need “report”?

Senator Godfrey: Rather than the wording “drawing the attention”? Originally, I put that in to satisfy Senator Frith. I put that in to emphasize the fact that we are not going to be making recommendations.

Senator Flynn: That does not change a thing.

Senator Godfrey: In that case, I am quite happy to put “report” in the motion.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Take out the words “of the Senate” and substitute “draw attention to the subject matter.” Do not say which house.

Senator Flynn: It is a joint committee.

Senator Godfrey: In view of this, honourable senators, I wonder whether we can adjourn this debate so that the revised wording can be worked out. We can then consider that tomorrow. If we do that, we will not be drafting the wording of the motion now.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is quite in order for us to give the mover of the motion consent to adjourn the debate to enable him to consider the matter. If the order is adjourned in his name, he can then speak to it when the drafting problem has been resolved.

So, honourable senators, I move that the debate be adjourned in the name of Senator Godfrey.

Senator Roblin: Would it not be advisable to ask Senator Godfrey to withdraw this motion and submit a new one tomorrow? I say that because he cannot amend his own motion. He will have to get someone else to do that.

Senator Godfrey: I can do that, honourable senators, or, with leave of the Senate, I can introduce a new motion.

Senator Flynn: Just give notice that you will move that motion tomorrow.

Senator Godfrey: Fine. Hopefully, before sitting time tomorrow, I will have copies of the new motion prepared and distributed to honourable senators who have participated in this debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before this motion is withdrawn, perhaps we should clarify the other issue. Senator Godfrey is quite right when he says that he discussed with me and other honourable senators the desirability of giving this joint committee authority “to examine and alert”—those were the words he used when we first discussed this. He did that because, apparently, that is the practice in Australia. They do not “report” as though conducting a pre-study of a bill. We, and I particularly, felt that by using the word “report” the committee might feel it is being asked to report as it does on other bills referred to it. Here the intention is rather to alert both houses in advance.

Senator Flynn: However, the “report” would not relate to us.

Senator Frith: The word “report” would be sufficient, but the words “drawing attention to” make clear what he is trying to do—namely, not to make a report dealing with amendments and so forth, but simply to give advance notice.

Senator Godfrey: On that understanding, then, I will withdraw the motion that is before us.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn and order discharged.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, we agree that Senator Godfrey has leave to revert to Notices of Motions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Godfrey: Then, honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, April 29, 1982, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine and report upon the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

OFFICIAL REPORT (HANSARD)

SENATOR ROBLIN—CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to make two corrections to Hansard.

Yesterday I had an exchange with the Leader of the Government about the Falkland Islands. We were talking about deaths in the operation. I want to make it clear that when I referred to this, as reported at page 3985, I was talking about the South Georgia take-over in the first instance. It is not clear from Hansard that I was referring to that particular operation.

The other day I was ill-advised enough to make a comment on British history to the effect that perhaps King Charles II had appeared in Parliament in a rather unorthodox way. I am wrong about that. The first and only sovereign who visited the House of Commons was Charles I, so we have to exonerate Charles II of any misdemeanour of that kind. The first Charles got into a lot of trouble—

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): He was beheaded!

Senator Roblin: —and I did not want that to happen to anyone else. I thought I would make it clear that I checked my sources, and I now make that correction.

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Perhaps Charles II's mistress, Nell Gwyn, would not let him go.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government) with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Lang be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 4, 1982, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I suppose the deputy leader will tell us we are going to be as busy next week as we have been this week.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Even busier!

Senator Frith: I really cannot say.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

REVISED NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE AND DRAW TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SENATE THE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to revise the Notice of Motion I gave yesterday. I think the best way to handle this is for me to give another Notice of Motion so that it will be considered on Tuesday next.

I have not had an opportunity to discuss this in detail with Senator Frith, but I think I should explain the purpose of my new motion.

In the extract from Beauchesne, to which Senator Frith referred, it says that "a mandatory instruction can be given to a joint committee only with the concurrence of both houses." The operative word there is "mandatory." I say that because I have looked back at other motions which came from the House of Commons in which they did not ask for Senate concurrence. In each case, all the motion stated was that the matter would be referred to those committees, and nothing about reporting back to the Senate or House of Commons.

So, the Notice of Motion I am giving now does not contain the requirement of reporting back and, in fact, it fits more into what the committee wishes. Quite a few occasions arise when we would want to draw something to the attention of another committee, yet not have to go through the cumbersome procedure of reporting to the Senate or House of Commons. We could write directly to the chairman of the particular committee, which is what we did when the enabling clauses of the Canada Post Office Bill were referred to the committee but did not require us to report on them.

Therefore, honourable senators, I will withdraw the Notice of Motion that I gave yesterday, and give notice that on Tuesday, May 4, 1982, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I would make a short observation. We should not be too obsessed with Beauchesne, because one can find an argument on either side in Beauchesne.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): You have managed that, have you?

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to table the correspondence between the United States and Canada respecting the Alaska Highway gas pipeline. I have copies in both official languages. I would have done this yesterday, but at that time I did not have the French version. If it is agreed, I should like to make a short statement regarding that correspondence.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): In French.

Senator Olson: En Français? Très bien.

Honourable senators, as you will have noted from the correspondence entered into by the United States government and the Canadian government, there has been some concern expressed regarding a change in the timing for the construction of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline. I wish to limit my comments now to saying that that change in timing is related almost solely to the soft gas market in the United States at the present time. Both governments—and indeed the sponsors, as well as the producers—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The word “soft” qualifies the word “market” and not the word “gas”.

Senator Olson: That is right

—are not withdrawing from their view that the pipeline and the supplies will be required. They do, however, have some concern as to the timing of construction for a number of reasons.

[Senator Godfrey.]

The reason I do not wish to go any further with this at the moment is that there is an important meeting taking place today in Salt Lake City, Utah, with the sponsors, and tomorrow there will be a further meeting between that group and the major producers. From those discussions, it may be that we can find a satisfactory solution.

I will say in conclusion that the Canadian government and the United States government remain convinced that the private sector ought to build this pipeline and ought not to delay the timing at all.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

• (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for providing us with a copy of the letters yesterday. Therefore, I have had an opportunity of reading them. I do not wish to involve the minister in any conversation that would impede the negotiations to which he refers but, to the extent that he feels able to do so, I would like him to expand on the critical impasse to which he refers. Is it solely to do with the marketing of gas, and, if so, what conjunction of events does he think would resolve this impasse, because the question of price of gas in the world energy picture impinges on this greatly.

I am following this line of thought because I then want to inquire of the minister the implications of the letter to the Secretary of State in Washington, in which Canada refers to the “willingness or ability of the Canadian government and companies involved to proceed with it at some later date”. What does that expression mean? What leverage does the Government of Canada believe it has that might enable it to make good on what seems to me to be an implied threat to do something about this thing? How far can the minister go in taking us into his confidence with respect to this matter?

It would also be useful for him at some time to tell us something about the consequences of a failure to proceed with the pipeline. I particularly refer to the fact that we have gone ahead building the southern section of it. The western leg of the southern section is complete and working, I believe, and the eastern leg of the southern section will be ready for operation very soon. Those were put in without the ironclad guarantees that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when he was in opposition in the other place, referred to as being necessary for our proceeding in this matter. What will it mean to the situation that we face if the southern section of the pipeline remains unconnected with the source of gas in Alaska for a considerable period of time? Does it affect the financing arrangements that have been put in place for those? What are our views about continuing to use those pipelines, because we are filling them with Canadian gas as a temporary measure only, as I understand the matter, and later we are to have our gas replaced by gas from Alaska. If that does not happen, what does it mean to us?

I should think the minister, having raised the matter, could usefully give us more information on the whole atmosphere that surrounds this problem, the leverage that Canada may think it has, the meaning of the implied threat that is contained here, and the consequences if indeed the pipeline does not get built in the immediate future.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to be careful about all of this. I believe some of the questions that have been raised are legitimate, and perhaps I can deal with them in part prior to the meeting that is to take place today and again tomorrow.

Yes, it is my information that the limited down-turn in demand for gas, for a number of reasons—conservation and economic matters generally—together with some additional supplies that have been brought on in the United States, do, in fact, stretch out—if that is the right word—or delay the critical timing for this gas to be brought into the lower 48 states. Along with that I should also like to advise honourable senators that the export permits now in existence in Canada are being used to the extent of about 60 per cent. That should give an indication of the nature of that market today.

● (1415)

Senator Roblin: Or the high price of the Canadian product.

Senator Olson: If my honourable friend is advocating that we lower the price, I can advise him that it is our belief that you could lower the price but you would not have a compensating increase in cash flow to make up for it. Therefore, you would be selling perhaps the same amount or a little more gas, but you would probably sell all of it for fewer dollars than we are receiving now. It does not seem to me that, on balance, that is a good plan.

In some other respects the consequences are that this gas going into the United States is equivalent in Btu value to about 400,000 barrels of crude oil per day. I will bring in a list of some of the other consequences in terms of economic benefit to various parts of Canada that, in the present economic situation, are particularly important, because we believe—although we have not spelled it out in great detail in the letter that was sent to the United States Secretary of State—that it is a particularly opportune and important time to get on with building this line. Scores of thousands of man-years of employment are involved in a wide spectrum of the Canadian economy. We have the time now and we probably have the people and the material to do the job. So conditions may be better now to take on this task than they will be some time later.

We also believe that there is a risk that, if we wind the matter down very far, there will be some great difficulties in winding it up again. For example, it is now two and a half to three years behind schedule. If we were to wind it down further still, then, based on the views of some of the companies, particularly Foothills, I believe the companies would not continue to spend the money to stay in the state of preparedness that they are in today. So if it were to wind down further, there would be some serious difficulties in winding it up again.

My honourable friend referred to implied threats. There are no implied threats. It is just a matter of commercial good sense to anticipate what will happen and to be prepared for contingencies that may arise. In our view, when Canada, and Foothills in particular, have met all their commitments on time and have continued to sustain the expense of keeping themselves in a state of preparedness in order to go ahead as soon as they have an assurance as to the target date for the Canadian section, it is only natural and consistent with good sense that they may be a little more apprehensive about winding that up in the future, unless there are some firm commitments given with respect to the date when the most beneficial use of that investment and expense could be made.

That is about all I want to say at this stage. Perhaps after the companies have considered the views that have been reaffirmed by both levels of government, maybe early next week, I will be able to give you a more complete report on the situation.

Senator Roblin: I thank the minister for his statement. I just want to make sure that he understands our position correctly, because he left me with the impression that he may be thinking I am opposed to the export of natural gas through the southern section. I am not. I appreciate the points he is making about the desirability of continuing that export trade.

I have to agree with him that the elasticity of demand may not be all that one would like to see, although we were pretty quick to raise the price when we thought we could. I would not be surprised if people on the other side think it is now time to lower the price. However, I do not want to get into that subject because I can make no contribution.

● (1420)

I am still concerned about the statement:

—the implications of any significant delay on the willingness or ability of the Canadian Government—

Canadian companies are another matter, since they are subject to the laws of the market. I have some sympathy with the dilemma in which Foothills and their friends find themselves, since it is a very unsatisfactory position. I fully agree with the minister that, if there is a substantial delay, it will be very difficult to get it going again. I certainly hope that his ploy succeeds.

He talks here about the willingness or the ability of the Canadian government. That is quite a different matter from the willingness or the ability of Canadian companies. He implies, to my mind, that the Canadian government may be considering taking some action which will involve this question of willingness or ability.

I do not want to press my honorable friend too far because he may have a negotiating position that he wants to protect. I would just express my concern on that aspect of the matter.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I should clarify the position with respect to utilization of the prebuild. Those export permits were issued for a specific amount of gas and also over a very specific period of time.

Obviously, the Canadian government would have to consider very carefully the assurances that it received, not only from the companies but from the United States administration and Congress, that they would do all in their power, short of public financing, which was never promised.

Senator Roblin: They have done their part, have they not? They did what they said they would do.

Senator Olson: Yes, they did what they said they were going to do. I am suggesting that, based on that premise, we went ahead with the prebuild and, indeed, the question of the Canadian gas to fill that prebuild section until the Prudhoe Bay or what is referred to as the North Slope gas arrives.

My honourable friend may be complaining about the price of Canadian gas. I should like to remind him that when the price of Canadian gas was raised it was raised according to a formula that had been agreed with the United States which related to the cost of Btu equivalent value of crude imported into Canada. Indeed, on several occasions, we did not increase the price of gas as rapidly as that formula would have allowed.

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN—CROWNEST RATES POLICY—INFLUENCE ON PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since we are blessed with the presence of Senator Argue—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: —I wonder if he wishes to comment on the results of the election in Saskatchewan, especially the influence the government's proposal regarding the Crowsnest rate review might have had on the outcome.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I cannot see that it would have very much effect on the Crowsnest review.

As I understand it, the newly elected premier, although he has a history of being somewhat on the other side, has taken much the same position as the outgoing premier. From that standpoint, I do not think it will have much effect.

What might be of interest is that the outgoing premier had a select ad hoc committee set up to deal with this project. Some important figures were on that committee which will probably go by the board. Overall, I do not think the change will have much effect on the federal government's position.

● (1425)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Do I understand that the minister intervened on behalf of the Liberal Party of Saskatchewan, and what was the position of Mr. Goodale in that matter?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I do not know that Mr. Goodale's position has very much to do with Question Period in the Senate.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Flynn: What about with regard to the result of the election?

Senator Argue: In any event, Mr. Goodale's position was to stick with the Crow as it is. The negotiations are going on and I am optimistic that when everything is settled it will be a good settlement and very much in the interest of the grain producers.

Senator Flynn: Are we to be blessed with the appointment of Mr. Goodale to the Senate now?

Senator Argue: I have nothing to do with that.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): He would be a great addition.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Martial Asselin: That is a surprise.

Senator Robichaud: In light of the announcements on television last night emanating from the International Joint Commission and published this morning in the press to the effect that the Skagit River valley in British Columbia might, after a year has elapsed, be flooded for the sole purpose of providing hydro power to Seattle Power Corporation, could we be given the assurance by the Leader of the Government that the Skagit River valley will under no circumstances be flooded?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I wonder if in this connection I might ask a supplementary question to that of my colleague, Senator Robichaud. Would the minister not think, after all the inquiries that have been made about the personnel of the IJC and in light of the clear and present danger Senator Robichaud has pointed out, that now, surely, at this last season of discontent, it might be advisable for the government to bestir itself and appoint the third Canadian commissioner to the IJC? It is a very serious thing to have this commission limping along, with only two-thirds of its Canadian personnel, in these serious matters affecting, as the minister would say, the great province of British Columbia and other great provinces?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Macquarrie's previous recommendations in respect of this matter have been noted and considered very carefully by the government. It is the intention to make sure that as soon as possible a full complement of competent Canadians make up this nation's section of the International Joint Commission.

However, let me say that the announcement yesterday that there will be no flooding in the Skagit River valley for at least one year represents, I think, under these present circumstances, a substantial victory for Canada and, at least, an encouraging interim response from the IJC. Much of the credit for yesterday's announcement must go to the Canadians serving on the International Joint Commission.

Senator Macquarrie: I am just wondering, after the lapse of so many months, whether the minister could advise us as to what is the problem in reference to the membership of this commission. I remember my former leader, the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, once saying, "I can't believe that the government has run out of Grits." Is there some reason? Is this job so unpleasant that no possible appointee is on the horizon, or are we waiting for something to happen?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It depends on where you are looking for them.

Senator Macquarrie: Would the minister like me to provide him with a list of candidates?

Senator Perrault: We are evaluating.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, having been the chairman of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission for two and a half years—

Senator Flynn: Oh, here it comes.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Robichaud:—and having resigned that post—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Robichaud:—to become a colleague of all of you—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Robichaud:—I can understand why the government is having a problem finding a highly qualified chairman, such as the one they had before.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Florence Bird: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the Candu reactor that we sold to Argentina. I think I should begin by saying that I understand very well why it is of paramount importance that we sell our technological know-how to other nations, and that I appreciate the reasons why we want to stand by our contract.

Could the leader explain to us what reasons there are for believing that the military dictatorship in Argentina will respect the safeguards which we demanded; and, if it does not respect the safeguards, what will happen then?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday I promised that I would endeavour to bring to the Senate a statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the subject of the Falkland Islands and our relationship with Argentina. That statement arrived shortly before noon today. I must apologize for the fact that, as yet, the French translation has not been completed.

Hon. Martial Asselin: As usual.

Senator Perrault: The decision had to be made whether to leave the reply until next Tuesday or to bring in at least the English text of it this afternoon.

Senator Asselin: There is always a reason for it.

Senator Perrault: If I am to be criticized for the decision to provide a statement today, then I stand indicted. However, I felt it important, in view of the possible imminence of hostilities in the Falklands, to bring a report to the Senate as soon as possible. The statement, which I am prepared to read now, covers many of the points covered by Senator Bird's question.

Canada has not prejudged the question of the eventual disposition of the conflicting British and Argentine sovereignty claims on the Falkland Islands and dependencies. The British themselves have clearly indicated their disposition to discuss the sovereignty issue once Argentine troops have withdrawn and British administration is restored.

Our condemnation of the Argentine invasion of the Falklands is based primarily on the fact that that country is in breach of the United Nations Charter and a specific Security Council Resolution, by its use of force to settle an international territorial dispute.

Canada remains hopeful that the mediation efforts of the United States will be successful. There can be no doubt, however, that time is running short. The British retaking of the South Georgia Island late on Sunday and the declaration of a total exclusion zone around the Falklands, have increased the likelihood of a most dangerous military confrontation in the South Atlantic.

Incidentally, it should be added that this morning the British announced that their total air and sea blockade of the Falkland Islands will come into effect tomorrow morning at 1100 GMT, or 7.00 a.m. eastern daylight saving time.

Canada has, therefore, called on both parties to exercise maximum restraint. Respect for the United Nations Charter and Security Council Resolution 502 of April 3, appears to be the only basis for furthering the mediation process.

In recent years governments have avoided declaring a state of war. There are valid policy reasons for this. For example, if a state of war is declared, states not party to the conflict could demand observance of neutral rights. The general practice has therefore been to refer to "armed conflict" and the use of the term "war" is no longer conclusive of any question of general international law.

Both the Rio Treaty of 1947 and the North Atlantic Treaty, for example, speak of "armed attack" against states parties and not of "war". Article 51 of the U.N. Charter also speaks of self-defence in the event of "armed attack". Therefore, it seems unlikely that there will be any formal declaration of war in the Falklands crisis. What we are witnessing is a state of "armed conflict," with the British exercising the right of self-defence.

On April 28 the Organization of American States members who are parties to the 1947 Rio Treaty adopted a resolution calling for an immediate truce and, while supporting Argentina's sovereignty over the Falklands, also stated that the interests of the islanders should be taken into account in any settlement.

Canada plays an active role in the inter-American system. We are fully active members of most of the system's valuable specialized agencies, and for the past 10 years Canada has had permanent observer status in the OAS. However, Canada is not a party to the Rio Treaty. Thus, while Canada can and does participate in corridor discussions at the OAS and can address the council on subjects of concern to Canada, our permanent observer is not entitled to intervene in discussions involving the treaty. He is, of course, in attendance and follows the debates closely.

• (1435)

With respect to Canada's nuclear relations with Argentina, one of the primary objectives of Canadian policy is to ensure, to the extent possible, that our nuclear exports do not contribute to further proliferation. The Canadian government is satisfied with the non-proliferation and safeguards assurances it has received from Argentina covering the Embalse reactor. The Embalse project was allowed to go forward only after Argentina had negotiated an agreement meeting the stringent requirements of Canada's December 1974 policy. That agreement, which was concluded in January 1976, includes the commitment by Argentina that the Embalse reactor and other Canadian nuclear exports to that country shall be used for peaceful purposes only and shall not be used for the development, manufacture or detonation of any nuclear explosive device.

In addition, Argentina has satisfied a key requirement of the 1976 agreement by concluding an agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency ensuring that the agency will be able to apply safeguards to the reactor, thereby verifying Argentina's commitments both to Canada and to the IAEA.

The Canadian Safeguards Support Program has been instrumental in assisting the agency in developing what will be the most advanced safeguards system available for the Candu 600 reactors, including the Embalse.

Senator Bird: I thank the honourable senator for his answer. I do not think, however, that it answers my question. Although we are aware of the safeguards and naturally applaud them, since we brought them in after what happened in India, I ask my question in light of the record of what is a bloody-minded—I hope that is not unparliamentary language—government and its subsequent behaviour. What are our reasons for thinking that it will respect its undertaking? Are we not on very dangerous ground in trusting that government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, all decisions of this kind are, I suppose, essentially judgmental in nature. We have assessed the situation and certain safeguards have been established. Certain commitments have been sought and obtained by this nation from the Government of Argentina. In the ultimate, the success of any commercial arrangement of this kind rests upon the willingness of any government to keep its commitment.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Obviously, the government leader did not prepare this statement, but I wonder whether he could, in future, ask those officials of the Department of External Affairs who prepare statements of this kind to be more concise and to the point. Canada has an obvious interest in the conflict between Argentina and Great Britain, in view of the fact that this country is involved with the nuclear reactor in Argentina. We also know that Argentina has threatened war with Chile, which threat was only resolved two years ago, I believe, after the intervention of a papal nuncio. The prospect of war between Argentina and Chile still exists, however.

Rather than delivering what I can only describe as fatuous definitions of the reasons behind a nation's declaring or not declaring war, I wonder if those who prepare this kind of statement would be a little more to the point so that we will have a better description of the actual situation vis-à-vis Argentina, Great Britain, Chile and the Canadian nuclear reactor.

Senator Perrault: The Honourable Senator Stollery may consider that the reply was fatuous. However, if he was in the chamber yesterday afternoon, he may recall that a number of questions were asked as to what constitutes a "state of war" and whether the United Kingdom and Argentina are at war or not at war, and so on. Questions were asked regarding the meaning of "armed conflict" and other terms relating to war were discussed. That is the reason for today's rather lengthy response and references to the meaning of "war," the nature of so-called "armed conflict," and so on.

• (1440)

Of course, if the honourable senator wishes to ask a series of questions on the subject of Chile, he is entitled to do that.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the federal government will withhold the exportation of the nuclear fuel bundles, should any further armed conflict between Argentina and the United Kingdom develop.

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators, of course, at this stage of relations between Great Britain and Argentina the question is a hypothetical one. Canada, however, has a long record of attempting to resolve international disputes.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): "Attempting" is the word!

Senator Perrault: Yes, honourable senators, and with a great record of success. I am rather surprised to hear the Leader of the Opposition suggest that Canada's peacekeeping efforts have only been fruitless attempts. In fact, these initiatives have been very successful.

Senator Flynn: Well, you can make a speech on that if you like.

Senator Perrault: But a decision as to nuclear fuel bundles would only be made should a conflict of larger proportions break out.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. I know that the Candu matter is very important, but we are in a situation where a grave disturbance might take place on the international scene. I understand that our ambassador to Argentina has been brought home, and that has ruptured communication, to some extent.

I think it very important in these difficult times that the Canadian government convey its views clearly and strongly to the government of Argentina, and I am asking the Leader of the Government if he can assure me that on the very highest level the government of Argentina has been made aware of Canada's views on the escalation of warlike activities in the Falklands.

Senator Perrault: First of all, honourable senators, let me say that Canada's ambassador to Argentina was brought home to Ottawa for consultations. I am sure no honourable senator would dispute the right of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have a personal briefing from Canada's representative in Argentina. I hope Senator Macquarrie is not critical of that fact. The ambassador is now back on his job in Argentina.

Senator Asselin: What other countries have done the same thing? None.

Senator Perrault: My understanding is that several have done so, and I hope Senator Asselin is not critical of the fact that we asked our ambassador to provide us with all the facts as he knows them. Surely that is a responsible course of action for government to take.

As far as further details of this grave international situation are concerned, as much information as possible will be provided to the Senate as it becomes available.

Senator Macquarrie: I do not want the government leader to misunderstand me, and I am sure he would not try to misconstrue my views. I have no criticism of the recall of the ambassador, but I have to point out that that does something to the process of communication. If our ambassador is not in the Argentine capital, that makes it all the more important that our foreign ministry and their ambassador here enter into high-level communications. We know that in the history of mankind, and certainly in the history of war, quite often intentions, attitudes and appraisals were not made clear in time. I am merely asking if the minister can assure us that we are in fact conveying our views. That is why I asked yesterday if we were saying anything at the OAS meetings. If we were not saying anything, that is fine; but are we conveying our views? Canada is not a member of the OAS, but is a very important member of the western hemisphere. It is very important that we convey our opinions.

Senator Perrault: Our opinions have been conveyed, honourable senators, and it is a mistake to assume that somehow Canadians have been merely supine spectators in this whole tragic affair.

There were Canadian observers at the OAS meetings held a few days ago. The ambassador was recalled from Argentina for consultations. He has now gone back to Argentina. I stated yesterday in my reply—perhaps the honourable senator was not in the chamber—that we had offered Canada's best efforts as a mediator, and talked to both sides. We have tried to play a responsible role here. We are supporting fully the efforts of the United Nations.

I am at a loss to understand what the Honourable Senator Macquarrie would have us do. Under the circumstances, Canada has played a very responsible role and, I think, has won a great deal of credit because of its performance during this entire episode.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am of the opinion that the minister is extremely defensive—I will not say "paranoid". I am not engaged in criticizing the government, and I do not think it is incumbent on him or anyone else to be grandstanding at this critical juncture. I am trying to find out from the Leader of the Government if we are at present conveying our views especially, though not exclusively, to Argentina. No one is debating, and this is not the time to debate, our attitude towards peacekeeping in the last 35 or 40 years. In this upper house we are trying to find out what our government is doing. That is my interest. I have no interest in lambasting the government on this. I can think of far better targets than international affairs.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I repeat some of my words of yesterday, which are to be found at page 3983 of Debates of the Senate?

Now that these measures have been implemented, we believe Ambassador Fulford's presence in Buenos Aires can only help us to monitor developments in Argentina, and to represent fully and forcefully Canada's interests during this difficult period.

Our distinguished ambassador talks to the Argentine authorities on a continuing basis. Does Senator Macquarrie seek minutes of the meetings the ambassador has had with the Argentinians, and transcripts of telephone calls? I can assure the honourable senator that Canada is in full communication with both sides.

Senator Macquarrie: I am delighted with that, and the only chagrin that I feel arises from the fact that the minister implies that I was not here yesterday. Of course I was here, with my radiant personality, all through the sitting.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps you were too much on "Send" and not enough on "Receive."

HOUSE OF COMMONS

1981 CENSUS—REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate about redistribution of the seats in the House of Commons consequent upon the 1981 census. Will the minister undertake to obtain from the government a statement of its expectations as to when the process of redistribution will be completed?

I ask the question in view of the apparent acceptance by some government spokesmen of a schedule that would mean that redistribution could not be completed in time, let us say, for a 1984 general election. This, of course, would mean that the 1981 census results would not be applied to the representation in the House of Commons until, perhaps, 1988, which seems like a very long delay.

I am sure the minister is interested in this matter, because his own province would probably have several additional seats in the House of Commons.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Not on the government side!

Senator Murray: Well, not necessarily on the Liberal side, in any case, though probably on the government side.

Will the minister obtain a statement from the government as to the schedule that they anticipate in this regard?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RECOMMENDATION OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have in the past asked a question or two concerning the RCMP. The last time I asked a question on this subject the Leader of the Government seemed to imply that I was not appreciative of the efforts of the men and women who serve in the RCMP. I would like to ask him a question today and perhaps indicate by that question my full appreciation of all they do for our country.

● (1450)

Would the Leader of the Government confirm that one of the recommendations of the McDonald Commission report was to the effect that RCMP officers charged with any offence under Operation Ham, which was the Quebec operation dealing with separatists, should be permitted to draw upon the necessary background files, regardless of their classified status, in order that these men in the force can have, what we term in law, a fully answered defence?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The question will be taken as notice.

Senator Nurgitz: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government. While the Leader of the Government is ascertaining the answer to the previous question, could the leader determine why the government—as we now know—is refusing to allow these men to present all their evidence?

The McDonald Commission report indicates that the government has at its disposal certain information, and that such information, if it were before the courts, could in all likelihood vindicate these men. Is that information being withheld because it will either embarrass the government or individuals in the government?

Senator Perrault: That information will be sought from the appropriate sources.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have just received from the Secretary of State for External Affairs a statement made by the International Joint Commission on the subject of an application by the City of Seattle for authority to raise the water level of the Skagit River approximately 130 feet at the international boundary between the United States and Canada.

Honourable senators, this is a rather lengthy document. May I suggest that it be appended to the proceedings of today for honourable senators' perusal? Perhaps it will give rise to some questions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of International Joint Commission Supplementary Order see appendix, p. 4008.)

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States", tabled in the Senate on 24th March, 1982.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, by way of explanation for continuing to stand this order, I can tell you that I took the adjournment of this order because I thought some other honourable senator might wish to speak on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States." That report, honourable senators will recall, completes a trilogy of reports on that subject.

As I said, I thought that some other honourable senator might wish to speak on this order. I do not intend to. If no other honourable senator wishes to speak on the matter, we may consider this order debated some day next week. But I want to give you some notice before doing so.

THE SENATE

REFORM—MOTION RE ELECTION OF MEMBERS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C.:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Leblanc.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Bosa for allowing me to speak this afternoon to the motion presented on February 24, 1982 by Senator Roblin, which reads as follows:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.

In presenting his motion, Senator Roblin commented:

It is not to be supposed, honourable senators, that at the present time there are many members of the Senate who would agree with the thrust of the proposition contained in this motion. Perhaps on a good day we might be able to find six or so—although maybe I am being a little pessimistic—who would be inclined to support it as a matter of principle.

At least, Senator Roblin has the courage of his convictions. Unfortunately, he is not here this afternoon, but I want to congratulate him all the same.

In 1980, in a speech in Calgary, he was already defending the concept of:

An elected Senate as a significant improvement in harmonizing the interests of our regions within the central legislative apparatus and within the federal ambit and authority.

The honourable senator continues to support a thesis which certainly does not have the support of very many senators or of those organizations named by Senator Roblin in his speech on February 24, which constitute a very imposing list. In fact, most of the organizations he mentioned do not want an elected Senate—they are in favour of Senate reform or abolition of the Senate altogether.

Senator Roblin and myself are agreed on the historical fact that the Canadian federal system is based on a bicameral federal legislature, and that the vast majority of Canadians subscribe to the principle of a second Chamber, not in its present form, but a reformed and revised version.

The question, therefore, is whether electing the Senate would adequately serve the two principles which, combined, constitute the distinctiveness of the Canadian political system, namely, federalism and a parliamentary system on the British model.

Honourable senators, the ideas I shall be expressing this afternoon are my personal thoughts on the subject and are not meant to reflect the opinions of the party to which I belong. On two other occasions I had an opportunity to discuss Senate reform in this Chamber. Furthermore, I had the honour of sitting on the Senate Committee that published suggestions and recommendations on Senate reform.

I shall endeavour, to the best of my ability, to avoid repeating the points already made by Senator Donahoe and which I fully support, regarding the value of present representation in the Senate and on the many drawbacks that come to mind when discussing election of the Senate.

In preparing my speech, I received the assistance of the Political and Social Affairs Division of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament. I would like to thank them, and especially Mr. Louis Massicotte, who prepared an excellent paper on this subject.

There are many legitimate reasons for believing that an elected Senate would hardly solve the problems that have existed within the Canadian federal system for some years. An institution of this kind would vastly complicate the functioning of the parliamentary system, and could possibly lead to a serious crisis.

Senator Roblin tells us that:

This new Senate would not represent provinces; it would represent people in regions of Canada.

However, there is certainly no guarantee that representation of the people of the provinces would be a priority, at this time, for those who are dissatisfied with the Senate and are agitating for reform. An inventory of major proposals submitted in this respect since 1971 indicates that the dissatisfaction is with the lack of representation of the provinces as such. The solutions that are suggested tend to involve the provincial governments or legislatures in the election of half or all of the senators. In fact, most of the organizations did not suggest selection by elections. On the contrary, if there is any consensus, it seems to focus on the need for allowing the provinces to express their views in the Upper Chamber.

How can we be sure that elected senators will let themselves be led by provincial considerations? It is common knowledge that elections require the support of a powerful political organization or, as they say in Quebec, "la machine électorale". Prospective senators will not be able to drum up enough support to get elected unless they go to the present federal political parties, and I think honourable senators would agree wholeheartedly with me on this point.

Are we to believe that a senator, elected with the support of existing political organizations, would be able to ignore for any length of time the voting guidelines given by the respective caucuses, which would be based on national, rather than regional, considerations? The situation in Australia, with which Canadian senators are well acquainted, seems to suggest the contrary, particularly since the serious crisis in 1975. Having been a member of the House of Commons myself for fifteen years, I am convinced that Canadian parties show great cohesiveness, as demonstrated by the discipline of members of all parties in the House of Commons. In my view, an elected Canadian Senate would probably be a more or less faithful copy, in miniature, of the House of Commons, where members would vote according to party lines.

What effect would an elected Senate have on the operation of the Canadian parliamentary system? Senator Roblin suggests that it should have, and I quote, "exactly the same powers as it has today."

The senator also suggested that the government should only be responsible to the House of Commons, which alone should have the authority to empower governments or prime ministers, and to originate money bills.

Actually, it would make sense to confer the same legislative powers on a Chamber elected on the same basis as the House of Commons. The absence of ministerial responsibility to an elected Senate is unsatisfactory. I do not see how a Chamber, elected on the same democratic basis as the House of Commons, could, for any length of time, be satisfied with inferior status where the exercise of ministerial responsibility is concerned. If we consider other countries that have an elected Senate, and our own history since the Act of Union of 1840, it would seem that the provisions of constitutional documents have been powerless to stem the surge of universal suffrage. The constitutional history of Canada would rather lead us to believe that an elected Senate would sooner or later insist on the right to defeat governments on a non-confidence motion. A famous Canadian publicist, Mr. Goldwin Smith, had foreseen these dangers as early as 1891. Here is what he said:

[English]

If the Senate felt the sap of popular election in its veins, its spirit would become too high, it would claim equality as a legislative power with the House of Commons, perhaps even in regard to money bills, and collision between the Houses would ensue.

[Translation]

If we examine the proceedings of the debate in 1865 on the Confederation of the Provinces of British North America, we read that Sir John A. Macdonald, who eight years earlier had supported the concept of an elected Upper House, had the following to say:

I do not anticipate any real conflict between the two Houses. A conflict would be far more likely if the Legislative Council were an elective body, and I shall explain why. First of all, the members would be elected by the people, just as the members of the Legislature, and if they had a difference of opinion, the former would have every right to say to the latter: We represent the people as much as you do, since we are not elected, as you are, by a small community nor for a short period, and our coming to Parliament does not depend, as yours does, on the particular circumstances of opinion and time, so that instead of reflecting the views of the entire country, you only represent those constituents who voted for you at the polls. Therefore, we have at least the same, if not a greater right to consider ourselves as expressing the country's opinion on general issues, and we shall not give in.

During the same debate, the Honourable Alex Campbell also pointed out that there would be a far greater risk of one House encroaching on the other, if the Legislative Council were elected. He said:

Make the Council purely elective, and I can assure you that the agitation I mentioned will soon begin.

Selection by appointment seemed to him less likely to lead to rivalry between the two Houses.

George Brown noted that in 1856, he had been almost alone in voting against the Council being elected by the people, but that since then, many partisans of the system had regretted their decision. He too remarked that the immense size of the Upper House constituencies had become a very real drawback. Solicitor General Langevin commented that:

—the elective principle in our present Legislative Council was only an experiment, and that in Lower Canada, people have tired of the system.

Joseph-Edouard Cauchon, the very man who in 1856 had sponsored in the Legislature a bill to elect Council members, also favoured a return to selection by appointment.

Anticipation of a major conflict between the two elected Houses seems to have been a major reason for wishing to return to selection by appointment. Was the possibility of such a conflict purely hypothetical? We shall never know, since the experiment was short-lived and the new council had a large proportion of members who were appointed and not elected.

I could go on in the same vein—since I have the material—and quote many prestigious Canadians who have commented unfavourably on the election of senators, including Professor R. A. Mackay, Mr. John Turner, the Commission on Canadian Unity chaired by Messrs. Jean-Luc Pepin and John Robarts, and many others. However, I cannot resist quoting a former Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and also the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Honourable Jacques Flynn, Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

On January 30, 1911, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated the following in the House of Commons:

So far as I can see there is no one within the reach of my voice who would favour an elective Senate. We think we have elections enough at the present time, and I have not heard any one to suggest that the senators should be elected by the people.

More recently, at a symposium on the Senate held in Ottawa on January 26, 1979, under the auspices of the Canadian Study of Parliament Group, Mr. MacGuigan commented in the following terms:

I suppose it is hardly necessary to expand on my objections to an elected Senate or to certain other intermediary proposals. I could never agree to an elected Senate that would be able to challenge the supremacy of the House of Commons, and I would oppose such a measure most strenuously. In my view, this would also be the general attitude of the members of the House of Commons. An elected House of Commons could never agree to this kind of Senate. In fact, other compromise proposals would not get much better results.

At the same symposium, the Honourable Senator Jacques Flynn remarked as follows:

The concept of an elected Senate would certainly be a response to that major and customary criticism that is always levelled at the Senate, namely, that senators are not elected and are therefore not responsible to the voters. But the problem is that nobody wants an elected Senate. It would be a direct response to this criticism, but if nobody wants it, what do you do?

More recently, in November 1980, the Senate subcommittee on certain aspects of the Constitution, chaired by Senator Maurice Lamontagne and on which I was privileged to sit, rejected the principle of an elective Senate. It was clear to us that an elective House would have scarcely more credibility than the existing Senate, and offer no more guarantee of direct and efficient control of the unparalleled powers of the federal government.

I referred to the Petit Larousse illustré dictionary to check the definition of the term "réforme". The word is defined as follows:

A change to a better state.

Would an elective Senate be more efficient, more productive? Would it serve the people and the country with much greater efficiency? This is something to be asked ourselves, because reform implies improvement.

The points made by honourable senators and others do not seem to convince people. Certainly, everyone recognizes that the Senate is not perfect and that we should find ways of improving it.

It is often stated the Senate no longer represents regional interests. However—and I know this from personal experience—many senators are concerned when they believe some program or legislation or regulations may affect the area they represent. In such circumstances, they raise objections and make suggestions to prevent their area from being affected by government proposals. One needs only to look at initiatives taken by honourable senators during Question Period or in committee or through their respective caucusses, either regional or national, to be convinced that senators are committed to their regions.

To conclude, I would like to add that even if a senator is appointed, he or she is nonetheless a responsible person performing his or her work to the best of his or her ability, and who speaks on behalf of his or her region or province, irrespective of his political stripe. Our task at this point, as members of the Senate, would be to agree in the not too distant future to reform and improve this institution, with a view to meeting the wishes of the Canadian people. It is my view that we should proceed within the shortest time frame.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

STATUTE LAW (MILITARY AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES) AMENDMENT ACT, 1980

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981.—(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at the request of Senator Bonnell I ask that this order be adjourned to May 11, 1982.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

THE SENATE

ORDERS OF THE DAY—TRANSPPOSITION OF ORDERS NO. 12 AND NO. 14

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, you will notice that in Debates of the Senate of yesterdays, at page 3991, I proposed that the sequence of Orders Nos. 12 and 14 be reversed. As I mentioned yesterday, Order No. 12 has to do with the second report of the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages, while Order No. 14 deals with the first report of that committee, both orders standing in Senator Murray's name.

I have spoken to Senator Murray, and I now ask the Senate to order that the consideration of the first report of the committee appear immediately before the motion for the adoption of the second report of the committee, so that they can appear in proper sequence and together on the Order

Paper, thus making it convenient for Senator Murray to deal with them when he makes his intervention.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 4, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 4004)

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF THE CITY OF SEATTLE FOR AUTHORITY TO RAISE THE WATER LEVEL OF THE SKAGIT RIVER APPROXIMATELY 130 FEET AT THE INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

SUPPLEMENTARY ORDER
OTTAWA, ONTARIO
APRIL 28, 1982

WHEREAS the Commission is committed to the provision of the Boundary Waters Treaty calling for the prevention of disputes along the common boundary.

WHEREAS the parties have not, since the Commission's Minute of October 9, 1981, engaged in direct negotiation on the question of an alternative to the High Ross Dam;

WHEREAS a negotiated solution to this matter requires an immediate total commitment, by both parties, to the process of negotiation;

WHEREAS the report of the Special Advisors to the Commission dated April 2, 1982 demonstrates that reasonable alternatives to the raising of High Ross Dam are available;

WHEREAS the Commission cannot pursue further action unless the Governments of the United States and Canada are willing to formally support and be full participants in the process of settling the matter;

WHEREAS the formal participation of Governments is imperative if there is to be any degree of certainty that a negotiated solution will be effected;

WHEREAS the participation of the Governments of the United States and Canada is required in order to facilitate both the planning and completion of domestic regulatory and legislative actions and bilateral arrangements that will be required to implement any negotiated settlement. These actions might include but would not necessarily be limited to: National Energy Board of Canada licencing; Washington State revenue bond legislation; transmission arrangements with U.S. and Canadian utilities, and adjustments related to the Columbia River Treaty;

WHEREAS the Commission determines that the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 confers on it continuing jurisdiction in respect of Orders made by it, but that this continuing jurisdiction does not necessarily carry with it the obligation to exercise such jurisdiction;

WHEREAS the Commission has reviewed the Request in the application of the Province of British Columbia dated August 14, 1980;

WHEREAS the Commission has reviewed and considered all arguments and materials filed pursuant to the British Columbia Request in the application;

THEREFORE the Commission is of the view that the British Columbia Request in the application and all arguments and materials presented pursuant to that Request do not constitute sufficient grounds to persuade it to exercise its jurisdiction as requested therein, and accordingly declines to grant the relief sought.

Notwithstanding the Commission's decision above on the Province's Request, the Commission also decides that in light of the views of the Governments of Canada and British Columbia and the Commission's responsibility under the Treaty to prevent disputes, and under present circumstances, the Canadian Skagit Valley should not be flooded beyond its current level provided that appropriate compensation in the form of money, energy or any other means is made to the City for the loss of a valuable and reliable source of electric power which would result if the Ross Dam project is not completed.

THEREFORE the Commission, after careful consideration and in the exercise of its continuing jurisdiction over the matter, decides to take the following extraordinary action:

(a) Seattle is hereby ordered to maintain the level of the Skagit River at the International Boundary at or below elevation 1602.5' for a period of one year from the date of this Order.

(b) The Commission will appoint a Special Board composed of two members of the Commission, who shall serve as Co-Chairmen, and two non-governmental experts. The Commission will invite the Government of the United States, the Government of Canada, the City of Seattle, and the Province of British Columbia to each nominate a representative to be a member of the Board. This Board will co-ordinate, facilitate and review on a continuing basis, activities directed to achieving and implementing a negotiated, mutually acceptable agreement between the City and the Province and to provide status reports regarding such progress to the Commission every four months.

The Commission retains jurisdiction over the subject matter of the 1942 Order of Approval, and may make such further Order or Orders relating thereto as may be necessary in the judgment of the Commission.

Dated at the City of Ottawa this 28th Day of April, 1982.

E. RICHMOND OLSON

ROBERT C. McEWEN

CHARLES M. BÉDARD

L. KEITH BULEN

EXCERPT FROM COMMISSION DISCUSSION OF APRIL 28,
CHAIRMAN OLSON SPEAKING

"The Joint staff draft of the Supplementary Order is approved by the four Commissioners present. However the Order has been agreed to, with some reservations on my part shared by Commissioner Bédard relating to the relative positions of the Parties before and after the termination of the Order, on the clear understanding that the negotiating and conciliation process set out therein under the auspices of the Commission will resolve this matter. If, for reasons related to the positions of either the City of Seattle or the Province of British Columbia, or the other Governments concerned, a solution does not result from the process, the Commission will be guided by such factors when and if the matter comes before it after the expiration of the period of the flooding moratorium as ordered.

Chairman McEwen and Commissioner Bulen associated themselves with the above statement."

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 4, 1982

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE HARRY HAYS, P.C.

NOTICE OF DEATH

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is with deep regret that I have to inform you of the death of the Honourable Senator Harry Hays, P.C., who passed away here in Ottawa within the hour.

I ask honourable senators to stand and observe one minute of silence in remembrance of our colleague.

The members of the Senate then stood in silent tribute.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators will be informed of the funeral arrangements as soon as possible.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, out of respect for our late colleague, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 5, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE HARRY HAYS, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday Canada and the Senate suffered a grievous loss with the death of our colleague Senator Harry Hays.

By any standard, Senator Hays was a great Canadian, a great westerner, a great Albertan, and a fine parliamentarian. He served his country in the area of public affairs for almost 20 years. For part of that period of time, as honourable senators will recall, he served in the cabinet of the late Right Honourable Lester Pearson. He served in the Senate with great distinction for 16 years. Certainly, Harry Hays was one of our most active senators, serving as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, where he brought to bear his vast experience as a cattleman from the west and as a former Minister of Agriculture. His work in animal genetics won acclaim throughout the world.

Senator Hays also served as Mayor of Calgary for a period of time, which gave him even more credibility as a spokesman for western Canada and for the aspirations of Canadians.

Perhaps it can be said that Harry Hays made his greatest contribution to the nation as Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution. We now have our Constitution in Canada, part of the rich legacy Senator Harry Hays has left to his fellow Canadians.

We in the Senate will sadly miss his energy, his vitality, his great good humour and common sense, and his vast optimism about the future of Canada, his belief in the opportunity system and what one well-motivated individual with a good idea, vision, energy and enterprise can achieve in a free society like Canada's.

I join with all honourable senators in extending profound and heartfelt condolences to Mrs. Hays and all the other members of Senator Hays' family.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise to express on behalf of this side our profound regret at the passing of a truly honourable gentleman. Harry Hays was certainly one of the more endearing personalities to occupy a seat on the government side of either this house or the other. His lack of pretence and that genuine folksy manner made him easy to approach and made you want to listen to what he had to say. And when you listened carefully to all his homespun logic, you were treated to some rather incisive reasoning.

This was a reasonable and fair man, a man of courage and deep convictions. He acted on those convictions in a manner of which he could be justly proud and which brought him credit.

He had a vast knowledge of the field of agriculture and did good work in that regard. He was a fine man and a credit to the profession of politics. The government party could ill afford to lose someone of his calibre.

To his wife and family we offer our sincere condolences.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I would like to join with the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition in saying a few words about Senator Hays.

Senator Hays, a former Mayor of Calgary, a former Minister of Agriculture, a multi-millionaire businessman and rancher, was a great Canadian. He was truly proud of his country. He believed that the whole was greater than the sum of its parts. Various tributes can be paid to Harry Hays because he was a giant in many fields. He was a Canadian leader, both nationally and internationally, in a number of different areas. Above all the other tributes that can be paid to him—great Canadian, great agriculturist and whatever else—it can be said that he was a great human being.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: There is felt to be an enormous vacuum, for those of us on this side of the house and for a much wider range of people across this country, because he is no longer with us. I can tell honourable senators, without any reservation, that just one person will never fill his shoes; it will take several.

I shall only refer to a few of his achievements as a pioneer—and he was constantly pioneering in various fields. Senator Hays, for example, is noted for his development of the Hays Converter, the only breed of cattle developed entirely in Canada for Canadians. Very briefly, early in 1950 Senator Hays carefully selected Holstein, Hereford and Brown Swiss cattle to produce a breed of beef cattle with superior performance, with a conversion ratio of feed-to-weight gain unequalled by any other breed in the world. As a consequence, the name "Hays Converter" was adopted, and that breed is now known internationally.

The dream of developing a truly Canadian breed of cattle arose during the period when Senator Hays was engaged in auctioning cattle at public stockyards. As an auctioneer he sold some of the best cattle, for many of the best breeders, in every part of Canada, including Quebec. As a matter of fact, when he was conducting an auction in that province he did so through an interpreter, when the French language was required in the auction ring.

Senator Hays personally created export markets for Canadian livestock in more than a dozen countries. His farm enterprises have exported livestock to a total of 23 countries. I might also point out that he has sold high quality genetic material in the form of semen to some 41 countries around the world.

From the office of Mayor of Calgary, Senator Hays moved to the federal political arena and, in 1963, became the Minister of Agriculture. Very few Ministers of Agriculture in Canadian history have come to that office better equipped, from the point of view of competence in agriculture. In terms of political competence, he was a novice, and admittedly so. However, he came to that office better equipped than any other minister in all the main aspects of that essential primary industry.

Under Senator Hays' guidance all the necessary arrangements were made to bring cattle into Canada from Europe, particularly the Charolais breed from France. Up to that time, such arrangements had appeared to be impossible. To Senator Hays this was a problem to be solved, and solve it he did. Senator Hays added hundreds of millions of dollars—perhaps even more than that—to the gross and net agricultural income across North America because he approached problems even as difficult as that one as ones that could be solved.

• (1405)

Harry Hays was also the man who at that time brought into being the dairy program. I will refer to only a couple of the highlights of that. Whatever criticism there may be of certain details of the program and its administration, the fact is that from that day until now the dairy sector has been one of the most stable and relatively prosperous sectors of the agricultural industry across Canada.

Harry Hays was a pioneer in many respects. He was the first person ever to ship purebred dairy cattle from Canada to Britain. Up until the time he did that, Britain had been considered the homeland of some of the best dairy cattle in the world. Despite the undisputed truth of that, he managed to assemble the kind of genetic material that could find a market even in Britain at that time. In the years that followed, his cattle shipments to Britain reached such proportions that he chartered whole ships to carry them.

As an aside, I will mention that, in the depression years Senator Hays and his younger brother Tom peddled furs from Alberta fox ranches in places like Paris, Amsterdam, London and other European cities. That is when things were tough. They took those furs around to the clothing wholesalers and manufacturers in Europe in suitcases.

In 1945, as president of Hays Farms Limited in Oakville, Ontario, he became the first cattle exporter in the world to ship cattle by air. He was the pioneer in that field, too. The cattle that were flown in that shipment went from Toronto's Malton Airport to Cuba.

Hays Farms Limited was also the first North American exporter of cattle to such countries as Spain, Italy, Peru, Argentina, Scotland, Israel, India, Brazil, China, Uruguay, Colombia and Ecuador. That is an indication of the kind of pioneer I am talking about today.

In 1952 he inaugurated one of the world's outstanding livestock sales, the "sale of stars", at the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto. In 1950 he and a partner initiated the idea of selling cattle by auction at the organized public stockyards. They tried out their idea first at the stockyards in Lethbridge, Alberta. Eventually the idea spread to public stockyards across Canada, and, indeed, across the United States as well. On one occasion in this new enterprise Harry Hays sold $109,000-worth of commercial cattle in 27 minutes. That is a record that still stands today. As an auctioneer, Senator Hays has sold as many as 2,000 head of cattle in one day.

In politics Senator Hays was always interested in good government, where decisions are made according to honest need and common sense. I am told—and I know this to be true—it was only on a personal appeal from Lester Pearson, who was then Leader of the Opposition, that Harry Hays was persuaded to run in the constituency of Calgary South in the general election of April 8, 1963. It was after that, of course, that Lester Pearson became Prime Minister, and Harry Hays joined his government.

Honourable senators, there were so many aspects to Senator Hays' life that it would take a long time to list them all. I have mentioned just a few of the areas in which this man was a leader and a pioneer. Indeed, he achieved such a high degree of success that he could have been considered a giant in each of the fields he was interested in. But, as I said at the outset, there was more to the man than just his success. Within my knowledge, Harry Hays was one of the few individuals who could talk to anybody, from the humblest to the mightiest, and yet never talk down to them. He didn't talk up to anybody either. That attribute, above all else, was probably among the greatest contributions to the success story that he blazed through his entire adult life.

• (1410)

I join with my colleagues in extending my sincere condolences to his wife, Muriel, his son, Dan, and all other members of the family. We shall miss him terribly. Canada has lost an important son; Alberta has lost a wise and influential native; the Senate has lost a staunch parliamentarian; and I have lost a good friend.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): Honourable senators, I wish to add my tribute to those that have been paid to Harry Hays. As have others, I have had the opportunity of working with Senator Hays in the Senate, and I found him to be a great humanitarian of enormous accomplishments, a great agriculturalist and a defender of the ordinary Canadian.

I shall always remember Senator Hays as an agriculturalist. When I visited his ranch, he pointed out with pride his high moisture barley and what it was doing for his feeding operation, as well as his irrigation system. He had an egg production facility. For years he was in the dairy business, and had one of the finest dairy herds in the country. As you all know, through his own initiative he developed and established the first new breed of beef cattle in Canada.

Harry Hays was a great parliamentarian. He was an active member of many committees. He was joint chairman of the Constitution committee, and was very proud of the enormous part he played in formulating the new Constitution—a Constitution that contains a charter of rights.

As a humanitarian, Harry Hays was a defender of the ordinary person. When witnesses appeared before the Agriculture Committee, which he chaired, he made it perfectly clear that he wished to improve the lot of the ordinary farmer. He was a man of action and a man of accomplishment. When he saw a problem he brought an analytical mind to bear on it. He determined a course of action, and what he determined was usually practical and resulted in success.

As Minister of Agriculture, Harry Hays established the Dairy Commission. During our beef inquiries of the past, and those that are going on today, Senator Hays felt that there was an answer to the problems of the beef industry, and that answer was marketing boards. Although he was very wealthy and a director of many of the largest corporations in Canada, he was on the side of the ordinary Canadian, and brought his vast knowledge to bear on their problems. By doing so he helped, in many instances, to contribute to the solutions to these problems.

I join with other honourable senators in extending to Mrs. Hays, to his son, Dan, to other members of his family and to his countless friends my deepest sympathy.

Hon. Jack Austin (Minister of State): Honourable senators, in truth, I feel that in the loss of Senator Harry Hays I have lost a member of my own family.

• (1415)

It is not perhaps well-known in this chamber, but the association between the late Senator Hays and my father goes back to the days before the Second World War. In addition, the senator and my father-in-law, Harry Veiner of Medicine Hat, had business dealings in the cattle industry over many years. Some of the stories about exports to countries beyond Canada's borders are stories involving both our families.

When I was a young lad I used to go out to his ranch in Calgary and ride Shetland ponies, and he was kind enough to waive the usual 10-cent charge for me.

He was an outstanding Canadian, first and foremost, and an outstanding citizen of Alberta, as Senator Olson has said. He has advanced public life and private life in ways that deserve widespread recognition. Above all, I will tell you that, behind a brilliant mind and a fine sense of ethics, the late Senator Harry Hays had more plain old common sense than almost anyone I know.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, like all those who have spoken before me, I want to pay tribute to the memory of Senator Harry Hays. As you all know, we became friends on my appointment to the Senate in 1973 and we had been sharing a suite of offices for two years. We therefore saw each other often and we had many long conversations these last few years on various matters dealing with the present and future of our country. These conversations took place either in Ottawa or in Calgary, where his hospitality was justifiably well-known.

He was very well informed, and in addition to being more knowledgeable about Canadian agriculture than any one of us, he was also familiar with business matters. He had travelled throughout the world. He was nearly as familiar with ranching in New Zealand, Australia and even Argentina as with ranching in Alberta. He was also aware of the problems and the potential of agriculture in Quebec and the Maritimes. Agriculture was his whole life and there was nothing he did not know about it.

He also knew human nature and this made him very understanding. He was respected by everyone.

All his life, he was interested in public affairs. He never hesitated to become personally involved. He had been Mayor of Calgary, member of Parliament and Minister of Agriculture. These last two years, he had been Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and he had presided since December at the hearing of this committee throughout Canada on beef prices. He had been joint chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, had not missed one sitting of this committee and as usual had greatly contributed to keeping a proper balance in the proceedings and the report of this committee. He was a member of many associations to promote agriculture and the marketing of farm products and cattle at more affordable prices.

He fought constantly to improve the economic situation of farmers and protect and preserve their income.

He was a man with unbounded energy, keen intelligence and good judgment. He was also practical.

We have all lost a friend, a colleague of great honesty and intellectual integrity, who never lost his sense of humour even on solemn and serious occasions.

I believe that he died as he would have wished. Last Wednesday, at 5 o'clock, he left our suite of offices after a long conversation where, as usual, we had discussed the problems facing our country. He then told me with his customary smile: "Be at the committee on agriculture tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock; that is the best thing you can do." As evidenced by this remark, like all those who are close to the land, he spoke with a gentle irony which went well with his common sense. He took the stairs and I went back to my office. The next day, on Thursday, he was not at the committee on agriculture at 9 o'clock, which was unusual in view of his customary punctuality. The sad news of his hospitalization came to us like a thunderbolt on a clear day. Since Thursday, we had followed hourly without losing hope his fight against the fates. He fought well, but as will happen to all of us eventually, he was unable to overcome the many complications that beset him.

Everything was over in five days. Had he been given a choice, I believe that he would not have chosen another way to go.

He was a credit to his family, his city, his province and his country. He was also a credit to the Senate. He was of service to everyone. We shall remember him as a valiant, generous, level-headed and jovial man. We shall miss him very much.

To his wife Muriel, his son Dan and all his family, we offer our sincere and heartfelt sympathy.

Hon. Guy Williams: Honourable senators, I too would like to add my condolences to my late friend's family, consisting of his wife and son.

I would like also to say a few words on what is possibly the least known aspect of the activities of my late friend Harry Hays. I spent many hours discussing with him the matter of fish culture, which was very dear to his heart. There were times when he raised more than 100,000 fish in a year. This is something I appreciate, since I know a little about the fish industry, having spent the better part of my life fishing commercially on the Pacific Ocean.

I had the greatest admiration for the brilliance and knowledge he displayed in his chosen field, cattle, while on the side raising those 100,000 fish a year in his own little stream in his own little area in the province of Alberta. I learned a great deal from him.

I have lost a great friend and I am going to miss him.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, this is a sad time for all who knew Harry Hays. We have lost from our midst a great Canadian, a capable man, a man of keen intellect, inquiring mind and absolute integrity. His goal was to serve, and he served well.

He will be remembered and praised in Canada and far beyond its borders for his long and dedicated service in many fields of endeavour, not the least of which is that of the agricultural industry. There was no part of this important industry that he did not take a keen interest in. He was recognized as an expert in the poultry, hog and cattle segments. His knowledge, his influence and his efforts in improving the well-being of the producers of agricultural products will long be remembered.

He was a farmer, a rancher, a businessman and a politician, and was successful in all of these fields. He was a realist when it came to facing the problems of agriculture, and nothing deflected him from his goals.

His innovative move, while Minister of Agriculture, was to allow the importation of European cattle into Canada, with the object of establishing new breeds and crossbreeds, and this has resulted in a notable improvement in the quality of cattle in this country.

His further interest in, ambition for and love of the cattle industry saw him, after many years of research and selective breeding, develop his own breed of cattle, recognized by the Canadian Livestock Records as a breed, carrying the name "Hays Converters", a breed of cattle that is, and will continue to be, a positive influence on the well-being of the livestock industry, and which will honour in perpetuity the name of Hays.

I have fond memories of Harry Hays. To know him was to like him. I wish now I had known him better, because I am sorry for having known him. I wish to extend my profound sympathy and condolences to his family.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I share fully the sentiments expressed concerning Senator Hays. We will extend to his family the sincere and unanimous feelings of the Senate.

THE HONOURABLE F. ELSIE INMAN

FELICITATIONS ON AWARD OF HONORARY DOCTORATE BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I would like for a moment to ask my colleagues to direct their attention to another matter which promotes different emotions, though emotions which, I am sure, are equally sincere and deeply felt.

On Sunday last one of our number was honoured at the great University of Prince Edward Island by being designated an honorary doctor of laws. I am referring to Senator Inman, who was rightly praised as a leading and early advocate of rights for women, of women's participation in politics, of tourism and of community development. She was hailed as a leading Islander, an outstanding Canadian and a devoted member of the Canadian Senate.

I am sure all my colleagues will join me in saluting our colleague, Honourable Senator Dr. Florence Elsie Inman.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I know all honourable senators are grateful to Honourable Senator Macquarrie for bringing to our attention the honour that has been bestowed upon one of our colleagues, Senator Inman. I know we all wish to join with him in the warm and generous tribute he has just paid.

HOUSING

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-89

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I have two reports to make today on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the first of which relates to Bill C-89.

On April 1, 1982, I gave an oral report on the subject matter of Bill C-89, explaining that the written report would be tabled at a later date. I am now tabling the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject of Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

CANADA-GERMANY TAX AGREEMENT BILL, 1982

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

May 5, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill S-24, intituled: "An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, February 9, 1982 examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 2: Strike out lines 6 to 16 inclusive and substitute therefor the following:

"5.(1) Subject to section 6, the Governor in Council may, by order, declare, that any supplementary agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the Agreement is approved by Canada, provided such supplementary agreement shall not, in any manner, impose a greater tax burden on any person than the one to which such person might be subject, but for this Act, as may be amended from time to time, and when the order comes into force, that supplementary agreement has the force of law in Canada during such period as, by its terms, the supplementary agreement is in force."

2. Pages 2 and 3: Strike out lines 38 to 49 inclusive of page 2 and lines 1 to 4 inclusive of page 3 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the thirtieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless before the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after the order has been laid before Parliament a motion for the consideration of either House, to the effect that the order be revoked, signed by not less than twenty members of the House of Commons in the case of a motion for the consideration of that House and by not less than ten members of the Senate in the case of a motion for the consideration of the Senate, is filed with the Speaker of the appropriate House."

3. Page 3: Strike out lines 5 to 14 and substitute therefor the following:

"(3) Where a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons or Senate is filed as provided in subsection (2) with respect to a particular order referred to in subsection (1), that House shall, not later than the sixth sitting day of that House following the filing of the motion, take up and consider the motion unless a motion to like effect has earlier been taken up and considered in the other House and adopted."

4. Page 3: Strike out lines 25 to 46 inclusive.

5. Pages 3 and 4: Strike out lines 47 to 50 inclusive of page 3 and lines 1 to 7 inclusive of page 4 and substitute therefor the following:

"(5) Where a motion taken up and considered in accordance with this section is adopted by the House of Commons or the Senate, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked but without prejudice to the making of a further order of a like nature to implement a subsequent supplementary agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany."

6. Page 4: Strike out lines 8 to 17 inclusive and substitute therefor the following:

"(6) Where a motion taken up and considered in accordance with this section is not adopted by either the House of Commons or the Senate, as the case may be, the particular order to which the motion related comes into force immediately on the latest of

- (a) the failure of that House to adopt the motion,
- (b) the expiration of the delay for the filing of a motion with the Speaker of the other House in accordance with subsection 6(2), and
- (c) the failure of the other House to adopt a similar motion, if any."

7. Renumber subclause 6(9) as subclause 6(7).

All amendments pertain to the procedure in the Bill for the adoption or rejection of supplementary agreements between the Governments of Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany.

The procedure proposed by the Bill is as follows: The Governor in Council may, by order, declare that any supplementary agreement between the Governments of Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the treaty is approved.

This order will come into force thirty days after it has been laid before Parliament unless within twenty sitting days of Parliament after the order has been laid before Parliament a motion to the effect that the order be revoked is signed by not less than fifty members of the House of Commons in the case of a motion for the consideration of that House and by not less than twenty members of the Senate in the case of a motion for the consideration of the Senate and is filed with the Speaker of the appropriate House. Where a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons or Senate is filed, that House shall take up and consider the motion within six sitting days of that House following the filing of the motion. Such motion shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours.

The amendment to subsection 5(1) means that the Governor in Council may by order only reduce taxes. The Committee is of the view that the proper procedure for imposing higher taxes is by a Notice of Ways and Means Motion to be tabled in the House of Commons.

The Committee feels that the amendment to subsection 6(2) will result in the procedure becoming more available.

Any amendment to the treaty with the Federal Republic of Germany will require the approval of one House only if Bill S-24 remains as drafted. The effect of the procedure outlined in Bill S-24 for bringing into force supplementary agreements is to take away the right of the House of Commons or the Senate, as the case may be, to object to an amendment. This is inconsistent with Parliamentary practice of having both Houses approving legislation before such legislation comes into force.

The amendments to subsection 6(3) and subsections 6(5) to 6(9) inclusive are designed to provide both Houses with the opportunity of revoking the order bringing a supplementary agreement into force, and are consistent with the Fourth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments of July, 1980 which states as follows:

"That all subordinate legislation not subject to a statutory affirmative procedure be subject to being disallowed on resolution of either house . . ."

The Committee notes that prior Bills have been passed confirming other conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with the same procedure to bring into force supplementary agreements. The Committee feels that steps should be taken to introduce similar amendments to such legislation.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Hayden: With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Before we proceed with consideration of this report, I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate a matter which may not be of grave concern but is one which I think I should raise.

Rule 80 provides that, on every report containing amendments to a bill which is made from a committee, the senator presenting the report shall explain to the Senate the basis for and the effect of each amendment. It is not explicitly clear, but it is implied in the rule that the report ought simply to embody the amendments, and the senator presenting the report then explains orally the reasons for the amendments. That is a procedure that has been followed, I am advised, for some time.

In this particular report, the reasons for the amendments are included in the report itself. Is rule 80 meant to imply that the reasons for the amendments are to be given separately by the senator presenting the report? While rule 80 is not a clear prohibition to the procedure we are following today, it does indicate that the method of proceeding taken here today could be called into question. Perhaps Senator Molson, the Chairman of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, could shed some light on this matter.

I do not see why the reasons for the amendments should not be explained in the written report, and also by the senator presenting the report orally. However, because of the implication contained in rule 80, the normal procedure has been not to include the reasons for the amendments in the report itself but to give those reasons in oral explanation by the senator reporting the bill.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, my friend mentioned rule 80 to me late this morning. There are one or two of his preliminary statements with which I do not agree.

Up to the time we started studying the subject matter of legislation, the Senate, in considering bills and in making reports, so far as the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee was concerned, dealt with the nature of the evidence that bore on various points in such bills, whether the bills originated in the Senate or the House of Commons. Time after time when we dealt solely with the consideration of a bill, the material directed towards explaining the attitude of the committee, through the witnesses who appeared before it, was developed in the report.

Of course, having this point brought to my attention in the late morning, I did not have much time to research the matter. One case came to mind right away, however, which I call "the Time magazine case," where amendments were made to the Income Tax Act so as to—we may as well be frank about it now and say—have the effect of circumscribing, very substantially, the operations of Time magazine in Canada. In the course of this case, the Senate reported on Bill C-58. As found in Senate Hansard of June 23, 1976, beginning at page 2252, in the course of reviewing and analyzing the provisions and the nature of the evidence that was adduced, there appears this statement in the report:

For the foregoing reasons, your committee recommends the following amendments to Bill C-58—

● (1440)

There then follows a list of the amendments that takes you down to the bottom of the first column on the next page.

So there you have a precedent. I must assure you it is not a single precedent. That was practically a routine procedure in the Senate in the days before we started to deal with subject matters so as to get an earlier consideration of legislation coming from the Commons. Even with that, rule 80, as even my friend admits, is certainly not clear. It states:

On every report of amendments to a bill made from a committee, the senator presenting the report shall explain to the Senate the basis for and the effect of each amendment.

The rule does not say that the reasons for the amendment and the basis for the amendment are not to be included in the report. If I were to express an offhand opinion, I would say that I think it would be nonsensical not to include the reasons for recommending that an amendment be made.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It would be impractical.

Senator Hayden: Especially when there is no prohibition against doing so.

However, let us test it a little further. If you look at these amendments, the second amendment we recommend concerns the number of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate who may sign petitions and file such with the Speaker of the appropriate house to revoke provisions of the double tax avoidance agreement. In the case of the House of Commons we recommend substituting 20 members of the Commons for 50, and in the case of the Senate substituting 10 members of the Senate for the 20 provided for in the bill. The provision about having a petition signed by the members of the Commons and the members of the Senate is only intended to provide a threshold by which this subject gets into the Commons or into the Senate. But it is a procedure designed to avoid having to come to Parliament every time any change in a double tax avoidance agreement is needed.

Using this case as an illustration, taking Canada and West Germany, the provisions of the agreement are attached as a schedule to the bill. If the parties agree on a change, the ordinary procedure would require their having to come to Parliament to have the legislation amended in line with the amended or supplemental agreement. The idea was to shorten that procedure to validate such changes because amendments to tax agreements or tax treaties have a way of dragging on. At least, they do not move along very quickly; sometimes it is two, three or four years before a tax agreement, which has already been negotiated, finally is given the force of law. This procedure was designed to overcome that, but your committee felt that there was no need to have 50 members of the Commons or 20 of the Senate. We were assured of the correctness of our conclusion by a statement Senator McIlraith made to the committee to the effect that in the 1960s, when the official opposition in the Commons was comprised of only 48 members, the House of Commons would have had no procedure by which any party, other than the government which had the necessary 50 members, could have brought this matter forward so as to validate a supplementary agreement or obtain the necessary approval.

Honourable senators, I think it is clear that the amendment speaks for itself. There is no need to add any further reasons. It is simply changing 50 to 20 and 20 to 10, and there it is. The numbers do not change the scope and effect of the procedure. All the numbers provide is a basis on which, if other procedural steps are taken, a negative motion is moved. There are procedures for doing that. Just let me tell you what they are. The procedures proposed by the bill are as follows: The Governor in Council may declare by order that any supplemental agreement is approved between the Governments of Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the treaty. This order will come into force 30 days after it has been laid before Parliament, unless within 20 sitting days of Parliament after the order has been laid before Parliament a motion to the effect that the order be revoked is signed by not less than 50 members of the House of Commons in the case of a motion for the consideration of that house and by not less than 20 members of the Senate in the case of a motion for the consideration of the Senate, and is filed with the Speaker of the appropriate house. Where a motion for consideration of the House of Commons or of the Senate is filed, the house shall take up and consider the motion within six sitting days of that house following the filing of the motion. Such motion shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours.

Those are the procedures. You can see that this motion, to be dealt with effectively in Parliament—either by way of approving the supplementary agreement through this device of a negative motion or by way of revoking the order and cancelling out the order of the Governor in Council—must carry a majority vote in either the Commons or in the Senate, and that has no relationship to the numbers who have to sign the petition in order to set these procedures in motion.

There is one other amendment of importance that arises in what I have said. You will notice the language:

The Governor in Council may, by order, declare that any supplementary agreement... intended to alter, revoke, replace or add to the Agreement is approved—

We know that insofar as the Senate is concerned it cannot initiate any taxing legislation. Therefore, it should be clear beyond doubt that the language used as to the scope of the order of the Governor in Council does not, in the motion that is subsequently provided for, amount to initiating taxing legislation.

● (1450)

The Senate is justified in acting in this fashion on this bill. It is not initiating tax legislation or increasing taxes. It is dealing with the reduction of taxation, which is within the scope of the authority of the Senate. One of the amendments is to change the number of members signing such petition to revoke the order of the Governor in Council from 50 for the House of Commons and 20 for the Senate to 20 and 10, respectively.

The other amendment is to provide that the supplementary agreement shall not extend so far as to increase the tax load of any person who is not affected by the agreement. One can read the proposed amendment to determine its scope and effect. The other provision was that since the motion is a negative one—that is, the order of the Governor in Council is revoked—and providing that either house has moved a motion in favour, then the order is revoked. What was required under the bill was that the other place make such a motion to revoke the order, which would mean giving approval to the motion. It is a little difficult to absorb and requires concentration. In other words, you vote the approval of the motion, the effect of which is to destroy the order being revoked by the motion.

The committee felt that the bill should not be left in that state because the elected body may vote one way, and the Senate may well vote another way. We decided that changes should be made by which either house would have an equal opportunity to move the motion. Whenever there is a motion to revoke by the House of Commons, then the order is revoked. If the motion is put first by the Senate and passed, the motion succeeds and the order is revoked. In other words, considering that it is a negative motion and that you are voting for the motion, you are voting against the order.

One of the amendments provided on that point was that either house may make that motion, and if the motion is to revoke the order, then the order of the Governor in Council ceases to be effective. However, it does not destroy the right of the Governor in Council to enact another order in council which, if done, would cause these procedures to revolve again and again.

Honourable senators, I think you can glean what I have said so far quite readily by merely reading the amendments themselves.

We received some assistance from the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments on this matter. In July 1980 they made a statement, or adopted as a matter of policy, that all subordinate legislation not subject to a statutory affirmative procedure be subject to being disallowed on resolution of either house. We decided under the circumstances that if the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments recommended such procedure then we would apply it, and that is what has been done.

Insofar as the status of the motion is concerned, it is true that today I asked for consideration at this time, but that does not preclude debate or consideration of the points that were developed in the report. It does not even preclude consideration of the language which appears on page 1 of the report in the amendment in paragraph 1 which says:

Strike out lines 6 to 16 inclusive and substitute therefor the following:

This amendment simply provides that any supplementary agreement shall not in any manner impose a greater tax burden on any person than the one to which such person might be subject but for this act.

There are, however, some writings that discuss draftsmanship, and some of these frown on the word "provided" as an introductory word. If any devotees of the language, and the peculiar words that should be used and the certain words that should not be used, who feel that this provision would be made more effective and less likely to attack by substituting some other word for "provided", I am sure that this can be debated. The usual procedure would be to send the report back to the committee with instructions to examine this wording.

That is all I have to say on the question at this time.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on the point of order raised by Senator Frith. Perhaps that is the wish of Senator Flynn as well. I do not wish to speak on the report, at this time.

Senator Flynn: I want to speak on the report itself. Apparently Senator Frith has forgotten about his point of order. He has not asked for any ruling on it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I wish to comment on the point of order, but if Senator Godfrey wishes to raise a point of order, then I will round things off afterwards.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I can remember participating in the preparation of many reports in which reasons were given. I think that quite often the reasons are important and that the committee should agree upon the reasons, and not leave it up to the chairman to try to divine the reasons of the members of the committee and to explain those reasons to the Senate. Therefore, if there is any doubt whatsoever with regard to rule 80, and as to whether or not reasons can be included in a report, then the Rules Committee should make amendments to make it quite clear that the reasons formally agreed upon by the members of the committee for suggesting amendments can be included in a report.

The second point on which I would like to comment in a favourable way is that I believe the procedure followed today is far more acceptable than the one used last week when Senator Frith raised a point of order on a motion I was moving. I think that the fact that Senator Hayden had the opportunity to speak first after the point of order was raised today is preferable to what happened to me last week when, in effect, the decision was effectively made that the form of my motion was not in order before I even had a chance to speak. So I think that we should all follow the procedure that if a point of order is raised then the person presenting the motion should have the first right of reply, as was the case with Senator Hayden today.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I rise on the same point of order. It is important from my point of view, as one who has given reasons in his reports to which nobody objected, that we support Senator Hayden's view of the matter.

● (1500)

It seems to me that one would have to envisage quite an addition to rule 80 to arrive at the conclusion that it forbids in the report of the committee a statement of its reasons for having made whatever recommendations it has made. Therefore, I find myself in the somewhat rare situation of agreeing with Senator Godfrey that, if there is any doubt about this rule, it should certainly be removed.

I cannot see how one can import doubt into it, but obviously Senator Frith can, so perhaps my vision is a little dull in that respect, and if it is, I should like to have my vision cleared so that even my dull vision would be able to see that the reasons may be included.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I ask Honourable Senator Frith if he maintains his point of order.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I shall round off my point of order now, if I may.

I rose on a point of order to draw to the attention of honourable senators the possible anomaly in rule 80 and the procedure that was being followed. What has happened is that I, and all other senators, seem to agree that the best procedure is to include the reasons for the amendments in the report itself, if desired, and to have the senator presenting the report explain also, if he wishes to do so. I felt that that was the best procedure. Senator Hayden obviously thought it was the right procedure because he proceeded to do exactly that—that is, explain the reasons for the amendments, having already included the reasons in the report.

I agree with Senator Smith and Senator Godfrey that if there is any doubt the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the right to examine these things of its own motion. It may feel that there is nothing to be cleared up because the matter has been raised, and it is quite clear what the Senate feels about it. I think we can leave it at that, unless the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders wishes to do something about it.

On the second point raised by Senator Godfrey, my recollection of what happened last week and what has happened today is not consistent with his recollection. When he proposed the notice of motion last week, I raised a point of order. I explained my point before he spoke on his motion, and that is exactly what has happened today.

I raised a point of order when Senator Hayden commenced speaking, which I think is correct. I did the same thing with Senator Godfrey last week.

Senator Godfrey: Senator Flynn gave a speech before I could interject and answer your remarks.

Senator Flynn: I am sorry for that.

Senator Godfrey: When I started my comments I said that the decision had already been made and that I had no opportunity to speak on the point of order. The Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Government agreed that the form of my motion was out of order before I had even spoken on the subject, so I thought it was rather pointless to continue.

Senator Flynn: I apologize to you. I should not have done that.

Before I move the adjournment of this debate, perhaps Senator Hayden can clarify one problem I have with these amendments.

It seems to me that the bill as introduced in the Senate gave the government the right to increase taxation and that, therefore, it was beyond our jurisdiction. I do not know how Senator Hayden can resolve that problem. If a bill is not constitutional in the sense that it is a money bill and cannot be introduced in the Senate, can we correct that by proposing the kinds of amendments the committee is recommending? The recommendations diminish the power of the government.

It seems to me that if a bill is unconstitutional when it is introduced in the Senate, it cannot be corrected by the Senate but has to begin in the other place.

I simply raise this point to see whether the honourable senator has an obvious explanation, and if he does, I will accept it; otherwise I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Hayden: I should tell my honourable friend that the "other place" in dealing with this bill is the Senate. This is a Senate bill.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Hayden: We are speaking on it from the point of view of the Senate. We have said that the Senate appears to be reaching too far in the matter of interpretation.

If we kept within the limits that we think are constitutional, the Senate would operate within the scope of this bill, but if there is elbow room in which it can, in some circumstances, initiate money bills, then that should be limited. This is what we decided to do. It is up to the Senate itself to decide on this matter. If it wishes the committee to consider the matter further, the committee can do that, but we have some good lawyers on the committee, including Senator Flynn, and—

Senator Olson: We agree with that.

Senator Hayden: —this report is being presented by that committee.

Senator Flynn: I know that, but if I am correct—and I think I am—it is dangerous for the Senate to approve the bill as amended. If that were the case, somebody might attack the bill on the basis that a money bill cannot be introduced in the Senate. It seems to me that we should be entirely satisfied that we have the power to initiate this bill. The amendments are certainly an improvement to the bill, but if there is an inherent defect in the bill, I do not believe that we can correct it this way.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, may I say a few words on that particular point of order? I raised that precise question in the committee, and the answer we received from the officials was that this tax treaty is not a money bill because it relieves from taxation. That was their argument.

Senator Flynn: That is not my point.

Senator Godfrey: We then pointed out to them that if we gave the government the power to amend the bill by regulation and take away some of the relieving provisions without a Governor General's warrant that, in effect, would be unconstitutional because the amendments could increase taxation. I think that was remedied by way of the amendments that are being proposed.

Senator Flynn: But the bill as introduced provides that the government may increase taxation. Therefore, it makes this bill a money bill, and a money bill may not be initiated in this place.

I am only asking whether we can correct that. Once it is initiated, I do not think we have the power to correct that.

Hon. George McIlraith: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable senator a question? Do I understand his point correctly to be that a bill that, within the current constitutional practice, cannot be introduced in the Senate is not properly before the Senate, and not being properly before the Senate, cannot be amended by the Senate?

Senator Flynn: That is my point.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, it is obvious to me that no one in this chamber will be very interested in my point of view on the interpretation of these matters which some of our best legal minds have been discussing during the past few minutes. However, as Chairman of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders for some time now, I should like to repeat what I have said before in this chamber. First of all, we have been reluctant to amend the rules unless it has been made abundantly clear to us that it is vitally necessary to do so.

In almost every session there are suggestions that a little change in the rules here, and a little change there, would make things easier. If we look back on the problems created by the rules, or in spite of the rules, I think we will see that the rules have served us in very good stead, and that it is only on rare occasions, when some of our more intellectual colleagues start finding differences between the way they are written and their meaning, that we run into any problems at all.

In this case, from my position as Chairman of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, it seems to me that rule 78 is perfectly clear. Again, I fail to see why rule 80 prevents the procedure which was used by Senator Hayden in this instance. Because we have been discussing this rule for some time now, I feel that I should read it into the record. Rule 80 states:

On every report of amendments to a bill made from a committee, the senator presenting the report shall explain to the Senate the basis for and the effect of each amendment.

● (1510)

To me, that does not infer that the explanations may not be set out with the amendment that is presented. It seems that, regardless of how those amendments are presented, provided the senator presenting the report carries out his responsibilities under rule 80, by explaining the basis for and effect of each amendment, it does not matter whether the explanations are in the chairman's remarks or set out in the report of the committee.

I would suggest, unless there is a strong view of this chamber that rule 80 be rewritten or reconsidered, that it be accepted as it is. If there is that view, the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is always willing to co-operate with the chamber.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might be permitted to speak a second time on this point of order. I certainly agree with what Senator Molson has said about the desirability of not changing rules unless it is necessary. Might I therefore suggest that the question he raises could easily be resolved if His Honour the Speaker makes a ruling, which the chamber accepts, either for or against the contentions which have been put forward? Then we would know whether the precedent of the ruling of the Speaker settles the question, and if that ruling is to the effect that—

Senator McIlraith: That will settle the matter.

Senator Smith: Yes, it will settle the matter, and if the ruling is in favour of the point of order raised by Senator Frith, then, obviously, it is open for the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to consider whether it is appropriate and necessary to make the change. If the ruling is against Senator Frith's point of order, then obviously there is no need to change the rule.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not think we need a ruling. I suggested that the procedure that seems to be the most logical one to follow is the one that we followed. We have the precedent for it, and I think the matter is settled by what we have done and what we agreed should be done. I have no objection, now that what the Senate wants to do is clarified.

Senator Flynn: My point was not in relation to the point of order raised by Senator Frith. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Government of Canada's National Energy Program and more particularly the subject matter of the legislative proposals in relation thereto contained in bills:

C-101 An Act to amend the Petro-Canada Act;

C-102 An Act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act;

C-103 An Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto;

C-104 An Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act;

C-105 An Act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act; and

C-108 An Act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3), which bills namely C-101 to C-105 and C-108 have been read a second time in the Commons and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate and any other matters relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS—EFFECTS OF DELAY IN COMPLETION

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am quite certain that the Minister of State for Economic Development has been waiting to give us his views on the fiasco of the Alsands project and the delay in the construction of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline. I expect he will provide us with the kind of reply that will trigger more questions.

I recall that on February 17 he gave us a list of mega-projects, including the two that I mentioned. Could he, in commenting on those two failures, among others, give us an updated list of mega-projects that are continuing, and a list, which I have requested of him repeatedly, of all the projects that have been abandoned, stalled or postponed indefinitely?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, Senator Flynn has displayed some ingenuity in the past, and is doing so again today, in inviting me to make a very long speech. I am going to avoid that invitation, however tempting it is, because as soon as the Senate rises this afternoon I shall be appearing before the Special Senate Committee on the Northern Pipeline to give an update on the Alaska Highway gas pipeline. If he wished to ask some questions, that is fine, but there will be a formal, detailed explanation given before that committee.

Insofar as Alsands is concerned, I can provide my honourable friend with some details of the offer that was made by the two governments involved—that is, the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta. However, perhaps that is already known to him. The prospective private sector participants took a look at the offer and assessed the market prospects, along with the costs, and indicated that they were not willing to take the risks involved and, therefore, withdrew from the project.

I suppose the next question he could ask—which has already been implied in the way he phrased his question—would be: Why? I guess the reason is that there is a rapidly changing international energy price and supply situation that was—

Senator Flynn: —unforeseen.

Senator Olson: —unforeseen by a lot of people, including—

Hon. Lowell Murray: Except by the government.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Except the ones that should have seen.

Senator Olson: Well, these little interjections, of course, are trying to test their hindsight against our foresight.

Senator Murray: You have no foresight; that is your problem.

Senator Olson: I know they usually have something close to 20-20 hindsight, although sometimes the way they interpret it, it does not appear to be that good. That is unfortunate because we, at least, do have 20-20 hindsight.

On the prospect of looking at some of these things, if they were so wise and could have seen this downturn in the world economy and world energy prices and upturn in supply, then of course, they would have carried with them wisdom that could have made billions of dollars if they had conveyed it to the right people. But I guess they did not make that sort of money, nor did anyone get the benefit of their advice.

What I wanted to say before I was interrupted by some honourable senators was that there has been a very significant change in the economic factors relating to making decisions which involve several billions of dollars of private sector funds and, in spite of a very large and, indeed, extremely generous, in my view, offer by the two levels of government, they did not want to participate in this. The main reason, I suspect, is the uncertainty of what the international market forces will be to set the return on investment perhaps six or more years down the road. Those are the reasons the private sector gave, in spite of our encouraging them by increasing the generosity of our offer to an extent that, in my view, was as generous as it ought to be.

Senator Flynn: What about the consolation that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources found in the other projects that remained? I am quite sure that the minister will tell us about that, and that he is satisfied that the other mega-projects will proceed and be sufficient to meet the objective of self-sufficiency in oil by 1990. I am quite sure he would want to tell us that.

Senator Olson: Yes. Well, I could give a rather significant list of projects that are, in fact, under active construction at this time, so that there is no question about whether they are going to go ahead or not. This is a rather long list, but I will read it as long as my honourable friend can stand it.

Senator Flynn: We are used to very long speeches by you.

Senator Olson: I have another list of hydrocarbon and petrochemical projects that are in the planning stage, and some that have already been started. If my honourable friend would like me to read that list also, I will do so. If he is ready, I will start.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that you put them on the record. I will ask a supplementary question.

I see that the Leader of the Government is very happy with the situation. He thinks that the abandonment of the Alsands project and the Alaska pipeline is a blessing. He thinks that the government is succeeding in every respect, and that everything is fine as long as we have the present government in office.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to clear up the question a little bit because, as we all know, my honourable friend has a habit of leaving some ambiguities in his questions, which he thinks are clear.

Senator Flynn: Me? Me, or you?

Senator Olson: I am not sure whether my honourable friend asked only for those mega-projects involving energy or hydrocarbons, or whether he was referring to all the mega-projects.

Senator Flynn: All of them. I would be happy for you to put them on the record.

Senator Olson: I think I should read a few of them, however. I have three pages of them.

Senator Flynn: Thank you, but note again the approval of Senator Perrault for the fiasco brought about by the government.

Senator Olson: In the Beaufort Sea area, Dome's exploration phase is already under way, and that will cost some $500 million. There is the Esso Beaufort Sea Drilling System, $130 million; the Gulf Beaufort Sea Drilling System, $700 million; the Norman Wells Oil Field Development, $600 million; the Trans Quebec & Maritimes pipeline, $861 million.

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend wanted the whole list. Part of the Trans Quebec & Maritimes pipelines is already under way.

Hon. G. I. Smith: And greatly delayed by you.

Senator Olson: The Revelstoke Hydro project, $1,115 million; the Genesee thermal generating station in Alberta, now nearly completed, $595 million; the Bruce "B" generating station in Ontario, $2,287 million; and the Pickering "B" generating station in Ontario, $1,805 million.

Then we have the metal mining and refining modernization and expansion program in British Columbia, $700 million; the CF-18 Hornet fighter aircraft project, $2,990 million; the Quintette coal development project in British Columbia that is under way, $700 million, and the Ridley Island coal and grain terminals, $400 million.

Senator Flynn: That has nothing to do with oil and gas.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, perhaps I did not hear my honourable friend correctly, but I thought he asked me to list the so-called mega-projects already under way.

Senator Flynn: In oil and gas, or energy.

Senator Olson: This is the list. I have three pages of them. If my honourable friend cannot stand this, perhaps I should ask that these lists be taken as read.

Senator Flynn: That is what I suggested you should do.

Senator Olson: My honourable friend agrees. Very good.

There is another list of projects that are in the advanced planning stage. There are also three pages of them.

Senator Flynn: Well, you will have to correct that in a few months.

Senator Olson: They amount to scores of billions of dollars. I would have thought you would want these, because the other day you asked me about the mega-projects, and I am now giving you a list of some 60 of them.

Senator Flynn: If you want to put them on the record, I have no objection.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For lists see appendix, p. 4038.)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I want to note, for Hansard, that the Leader of the Government is always applauding any failure of the government. The ship of state could be sinking, and he would say, "Are we not lucky to have a Liberal government?"

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The Leader of the Opposition likes to traffic in economic misery and human woe. He is criticizing the government in connection with these mega-projects, but he should be standing up and applauding Senator Olson's recitation of projects being initiated on behalf of the Canadian people.

Senator Flynn: Just imagine. When everything is going wrong he is standing up and applauding, and saying everything is going well.

I must go back and look up what you said about this a little while ago. I would like to compare that with what you are saying now. Completely irresponsible!

Senator Perrault: My friend can continue with this line of attack if he wishes, but most of us would rather hear him comment in a constructive fashion on the mega-projects that are proceeding despite Conservative opposition.

Senator Murray: By way of a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Economic Development, may I ask the following?

In terms of the direct and indirect employment and investment that will be lost as a result of the cancellation of the Cold Lake and Alsands projects, and the postponement of the pipeline, there is no doubt that these decisions will have a very adverse effect on our immediate economic prospects, which will make this Liberal recession even worse than had been anticipated.

On top of that we have had, within the last day or two, very disturbing projections from the Conference Board of Canada to the effect that there will be a very steep decline in economic growth in most of the provinces, including Ontario. The board says that no area of manufacturing will be spared, since demand weakness is much more pervasive, affecting markets for consumer, industrial and capital goods.

My question is this: Quite apart from the damaging effects that the MacEachen budget has had on the economy and on confidence in Canada, does the minister not think that these recent developments in themselves constitute a sufficient shock to our economy to warrant the introduction of a new budget at this time? I put it to the minister and the government that nothing would have a more salutary and immediate psychological effect in the way of a boost for our economy than the knowledge that the MacEachen budget was being withdrawn, that the government was reconsidering it, and that a new one was being prepared.

Senator Olson: Senator Murray is perfectly within his rights, I suppose, in expressing himself in that way. We have got into the habit of hearing Senator Murray make a little speech to put forward his views on certain things. If he will read the rules carefully, however, he will see that this is not a period of debate; it is a period of questions.

Senator Flynn: Look at yourself now.

Senator Olson: What the rules say is that an honourable senator should seek information, not give it. You disregard the rules, in any event, and sometimes even I was accused of doing so when I sat on that side, though I was very careful not to do so. Even when he is seeking information, honourable senators, he completely destroys the validity of his question by putting certain statements of so-called fact into the preamble which are, of course, absolutely incorrect.

● (1530)

Senator Smith: Who is giving the "brief" replies?

Senator Olson: It is incorrect, first of all, that the so-called MacEachen budget is contributing to a lack of confidence.

Senator Murray: Isn't it?

Senator Olson: That is absolutely untrue.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Perrault: Shame!

Senator Olson: Over the past six weeks we have had the privilege of discussing a number of things with senior businessmen across the country. Every one of the spokesmen representing the various sectors of the business community made representations regarding what could be done by way of tax changes and so on which would benefit their particular sector. There is no question about that.

Senator Murray: What did Mr. MacEachen say about that?

Senator Olson: At the end of the meetings, when we asked for their views as to whether the federal government is taking the right fiscal and monetary stance to deal with the real problems—namely, the matter of confidence that is related to both inflation and how it drives up interest rates—the unanimous response was that this government is on the right track.

An Hon. Senator: Come on!

Senator Olson: Unless we come to grips with inflation and the cost of capital that is related to confidence in new investments, there will be more uncertainty as to the future. That is where the problem lies.

Honourable senators, if the preamble on which the question is based is destroyed, as I have just successfully done, there is no question left.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, the great advocate of brevity seems to have extraordinary flexibility in just what his definition of "brevity" is, as compared to his demonstration of what he believes it is. The Leader of the Government, by his antics a few moments ago, would seem to indicate that he believes the country should be grateful that, when a failure has to be interred, he and his colleagues are around to give it a decent burial. That is what he seems to be saying, noisy and erratic as his comments were.

I notice with pleasure, but still with doubt, that the list of mega-projects includes the TQ&M pipeline. It was only a few days ago that I asked about the progress of that pipeline.

Senator Murray: It will be the next to go.

Senator Smith: While I cannot recall the minister's exact reply, it was to the general effect that there has already been a delay of something over two years in the target date for finishing that project. I cannot help but think that that delay is not a particularly encouraging factor in the belief that this project will in fact be fully carried out through New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, as was promised and intended by the federal government—at least, it was promised; whether it was ever intended is another matter. Perhaps the minister would indicate the latest information he has on the progress of that pipeline and the bearing of that progress on the hope of completion by 1985 or 1986, which is his new estimate.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I believe that I gave a somewhat more complete answer the other day. I will have to look it up. The information I mentioned earlier today was simply to remind my honourable friends—and more particularly the Leader of the Opposition—that the TQ&M pipeline, which of course includes the Quebec section, is under way. There is no question but that that entire line is going to be built.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: It was only recently that the National Energy Board made a ruling on certain aspects that this project required in order for it to proceed.

Senator Flynn: How far is it now—about 20 miles out of Montreal?

Senator Olson: Wherever it is, that is not the point—and my honourable friends seem to miss this all the time. I am not managing all of these projects.

Senator Flynn: Thank God you aren't!

Senator Olson: I am not managing the economic factors related to the acceleration or deceleration of their progress. I was asked about the mega-projects that are already under way and committed. Some of the projects are committed almost irrevocably but are not yet under way. I could read more from the list that I have here—

Senator Flynn: You do that very well.

Senator Olson: —but, in fairness to the Honourable Senator Smith, I will go back and refresh my memory as to the exact stage of progress of this project. I seem to recall that I had given certain dates for certain stages it was to go through. If the honourable senator would like me to have the information further updated, I can do that. I simply do not have it with me today.

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman for his willingness to provide better and further particulars, and I accept his offer with gratitude.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on April 30 the Minister of State for Economic Development announced that Mr. Bruce Rawson had been appointed as the Federal Economic Development Co-ordinator for Alberta. Is Mr. Rawson engaged in co-ordinating federal activity in such mega-projects as Alsands, Cold Lake, the Alaska pipeline and, of course, the double-tracking of the CNR?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Mr. Rawson is involved in a number of those activities. I will say this, and with great sincerity, that there were a large number of what we might call "non-price" issues which were involved in the Alsands project—such things as environmental concerns, matters related to transport requirements and so on. Mr. Rawson has been in Edmonton since September 1981. He had acted in the capacity of co-ordinator on a large number of what I call non-price issues. Indeed, I believe he initiated a lot of co-ordinating activities between the various federal departments where there was a service of one form or another expected of the federal government. Mr. Rawson was able to bring about a lot of solutions to those problems.

Yes, Mr. Rawson will be involved in mega-projects and in other areas where the federal government is expected to deliver certain services in that province. He will not, however, be directly involved in the Northern Pipeline Agency. If you will recall, in the act that went through this and the other place, there was provision made for a Northern Pipeline Agency that will be involved in such matters in a far more detailed way than Mr. Rawson could ever be, with the staff that he has. That staff will probably be made up of 10 or fewer people.

The Northern Pipeline Agency, with its head office in Calgary and with branch offices in Whitehorse and in Fort St. John, I believe, although I am not sure, will do that sort of co-ordinating activity. When the legislation went through, it was clear that the Northern Pipeline Agency was to try to act as the "one window" to the services that were expected from the federal government.

Senator Phillips: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. The announcement states that Mr. Rawson was a senior adviser in western affairs to the Privy Council Office. I presume that this is the appointment Senator Olson referred to when he spoke of the activities in Edmonton.

Senator Olson: Yes, that was his function from September until he was appointed to the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development on the date that you mentioned.

Senator Phillips: Thank you, Senator Olson.

During this time, did Mr. Rawson make any recommendations to the Privy Council when he became aware that the national energy policy was torpedoing a number of mega-projects in western Canada?

Senator Olson: Well, when you ask questions like, "Did he make any announcements, when he became aware that somebody was torpedoing something?" I just do not agree with that kind of description in a preamble to a question.

There is another matter that must be taken into account here. I do not know whether advice passed between ministers and their senior advisers will come under freedom of information, but quite frankly I think there are still some communications and memos that are confidential between a minister and his senior advisers, and it may be that Mr. Rawson's comments in that respect would fall into that category.

Senator Phillips: I appreciate the minister's concern about the freedom of information act. Apparently that is as dead as Alsands and the pipeline. My question, however, was not a request for the recommendations themselves. I merely asked whether he had made any recommendations. I did not ask for a full copy of them.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, that has about the same flavour as some of the questions I receive from members of the press when they want to know what we talked about in cabinet. I say, "I am sorry. You know better than to ask that question." Then the next question is, "Well, what was on the agenda?" You know the answer to that question too.

ENERGY

QUEBEC AND MARITIMES PIPELINE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the minister responsible for economic development. My question, which is more or less supplementary to one asked by Senator Smith, concerns a statement apparently made by the Premier of New Brunswick just lately to the effect that he doubts whether the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline will ever be built across New Brunswick. I gather he had definite reasons for his doubts.

I pose my question to the minister now because I am becoming concerned that, if that pipeline is not built, it will mean a tremendous loss of potential jobs in New Brunswick.

As the minister has said himself, who can predict what the price of oil will be next year or even next month? Can the minister tell us how much further down the price will go or how much higher it will have to rise to make it likely that the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline will be built? If the pipeline is built, can the minister say whether the gas, which it is proposed will flow through that line, will still be competitive with fuel oil?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Government of Canada has already made a decision that it wants to have a natural gas pipeline from one coast to the other so that all Canadians, from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, will have the option of using gas. We want them to have that option for a number of reasons, the cost being only one factor. More particularly, we are concerned that there be security of supply, but there may also be some further stability in the price of that fuel. Apart from that, natural gas is one of the best, cleanest and easiest fuels to handle for domestic space heating. So the government has made the decision to go ahead with that pipeline.

With respect to the other part of your question regarding how much the price might vary either up or down, it may be that a percentage of customers will be somewhat reluctant to go to the expense of taking gas into their homes or their businesses, or for whatever other requirements they might use that fuel, if other, cheaper fuels are available. However, the present experience is that other fuels are not cheaper. Therefore, we predict that there will be some economic viability in having that gas line and, consequently, we have already made the commitment to go forward with it.

Senator Thériault: Well, honourable senators, the minister is stating that the government has made a commitment, but the government is not building the pipeline.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No, but it is authorizing it.

Senator Thériault: That is all right. It is one thing to authorize the pipeline; it is quite another to build it and put the dollars into it. What worries me and prompts me to ask the question is that if the company which is to build the pipeline does not see a profit at the end of the line, it may refuse to go ahead. In other words, if there is less market for the gas company's product because of the present price of oil, and what it was last year and what people are hoping it will be next year, will the gas company still proceed with the pipeline? Is there anything within the authority of the government that can make the company proceed with the construction of that line if it says no?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a number of commitments have been made by the Government of Canada. I can bring those back and review them for my honourable friend, but I know that the Government of Canada has allocated up to $500 million, if required, to support the extension of these new transmission facilities. However, there is more to it than that. In the context of the Alberta-Canada energy agreement, Alberta has offered to support the extension of gas markets through market development incentive payments. That is seen as an important element in the strategy to reduce dependence on oil in eastern Canada. As you know, up to now eastern Canada has depended heavily on imported oil at vacillating but more or less increasing prices. I think the pipeline will continue to go ahead. As a matter of fact, between the two levels of government, with what the federal government committed itself to prior to the agreement and with what was committed by both levels of government in the agreement, it seems to me we have what is needed to make sure that that gas line is built.

If there is a collapse of international oil prices around the world so that markets will look elsewhere for space heating fuel requirements, obviously those kinds of things will have to be taken into consideration.

It seems to me, however, that the amount of the commitment made, both by the federal government before and by the federal government and the Province of Alberta as contained in the agreement by the two levels of government, is enough under any reasonable prognostication of costs that the pipeline should all go ahead.

NEW BRUNSWICK

CLOSING OF CFB CHATHAM—EFFECT ON LOCAL ECONOMY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I was pleased to listen to the minister read off a list of large projects, but at this point I am thinking more of the economy of the maritimes and of New Brunswick in particular, especially the area I come from and the region I am supposed to represent here. I want to ask the minister—and I have mentioned this to him before—whether in his planning or the planning of his department regarding the economy of the Atlantic provinces, especially New Brunswick, anyone involved in any department has been taking into consideration the disastrous effects on the Miramichi that will result from the phase-out of CFB Chatham. If so, I would like to know what plans there are to replace the injection of that amount of money into the very depressed economy of New Brunswick.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I will have to take that question as notice. As I understand your question, you are asking for detailed plans for alternative employment to combat the downturn in employment that will result when CFB Chatham is phased out.

I am not sure there is a complete set of plans. I am aware, however, that it is many months, in fact several years, until that phase-out of CFB Chatham will take place.

Senator Thériault: I am glad to hear that it is several years, because the information I have is that it is imminent.

Hon. Jack Marshall: The minister should read Hansard of the other place.

Senator Thériault: I hear that it is being phased out now and that it will be completely phased out within two years. That is a serious blow to the province of New Brunswick.

In the meantime I should like to mention, as I mentioned to the minister privately before, that I was reading in some newspapers—and I cannot recall just which ones at the moment—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You had better get the rules.

● (1550)

Senator Thériault: Who mentioned rules?

Senator Flynn: I was repeating the objection of Senator Olson, who does not want references to newspapers.

Senator Thériault: During the three years that I have sat here and listened to the Leader of the Opposition, I am sure that he has broken every rule that exists.

Senator Flynn: I agree, and I think that you should do the same.

Senator Thériault: Due to the fact that I read that there will be a tremendous increase in research on national defence, beginning this year and continuing in the following years, I want to ask the minister whether this has been taken into consideration and whether there is any possibility that part of the research which is to be done will be done in Chatham.

Senator Olson: I shall take the question as notice.

NEWFOUNDLAND

DEVELOPMENT OF OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the failure of the Alsands mega-project, what importance is the government placing on giving more priority to the oil offshore from Newfoundland and to consulting with the Premier of Newfoundland? Also, does the minister have anything to report on what action the government is taking to update matters?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, it is only a few days since the announcement of the abandonment or indefinite postponement of the Alsands project. I believe it was announced last Friday. So we do not have a completely detailed program drawn up on what emphasis there will be on other projects, but there are a number of projects, including Hibernia and some others offshore, with the potential of increasing Canada's oil supply. We are more keenly interested in some of them because the Alsands project is not going ahead, at least, not immediately, but I cannot give the details to answer the question as it was put. Certainly, the alternative of the Hibernia project is not the only one. There are some others that will get more focus and attention, I expect.

Senator Marshall: Would the minister be able to give us a statement tomorrow, or as soon as possible, as to the government's thinking with regard to oil exploration offshore from Newfoundland? I can understand that he cannot give out this information now, because he may not have the answers with him.

Senator Olson: I shall certainly undertake to provide the information as soon as possible, but I cannot give an undertaking to provide it tomorrow. I should remind my honourable friend that, in addition to financial problems, there are some political differences with regard to the situation in Newfoundland, and perhaps he could be helpful in resolving those differences if he chose to do so.

Senator Marshall: They would not listen to me anyway.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS—STREAMLINING OF REGULATORY PROCESS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have just one question for the Minister of State for Economic Development and, for the minister's sake, I hope we are getting near to the end of questions. I also hope that the question is not considered as one that is trafficking in human misery, but, as one—and I do not wish to offend the Leader of the Government—that is meant to elicit a sincere answer. The minister mentioned in the long list of mega-projects several of the Arctic developments. They were very early on in the list which the minister read out to Senator Flynn. I trust that implied in the answer is the fact that government policy encourages, indeed, creates a climate that is helpful to those projects. Many of those projects are, I suspect, being conducted by private companies, with and without government participation.

Since the minister has taken on his duties as minister and is no longer a member of the Special Senate Committee on the Northern Pipeline, he may not be aware of the fact that almost all of the various companies involved in Arctic exploration have complained of the regulatory nightmare that exists for them to get approval. For example, Dome was one of the early companies mentioned in the list. Dome attempted to show the committee the regulatory process it would have to go through, the end result of which was that it would take years before they received approval.

I am sorry to be so lengthy, and I am aware of those who make speeches, but my question is: Has the government undertaken to streamline the regulatory process for those kinds of development in order to help the developers, especially those in the energy field, and what progress, if any, is being made in that regard?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I agree with the senator's statement that there has been some attempt to simplify and shorten the timeframe for the allotment of these rules and regulations. I do not have that information with me, but I shall try to get an answer as to what has been done in specific terms. Of course, there has also been a rather significant evolution of certain factors involved in the National Energy Program having to do with a number of things, including such things as environmental considerations and so on. I am not sure just how simplified things have become, but I shall try to get a more specific answer.

THE ECONOMY

DECREASE IN ECONOMIC ACTIVITY—EFFECT ON DEFICIT

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I too have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. It relates to the area of Canada which I represent and which is more concerned with manufacturing. I would like to know, if the minister is in a position to tell us—if there is a projected decline in tax revenues because of lessened economic activity in Canada, and if the government has projections of lower revenues than anticipated—whether because of the lower than anticipated revenues, because of the economic decline, the government expects that will have any effect on the deficit and whether, in Senator Olson's opinion, that will further exacerbate the economic decline in central Canada.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Good question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I shall try to be factual, because if I were to follow my own rules I should not express opinions. The facts are that whenever there is a decline such as we have witnessed over the last six months or so in the economy in general, the federal revenue side, of course, experiences an equal or more severe decline than the economy in general. I say that in answer to part of the question, but there was a more specific portion, and that is the revenue from the energy sector. I think it is entirely likely that there will be a decline from the projections that were made in the November 12 budget. Certainly, there will be a decline in the general tax revenue. The Minister of Finance has already indicated that his revenue will be down somewhat from that projection and, indeed, that expenditures will be up. So, the budget will be affected.

However, I am not at liberty to try to prognosticate on what might happen to the balance that comes out of these circumstances and, certainly, the Minister of Finance will make that known to this and the other place when he is prepared to do so.

Senator Flynn: Does that mean a new budget?

Senator Olson: Sometimes there can be a state-of-the-economy speech without having a new budget.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it has to do with the situation in the Falkland Islands. Would the Leader of the Government clarify what pressure Canada is exerting in order to find a solution to the problem?

● (1600)

Could the Leader of the Government clarify whether the Prime Minister has spoken to the Peruvian authorities, as reported? Apparently, the officials in the Prime Minister's Office are not aware of that, nor is the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the leader bring us up to date on this precarious situation and tell us how Canada is going to deal with this, in view of the widespread fear of an escalation of hostilities and the state of Canada's military and materiel? Is it not time that the Canadian government started up-dating the equipment that our armed forces must make use of?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Canada has offered its assistance in efforts to resolve this conflict peacefully. Interestingly enough, this crisis is still not being described as a "war" by Argentina or Great Britain. A report yesterday suggested that the best way to describe this crisis was "events which could possibly lead to war," but when naval vessels are sunk, one wonders about definitions.

Regarding the personal role being played by the Prime Minister of Canada, I have nothing to report to the Senate today. Any information of that nature will be presented to the Senate as soon as it is received by me.

It can be said, however, that Canada has already adopted one of the strongest sets of economic sanctions against Argentina. The ban on military exports, the ban on Argentine imports and cutting off of new export credits to Argentina, are designed to be complementary to measures adopted by the European Economic Community in order to exert maximum pressure on Argentina at this time. It should be noted that Canadian measures are somewhat stronger than measures adopted by the European Economic Community, whose economic sanctions were imposed for a period of only 30 days.

Honourable senators will further note that the measures adopted by the United States on April 30 do not include any ban on Argentine imports, which is at the heart of the Canadian sanctions.

Japan has promised not to undermine the trade sanctions adopted by other countries, but has not introduced any of its own.

There is no reason to believe that a unilateral ban by Canada of all exports to Argentina would add anything further to the support Canada has given to Britain at this time.

One further report which may be of interest to honourable senators is that Canada has responded positively to a request received from the Royal Navy on April 8 for the use of Canadian naval communications facilities located in Nova Scotia to re-transmit, if necessary, signals received from the United Kingdom by satellite to Royal Navy vessels operating in the South Atlantic in response to the Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands. Those re-broadcasting facilities will serve as a back-up and will only be employed if other British naval communication links cannot be used, or unusual meteorological or other technical conditions are experienced.

In normal circumstances, the Royal Navy would be granted access to those facilities through routine military channels, but because of the Falkland Islands crisis the approval of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as that of Canadian military authorities, was sought and was given.

As to the state of readiness of Canada's armed forces, that is a rather complex question to deal with, so that portion of the honourable senator's question will be taken as notice.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question to direct to the Leader of the Government. Last week the Leader of the Government chastized me for being against a public awareness program for people who are unemployed.

I took the leader's comments to heart and went out and found one of those billboards about which I was complaining. I took with me two unemployed persons. The copy on the billboard—because the Leader of the Government asked me for it and I am responding to his question—reads: "Helping Canada Work." Those are the three words. Apart from that, it simply says: "Minister of Employment and Immigration."

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Is there a box number on it?

Senator Nurgitz: No, there is not. The wording "Minister of Employment and Immigration" is in small print, but the words "Helping Canada Work" are in large print.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a three-part question, because he may well want to take this as notice. I say that because I was not able to get the answer to these three questions by looking at the billboard, nor were the two unemployed persons who accompanied me.

My questions are: What specific program is this in aid of? How does an unemployed person, with those words in his head, obtain a job or obtain re-training so that he can be qualified for another job? What does this Madison Avenue wording do for unemployed persons?

Hon. Lowell Murray: That is simply trafficking in human misery and lining the pockets of Liberal advertising agents.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the honourable senator ought to be commended for his diligence in going out and checking the wording of the billboard. It may be that this particular billboard does not convey the message which it is intended to convey. However, certain of the visual material which is being featured in this campaign portrays various occupations in which people may obtain employment. At least, that is my understanding of that aspect of the campaign.

Senator Murray: It is simply advertising.

Senator Perrault: If that particular billboard is deficient, then it should be modified, and I appreciate the investigative work done by the honourable senator.

CONSTITUTION

PROCLAMATION ACTIVITIES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I wish to put a question to the Leader of the Government and, while doing so, apologize for not bringing it up earlier, but I was away with a Senate committee on other public business.

My question has to do with Her Majesty's visit to Canada for the proclamation ceremony. The Prime Minister asked 282 members of Parliament to invite a local young achiever to dinner with the Queen. I am sorry to see that the Minister of State for Economic Development is not present in the chamber, because he prides himself on being called an M.P.

I am wondering why senators were not offered the same courtesy, why we could not invite 90 or more young achievers to dine with the Queen, which would be an honour for those young people and which courtesy should have been extended to us. Did the Leader of the Government protest that insult and further degradation of this chamber by the Prime Minister and his staff?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I hardly believe that the term "further degradation" or the word "insult" can be applied to the program to invite young achievers to Ottawa.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): The new Constitution deprives us of our veto on our own abolition.

Senator Perrault: Those are not correct terms to describe the spirit in which that program was evolved. The thought was that every constituency in Canada, represented by an elected member, regardless of political party, be it Conservative, Liberal or New Democratic, or anything else, should have a representative at this so-called young achievers' dinner.

Senator Flynn: "So-called"!

Senator Perrault: Members of the opposition had full access to that program.

In the case of senators, most of whom have general responsibility, obviously the decision was taken that a representative from each constituency would provide the best and most balanced form of representation at that young achievers' dinner. Unfortunately, Senator Marshall has taken this as an insult, but it was not meant to be.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, it seems strange to me to see that the 15 or 20 questions I placed on the Order Paper as to protocol and procedure, as well as Order of Precedence, which had not been answered after one year, have been withdrawn from the Order Paper.

Why have the Order of Precedence and protocol changed in this Parliament? Why is there—and I again use the words—a degradation and an insult to this chamber almost every second day? Why is there an attempt to take away the importance of the Senate and the status of honourable senators?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I think that constitutes an unfair comment by Senator Marshall, who usually strives to be as objective as possible.

Senator Marshall: I feel very strongly about this.

Senator Perrault: He strives to be as objective as possible in most circumstances.

During the visit of Her Majesty to Ottawa honourable senators received invitations to be present at the proclamation ceremony and at the gala performance at the National Arts Centre. I sent my personal representations to the office of the Prime Minister to ensure that senators were adequately represented at all of these events, regardless of party. Senator Marshall now suggests that there has been some form of studied discrimination against the Senate, but I do not believe that allegation is based on fact.

● (1610)

Senator Flynn: May I suggest to the Leader of the Government that the Senate has agreed to forgo its veto on constitutional amendments, even on the existence of the Senate, and that in this way it was following the Prime Minister's opinion of this chamber?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a number of senators, as well as a number of Senate reports, have suggested that the absolute veto power of the Senate be modified.

Senator Flynn: On constitutional matters.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition is again fair. I know he strives to be fair on all occasions.

Senator Flynn: I try, but I do not always succeed.

Senator Perrault: He must realize that honourable senators have proposed that, in fact, the Senate could be more effective without having this absolute veto power.

Senator Flynn: I am saying that the Prime Minister wanted that; we accepted it; and we are now paying for it.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak during Question Period, but I am impelled, by the tenor of the previous questions respecting the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to this country, to ask what I consider to be a very significant question. I would deeply appreciate it if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us whether he thinks the circumstances I am about to detail in any way denigrated or gave less precedence to the true position of the Senate in this Parliament.

On April 17 on Parliament Hill, in front of this building, Her Majesty the Queen signed a proclamation, doing what some people mistakenly called "repatriating" the Constitution. In my opinion, it was giving a new Constitution to Canada and changing the nature of the country we have had up until now. On that day many people were guests on the Hill, including four people who were invited and paid for by the CBC. I understand they received invitations, and perhaps they were invitations given through the media, but many people, including honourable senators and members of the House of Commons, received a gilt-edged invitation requesting their presence, or offering them the opportunity to be present on that occasion.

I am a duly appointed senator of this chamber. Under postmark of April 19 there was delivered to my office an invitation requesting my presence at the ceremony to be held on Parliament Hill on April 17. The invitation directed to me was posted two days following the taking place of the event to which I was invited. An even stranger circumstance than that is that the actual date of delivery of the invitation to me, through the postal service of the House of Commons, was the Friday of the following week.

My question to the Leader of the Government is twofold. First, was I the only senator who received an invitation postmarked two days after the event and delivered almost a week later, or was that the common fate of all senators? Secondly, whether I was or was not, does he consider it appropriate that an invitation to a public ceremony should be addressed on a form sent out from the office of a member of the government of this country to members of Parliament of this country and postmarked two days after the event has taken place?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, if the facts outlined by—Senator Donahoe: Don't question them!

Senator Perrault: If the information set forth by Senator Donahoe is correct, then this is clearly an unsatisfactory situation and a complaint, quite properly, should be registered, although I am sure the honourable senator has already done that. If he would provide me with a copy of the envelope, I will make personal representations. Clearly, that is an unsatisfactory and unacceptable situation; there is no question about that.

Regarding the allegation that tickets were provided for certain persons to be on the Hill for interview purposes, my personal opinion is that that was a wrong thing to do and I certainly do not approve of that.

Hon. Lowell Murray: What is the Leader of the Government going to do about it?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): We can't turn back the clock.

Senator Perrault: A new president is being installed in the CBC, and perhaps some of its policies will be changed.

Senator Murray: Never!

Senator Donahoe: I thank the honourable leader for his undertaking and, in turn, I will undertake to supply him with that which he has requested—a certified copy of the envelope and the invitation I received to attend the ceremony involving Her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of the signing of the proclamation respecting the Constitution. I trust that when he has some information on this matter, he will also answer my question as to whether other senators were treated in the same cavalier manner as I was.

Senator Perrault: Is it conceivable that the honourable senator had been moving from place to place or had a change of address? Are there any mitigating circumstances involved?

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, the photostatic copy will be provided and it will immediately be apparent that the invitation was addressed to me at my Senate office in this building, Room 361-E—less than a stone's throw away from where the ceremony took place. The fact that I have a home in Halifax, a home in the country and a home in Ottawa had no bearing whatever on the facts.

Senator Perrault: If other honourable senators have encountered similar problems, there should, of course, be a protest registered in the appropriate office, and it will be done.

Senator Donahoe: One should not debate on this occasion, but one cannot refrain from making the comment that if the invitation reached the postal authorities two days after the event took place, it really matters very little what the address was upon the envelope.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF FUND TO FINANCE JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on March 31 Senator Roblin asked a series of questions concerning the Unemployment Insurance Fund and job creation programs.

The first question was: What is the status of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, given the current high levels of unemployment?

It is too early to speculate on the year-end status of the Unemployment Insurance Fund and on premium rate levels for 1983. While the current unemployment level is higher than that forecast in October 1981, the time at which the 1982 premium rate was set, it is likely that the account could find itself in a deficit position at the end of the 1982 calendar year. The premium rate for 1983 will be set in the fall of this year and will take into account the actual level of unemployment experienced during 1982 and, among other factors, the expected rate for 1983. It should be noted that the account was in a cumulative surplus position of about $320 million at the end of 1981.

The second question was: What sums are in the government's estimates for these new programs—that is, UI work-sharing and UI job creation?

No additional sums are in the main estimates for work-sharing or UI job creation programs, since the proposals for these programs were presented after the estimates were closed. In any case, none would be required for work-sharing benefits which are financed entirely by employer-employee premiums. By way of example, a $90 million work-sharing program would have an impact of about $45 million on the UI Fund, which would be equivalent, in terms of the employee premium rate, to about 1¼ cents per $100 of insured earnings. It should be noted that the premium rate for employees was lowered in 1982 by 15 cents per $100 of insured earnings.

The third question was: What is the statutory authority for these programs?

Sections 37 and 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act provide the statutory authority to operate programs of work-sharing and programs of UI job creation, respectively.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, may Order No. 2 stand in Senator Bird's name? I believe she wishes to speak to it next, perhaps tomorrow.

Subject to correction by Senator Macdonald, honourable senators, I think all other orders stand.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: That is correct.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Frith can tell us whether there is to be a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs this afternoon.

Senator Frith: Yes. I was going to mention that before the adjournment.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, as Senator Deschatelets has just mentioned, the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was expected to sit today after the adjournment of the Senate. This sitting had been scheduled so that the committee could discuss the bill respecting young offenders, to repeal the Juvenile Delinquents Act, with the Solicitor General of Canada, the Honourable Robert Kaplan.

I was advised that the minister was leaving for Toronto around 5 o'clock and that the sitting of the committee had therefore been cancelled, with the suggestion that it be held next week under the same conditions.

Honourable senators, the Special Committee on the Northern Pipeline will sit as expected. I even believe that the committee is sitting right now and that Senator Olson, who is the minister responsible for the administration of the Northern Pipeline, is appearing before the committee to discuss matters related to the pipeline, and so on.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Good news?

Senator Frith: To remain neutral, let us say "news".

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 6, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA—
FIRST READING

Hon. Jack Marshall presented Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

Bill read first time.

Senator Marshall moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, May 11, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SCHEDULE OF AUTHORIZED SALARY REVISIONS TABLED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled a schedule of authorized salary revisions for certain Senate positions effective April 1, 1982, as approved by the committee at its meeting today, Thursday, May 6, 1982.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RESPECTING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF POSITION OF DEPUTY SPEAKER OF THE SENATE TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting the establishment of the position of Deputy Speaker of the Senate, and ask that it be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 4049.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Goldenberg moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 11, 1982, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CABINET

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I notice that three out of four ministers in the Senate are absent, in fact, the three ministers who have specific and well-defined responsibilities, so there is only the Leader of the Government who can take questions as notice but cannot do much else.

The other day I was looking at Hansard for the period during which we were on the other side and formed the government, and I was interested to see that the then Leader of the Opposition, Senator Perrault himself, complained whenever a minister was not present in the Senate, and suggested that perhaps parliamentary secretaries should be appointed—a remark that caused considerable hilarity at the time.

I wonder whether he is now considering appointing parliamentary secretaries who would answer on behalf of ministers who are absent at least once a week, on the two or three days on which the Senate sits.

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there may well be merit in the suggestion advanced by the Leader of the Opposition. I am gratified, even moved, by the thought that he believes there may be merit in an idea we advanced earlier. Hopefully, one or two of the three ministers will return before the afternoon is over. They are, of course, involved in public business. Senator Olson is considering yet another mega-project—

Senator Flynn: Another collapse!

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Another project which will go down the tubes in just the same way as the others.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It's not a good sign.

Senator Perrault:—which may serve to assist the economy of the nation.

Honourable senators, I regret the fact that all of our minister colleagues are not present. I will certainly take the questions as notice, if I am unable to provide replies, and do what I can, ultimately, to provide the answers.

Senator Flynn: I draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government that it is becoming a habit for those three ministers to be absent from the chamber. As I have said on previous occasions, perhaps it is in the public interest that they are absent from the chamber.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Don't be bitter.

Senator Flynn: I'm smiling as much as I can.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, as I wait for the jollity to subside and I am always in favour of oral goodwill—lest the Leader of the Government think that he is not really appreciated, I will dredge up a question and direct it to him. Despite the levity of the preamble, it is not really a lightsome question in any way; it is a question in connection with the Falkland Islands. Had I seen Senator Asselin come in, I would have deferred to him.

We have been hearing in recent hours indications that the Secretary General of the United Nations is taking an initiative in reference to mediation, conciliation and cessation of hostile activities. I should think that all members of this chamber and all members of our citizen body would agree that, in the long run, peace is better than war, and perhaps the Secretary General of the United Nations is in a very good position, because of his background and because of his international status, to be a mediator.

I am asking the minister if he can report to us, on this very important and crucial matter, whether or not the Canadian government has had communications from the U.N. Secretary General; whether the Canadian government has indicated its reaction to the proposals for mediation which are now being considered very carefully—at least in Buenos Aires; and, further, in light of that barely positive suggestion that an interim solution might involve U.N. jurisdiction for a period, whether Canada has been asked for any practical and cognate indication of its support of this view.

• (1405)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had a number of conversations with representatives of other countries with respect to the dangerous situation in the Falkland Islands. Shortly before 2 o'clock this afternoon I was provided with further information from the department.

The name of Canada has been brought up by other countries in the context of playing a possible role in an interim administration. However, there are a number of initiatives in play at the present time. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated on Tuesday, the important thing is that the parties involved in this dispute demonstrate the desire and the willingness to reach a negotiated settlement.

Negotiations based on any number of formulae proposed by various parties are possible. However, it will not help the cause of peace to discuss the details of any of these proposals publicly.

Canada stands ready to seriously consider participating in a solution if asked to do so by the parties involved. Our diplomatic missions in Latin America, New York and Europe have been instructed to keep in close contact with other interested parties to see if we can be of assistance in helping to find a settlement to this dispute.

I can say further that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has met with the Peruvian ambassador and has reviewed with him, in general, some proposals that have been discussed in relation to peace initiatives. We have asked for further information on the status of these proposals. The ambassador was exploring Canadian interest in being associated with an initiative, to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs replied that Canada would consider any proposal that had the support of both parties to the conflict. We are gravely concerned about the escalation of hostilities, and we regret the tragic loss of life on both sides. We extend our sympathies to the families of the victims who have thus far been lost in this conflict. This emphasizes, in our view, the urgent need to achieve a negotiated settlement to end the conflict.

Security Council resolution 502, calling for an immediate cessation of hostilities and an immediate withdrawal of all Argentine forces, provides the basis on which the parties can seek a diplomatic settlement. We welcome recent indications that both parties are willing to explore various ideas and concepts for a settlement.

As I mentioned a moment ago, there are a number of confidential initiatives in play—one by Peru, another by the UN. Secretary General, in addition to continuing American efforts. In at least some of these scenarios, Canada would play a role. It would be premature for me to comment on any of these initiatives, except to say that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, has instructed Canadian representatives in various locations to maintain the closest contact with their colleagues and to facilitate such initiatives in any way that might be useful. This they are doing.

As I have said, at this critical stage it would be most important to avoid comment or speculation that might undercut these initiatives. In support of a negotiated settlement, we would be willing to consider most carefully any approach made to us. In consultation with others, we shall use our best influence to achieve a negotiated settlement.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for his response. It is indeed a delicate and difficult situation. Since the NATO Defence Council has unanimously asked for a negotiated settlement, I wonder if the minister is in a position to say whether there have been any overtures from the United Nations, which now seems to be the most hopeful avenue open? I ask that question bearing in mind that he might wish to defer replying to it at this time.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there are certain member states in the United Nations who feel that Canada may be able to play a very constructive role in this particular situation. Beyond that, I cannot supply further information.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

PRINCE RUPERT—CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN PORT

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question to direct to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Is it correct that construction of the $300 million grain port located at Prince Rupert is threatened with cancellation?

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): I am not aware of any imminent threat of cancellation of that undertaking. I have not seen any report to that effect.

I know that there have been discussions going on with respect to some re-arrangement of financing, but no information has come to me which would suggest it will not be constructed.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PRESENTATION BY CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The Canadian Bar Association, to which many members of this chamber belong, presented a final appeal to the federal government last week to proceed with the freedom of information legislation. In its lengthy presentation—I believe a 60-page brief—the Canadian Bar Association offered a point-by-point refutation of the arguments raised by the provincial governments and cited by the federal government as reasons why the bill cannot proceed at the present time.

Does the government accept the Canadian Bar Association's dismissal of these anti-freedom of information arguments, and if it does not, will it provide a comprehensive rebuttal to the arguments raised in this rather excellent presentation by the Canadian Bar Association?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, of course this government is sensitive to provincial concerns. For that reason, there has been a delay in the implementation of our proposals with respect to freedom of information legislation.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): When it serves its own purpose.

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice.

I do not have replies as yet to earlier questions asked by Senator Nurgitz on this point. Supplementary information will be sought.

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question to ask the Leader of the Government. Can he confirm, in the event that there is some validity to the arguments advanced by the Canadian Bar Association, whether freedom of information legislation is no longer a federal concern, or is being put aside because of what appears to be over-protection of cabinet documents by the Prime Minister, the Solicitor General and other cabinet ministers? I know that only because of what I have read in newspaper reports.

I ask that question because of the RCMP trials now under way in Montreal.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this government has been desirous for some time of a freedom of information statute. Unfortunately, there have been delays. The views of the Canadian Bar Association are being studied carefully now by the Minister of Justice.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the last we heard on this from the Prime Minister was that the bill was not a priority of the government. Has there been any change in the position taken by the Prime Minister?

Senator Perrault: The bill is certainly a priority. It depends upon how high it is on the list of priorities.

Senator Flynn: He said that it was not.

Senator Perrault: It depends upon its place on the priority list.

Senator Flynn: The Prime Minister said that it was not a priority any more.

Senator Perrault: It is a matter of interest and concern to the ministry—

Senator Flynn: They are empty words. Please answer my question. Has there been any change since the Prime Minister made that statement?

Senator Perrault: —and we want to see a freedom of information statute—

Senator Flynn: When?

Senator Perrault: —enshrined in the law of Canada.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: What does he want?

Hon. Jack Marshall: What is its priority on a scale of one to ten?

Senator Flynn: Does the government intend to proceed with that bill during the current session of this Parliament? The bill has been on the Order Paper in the other place since the beginning of the session.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator will have to change party affiliation and be admitted to the cabinet before we will share that information with him.

Senator Flynn: It has been on the Order Paper since the beginning of this session. It is not a question of cabinet secrecy. The Prime Minister has said that it was not a priority of the government, and I am asking the Leader of the Government whether there has been any change in the Prime Minister's position since he made that statement?

Hon. R. James Balfour: May I ask the Leader of the Government whether it remains the policy of the government, as articulated by the Prime Minister some time ago, that members of the government and the senior bureaucracy should comport themselves as if the freedom of information bill had been passed? Is that still the policy of the government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this line of—

Hon. Lowell Murray: Yes or no.

Senator Perrault: This verbal assault is very interesting. Here we have a situation where the delay in moving ahead with this important and badly needed piece of legislation is because of the opposition of provincial governments, most of which are Conservative governments. The Conservative provincial governments are saying "Delay, don't advance it; these are our concerns," and we now have the opposition in this chamber accusing the government of being dilatory and preventing the bill from becoming law just because of our sensitivity for the concerns of the provincial governments.

• (1415)

Hon. G. I. Smith: You are not sensitive to the views of provincial governments, so what is the use of trying to throw upon us that distortion of the facts? We all know that is not true. Why does the honourable gentleman lower himself by making such ridiculous assertions?

Hon. David Walker: I believe he is only joking. Give him credit.

Senator Flynn: So it is not a priority of the government?

Senator Perrault: I will not dignify that comment with a reply.

Senator Balfour: Without labouring the question, I asked the Leader of the Government what the policy of the government is. Will he answer the question?

An Hon. Senator: He doesn't know.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, questions were asked by Senators Robichaud and Macquarrie on April 29, 1982 concerning the

[Senator Flynn.]

Skagit Valley flooding and the International Joint Commission order.

The IJC finds it has continuing jurisdiction over its 1942 order. It has reviewed the British Columbia request and all arguments presented and finds they "do not constitute sufficient grounds to persuade it to exercise its jurisdiction . . . and declines to grant the relief sought"; in other words, it rejects the request, but is careful not to say so explicitly.

Nevertheless, it also decides that in view of the B.C. and Canadian governments' positions and "under present circumstances," the valley should not be flooded provided that adequate compensation is paid to Seattle for loss of a valuable source of potential power. A negotiated solution requires an "immediate total commitment, by both parties, to the process of negotiation."

Seattle and British Columbia have not engaged in direct negotiations since the commission took up this matter in October. The special advisers' report shows that there are reasonable alternatives to the flooding.

To permit further negotiations, the IJC orders that the reservoir be maintained at its present level for one year. It also recognizes the important role to be played by the two federal governments in any final settlement. It creates a board chaired by two commissioners and including its two technical consultants, and invites Canada, British Columbia, Seattle, and the United States to name representatives to it. This board will "co-ordinate, facilitate, and review on a continuing basis, activities directed to achieving and implementing a negotiated, mutually acceptable agreement".

In a statement attached to the order, with which the two U.S. commissioners present associated themselves, Chairman Olson noted that the Canadian commissioners agreed to this order on the assumption that it would lead to a negotiated settlement. If such a settlement does not result "for reasons related to the position" of any of the parties concerned, the commission will take this into account in any further orders it may have to make.

We appreciate the efforts of the IJC in attempting to resolve this very difficult and long-standing issue. We are now carefully studying the order. As a preliminary reaction, we are pleased the commission has recognized that the valley should not be flooded, and that it has prohibited any further flooding in the immediate future while the parties seek a negotiated settlement.

It is clear that the Canadian position was not disadvantaged by having only two Canadian commissioners. Indeed, the order was signed by two Canadian and two U.S. commissioners.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): They have not been able to find a replacement for Senator Robichaud.

Senator Perrault: There is such an abundance of talent in this country that it is difficult to make a final selection.

[Later:]

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: In connection with the delayed answer to my question, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if it is now government policy that it is better to have only two members from the Canadian side on the International Joint Commission? Does this in fact portend a situation in which we will have but one Canadian, and then, eventually, only Americans on the commission? Is that the view of the government, or is there some other reason why we cannot have the three members appointed?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I really cannot provide any information beyond what I have provided today. It is hoped that a decision will be taken shortly to appoint Canada's full complement to that commission.

Senator Macquarrie: I did not consult with Senator Robichaud beforehand, but perhaps the time is approaching when concerted efforts will be made to draft that distinguished person as a member of the commission, much as we would miss him here.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I am not available. However, in light of the statement made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which was of course anticipated, I will say—and I am not about to ask a question—that I question the advisability of the Seattle Power Corporation and the Government of British Columbia again negotiating the possibility of flooding the Skagit River valley to a depth of 125½ feet over and above what is being flooded now. That would mean the loss of between 4,000 and 5,000 acres of land.

Senator Macquarrie: Hear, hear.

Senator Robichaud: That is perfectly beautiful land in British Columbia that would be flooded.

Senator Macquarrie: Hear, hear.

Senator Robichaud: I simply want to be on record as being vehemently opposed to such a move.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1420)

Senator Perrault: I know that the people of British Columbia will be heartened by that expression of support by the Honourable Senator Robichaud, who comes from the great province of New Brunswick.

Senator Flynn: They should be able to count on you, too, occasionally.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Do you share those views?

Senator Perrault: I share them completely. I thought it unnecessary to state that.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CENTRE BLOCK—INSTALLATION OF STEEL DOORS IN CORRIDORS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on March 17, 1982 Senator Hicks asked a question concerning the installation of doors in the corridors of the Centre Block.

The first safety improvements in the Centre Block were undertaken upon the authority of the Minister of Public Works, as recommended by the Dominion Fire Commissioner and in consultation with the authorities of the Senate and the House of Commons.

On October 29, 1979 the Dominion Fire Commissioner, in reply to questions asked in the Senate about fire protection measures in the Centre Block at the time of the burning of the Rideau Club, reported to the Speaker of the Senate the ongoing program of fire safety improvements in the building based on the commissioner's fire protection survey of 1973.

Phase one of the program is now being implemented. The detailed plans for phase one were submitted prior to tendering for approval through the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. Similarly, all future work will be submitted for approval before any work commences.

The purpose of the glazed metal partitions with doors in the corridors of the first, or ground, floor of the Centre Block and around two interior stairwells from the first to the sixth floors is to have them act as fire and smoke barriers.

According to today's safety standards, all stairwells in the Centre Block ought to be enclosed. Owing to the architecture of the building, however, it is impossible to enclose all stairwells without damaging the building's appearance and historical value. The Dominion Fire Commissioner agreed, therefore, that if the entire building were sprinklered—with the exception of corridors above the first floor and special areas such as the Senate and Commons chambers where decorative ceilings do not admit of sprinklers—then fire and smoke partitions would be required only where they are now being installed.

Since the interior stairs now being enclosed do not open directly to the outside of the building at the first floor level, smoke partitions have been installed in the corridors of the first floor to isolate the spread of smoke. The double doors in these corridor partitions will be held open by magnets which will only release the doors in case of fire.

The stairwell and corridor partitions are made of steel and wired glass to provide the required fire resistance. They will be painted to match their surrounding wall surfaces and will have an oak panel inserted in the middle rail. The hardware will be in bronze to match existing doors. They will fulfill their function of increasing the safety of building occupants without being unnecessarily obtrusive.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

STATUS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I refer you to page 3786 of Debates of the Senate of March 9, where I spoke about the freedom of information legislation. May I just repeat these words:

—consultations with the provincial attorneys general have recently taken place. The government is now re-examining certain aspects of the legislation in light of the representations made by the provinces on the subject.

That re-examination is still going on, and the views of the Bar Association will be given careful consideration.

Then there was another inquiry about whether the government officials will act as if the freedom of information legislation had been passed. I said at that time:

I have made inquiries on this point and can report that the policy announced by the Prime Minister has not been countermanded or nullified. However, it is certainly difficult to give a definitive answer on this point since certain aspects of the legislation are being re-examined. Obviously, we may end up with slightly different provisions in the bill when it comes before Parliament again.

That is the most recent statement on the subject.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): But the statement of the Prime Minister is more recent than that.

Hon. Lowell Murray: If the policy of the government continues to be that ministers are to comport themselves as if the freedom of information legislation were in effect, why then will the government not release the poll taken in Quebec by the Canadian Unity Information Office, especially since a large part of that poll has already appeared in the press in that province?

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CANADA-ITALY SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT

Question No. 73 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Peter Bosa:

1. When did the Social Security Agreement between Canada and Italy become effective?

2. How many applications originating in (a) Canada and (b) Italy have been received by the Department of National Health and Welfare since the agreement was signed?

3. How long does it take on average to process an application originating in (a) Canada and (b) Italy?

4. When an application is received by International Operations, how long does it take before it is sent to the destination in Italy?

5. How long does it take on average for the Italian provincial administration to process an application originating in Canada?

6. What percentage of applications originating in both countries are delayed as a result of incomplete information submitted?

7. What is the main complaint most frequently made by applicants to the Department?

8. In the experience of the Department, is there a variance in the amount of time that it takes to process an application by the provincial administration in Italy, and, if so, please indicate?

[Senator Perrault.]

Reply by the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

1. January 1, 1979.

2. (a) 10,932 (2,467 applications for Canadian benefits and 8,465 applications for Italian benefits);

(b) 656 (applications for Canadian benefits only)

3. (a) Approximately 6 months.

(b) Approximately 1½ years.

4. Approximately 6 months as delays are often experienced in obtaining the required documentation before forwarding the application.

5. Approximately 1½ years.

6. Approximately 85 per cent.

7. Length of time to process applications.

8. Processing times vary depending on the complexity of cases.

THE SENATE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 29, the debate on the motion of Senator Roblin:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.

Hon. Florence B. Bird: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Bosa for yielding to me this afternoon.

I think it is important for us to conduct a thoughtful and reasonable debate on Senator Roblin's motion because he proposes a drastic change in Canada's form of government and because it is true, as he said in his carefully prepared intervention, that a great many intelligent, well-informed people now believe, as he does, that our parliamentary system will be improved by an elected Senate. On the other hand, there are many intelligent, well-informed people, such as members of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, who think we do not need an elected Senate.

[Translation]

Of course, in view of such divergent opinions Senator Roblin's motion should be debated without any influence from personal considerations or political opportunism.

[English]

Senator Roblin's main argument is that an elected upper house will better serve regional interests. I cannot help wondering how many elected senators, no matter what their method of election, would be better informed and have a better understanding of the needs of the provinces than the five former provincial premiers and the 16 former provincial cabinet ministers who sit with us today.

[Translation]

It seems to me that Senator Roblin may be somewhat overly influenced by the prestige and the authority of the American Senate.

I am sorry that he is not here today, but he had the courtesy to inform me that he had to leave at a quarter to three. However, he promised to read my speech.

[English]

He does admit that he prefers our parliamentary system to the American congressional system. At the same time, rather illogically, he hankers after an elected Senate. He talks about checks and balances, as did the authors of the American Constitution, and says he hopes that an elected Senate might be able to check the power of Canadian prime ministers which he calls "unprecedented in parliamentary government over the centuries".

I agree with Senator Roblin that Canada's parliamentary system of responsible democratic government is superior to the American system. The 55 remarkable men who drafted the American Constitution in 1787 had a great command of the English language. They were high-minded, idealistic, intelligent and eloquent, but they were not particularly good political scientists and they lacked experience in the political arena. They were theorists rather than pragmatists. For example, I have never been able to understand why they thought it was a bright idea to have the House of Representatives elected every two years. They also required the Senate to be elected by both houses of the state legislatures. That was changed in 1912 because senators were thought to be dominated by the trusts and big business. The 17th Amendment provided that senators be elected by direct popular vote.

• (1430)

When being critical of the American congressional system, as I am, it must be remembered that after the Declaration of Independence and the successful revolution, Jefferson, Hamilton, Munroe and the others were determined to break with time-honoured parliamentary procedures and write a constitution suitable for a new republic in a new world. Understandably, they had a low opinion of monarchs in general and George III in particular. They therefore devised what they thought was a foolproof system of checks and balances by separating the executive from the legislative function.

In order to prevent the President from having the nearly absolute power of the eighteenth century King of England, they made him the chief executive. They gave legislative power to the Congress.

The system of checks and balances has not had the desired effect. Today the President of the United States, with due respect to Senator Roblin, exercises far more power than any Canadian Prime Minister or any other president or prime minister in a free, democratic society. He is not only chief executive; he is the head of state, the leader of his political party and the commander-in-chief of the armed forces.

He also has the right of veto. His veto can be overruled by a two-thirds majority of both houses. But so great is the almost mystical quality of the popular image of the President that Congress is very reluctant to vote against him. The record tells the story.

Franklin Roosevelt vetoed 621 bills, and only nine of those vetoes were overridden. None of Kennedy's 13 vetoes or Johnson's nine was overridden. Nixon vetoed 10 bills, and only one veto was overridden. Carter vetoed nine bills, and only two were overridden.

The veto seems to increase the popularity of the President because it shows he is willing to stand up to Congress. According to Lord Bryce, "the larger the community becomes, the less does it respect an assembly and the more it is attracted by an individual man." That is something we might think about here, too.

Although Congress retains the right to declare war, the President often acts in his executive capacity without letting it know what he is up to.

Truman, as commander-in-chief of the armed forces, authorized the dropping of the atomic bomb. Eisenhower sent the marines into Lebanon. Kennedy launched the disastrous Bay of Pigs operation and ordered the blockade during the Cuban missile crisis. Nixon authorized 3,900 bombing missions over Cambodia.

All of these decisions were carried out first and Congress was told afterwards. Such actions could hardly be possible under a parliamentary system of responsible government where the Prime Minister must answer to the House of Commons every day while the house is in session.

Senator Roblin suggests that an elected Canadian Senate might be given the power to ratify appointments to regional and national bodies as the U.S. Senate does for supreme court judges, cabinet ministers, senior public servants and ambassadors.

This constitutional power was given, idealistically, to the U.S. Senate in order to restrict the opportunity of patronage by the chief executive. It was one of those checks and balances considered so important by the drafters of the American Constitution.

The desired check has not taken place. The President's power is in large part due to patronage. This has been possible for two reasons. If the Senate majority belongs to the President's party, it does not want to restrict patronage. As a result, appointments are arranged between the President and his supporters in the Senate so as best to serve the party's interests. If the opposition party is strong in the Senate, it tends to support the worst appointments in order to discredit the President, who takes the blame. It is the appointer and not the ratifier who is criticized.

It seems likely that, since human nature is much the same everywhere, the same sort of political behaviour might also occur in Canada, so the quality of appointments would not be improved by giving the job of ratification to the Senate.

Honourable senators, there is a strong argument against an elected Senate that should be considered in the light of improving the efficiency of our present parliamentary system.

When the American and the Canadian Constitutions were drafted, Senates were considered necessary for the same reason. They were both expected to give careful study to legislation in order to prevent the elected body from passing unwise or unworkable laws that might be detrimental to the people and to the Commonwealth.

On this subject, the differences between eighteenth century language in the United States and nineteenth century language in Canada is, I think, worth quoting. I find it amusing. Alexander Hamilton said the United States Senate was needed "to restrain fickleness and the impetuosity of the popular House and so guard against the effects of gusts of passion or sudden changes of opinion in the people." Eighty years later, Sir John A. Macdonald translated Hamilton's embroidered language into three words: "sober second thought".

As we all know, the majority of the members of the other place are, quite naturally, interested in being re-elected. Inevitably, this means that they are inclined to think in the short term about the reaction of the electorate to legislation. Senators do not have to come up for election and so are able to take a long-term view. We have shown that again and again, I think, by the excellent way in which we amend legislation. But at the same time, for 40 years we have refrained from using our veto. This was not always so. Between 1921 and 1930, 47 bills failed to pass the Senate, 32 of them being government bills. Between 1930 and 1940, 13 bills from the Commons were rejected. Does this perhaps indicate that we have not been doing our duty with regard to taking a long term view of the effects of legislation?

Perhaps this is one of the reasons we have so little prestige now. Is it possible that a suspensory vote might enable us to do our job better without encroaching on the rights of the elected body?

In conclusion, I want to say that I believe very strongly that it is important to have men and women in the Senate who have experience with legislation and with government. This is one of the strengths of this house at the present time. The former cabinet ministers and the former members of Parliament and of provincial legislatures who sit here today do provide very valuable knowledge about the problems of government. This has been brought home to me, again and again, when I have listened to the questions asked in joint committees. Senators know more, understand more, and ask more probing and pertinent questions than members of the other place. The work of our committees is also outstanding because of the knowledge and experience of people who have been studying legislation for years.

I doubt very much if elected senators would have the same degree of know-how and savvy. There is also a possibility that an elected Senate might become a replica and a rival of the other place. The dangers of that were ably pointed out by Senator Leblanc last week.

Aside from Senator Roblin's motion, I am sure we all agree that a great deal of internal reform of the Senate is necessary. For that reason, I hope that we are going to debate seriously the recommendations contained in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We are glad to see that the Minister of State for Economic Development has arrived right at the proper time.

Hon. Jack Marshall: He timed it very well.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I look forward to seeing the Leader of the Opposition next week right on time.

Senator Flynn: He can count on that, I'm sure.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Perhaps the minister is nervous about arriving early.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 11, at 8 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RESPECTING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF POSITION OF DEPUTY SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

THURSDAY, May 6, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which was authorized "to examine and report on the establishment of the position of Deputy Speaker of the Senate, including the need for such a position, the recommended procedures therefor, and the compensation to be paid the incumbent" has, in obedience to the order of reference of February 24, 1982, examined the said matter and now reports as follows:

The need for the position of Deputy Speaker was outlined to the Committee by the Speaker, the Honourable Jean Marchand. He emphasized that his concern was not just for the Speaker but also for the Senate. Because the Speaker of the Senate is fourth in the line of protocol, after the Governor General, the Prime Minister, and the Chief Justice of Canada, he is frequently required to serve as a representative of Canada on special occasions. His role in this respect is similar to that of the speakers of second chambers of other states, who also represent their countries on various occasions.

The Speaker submitted that the necessity to attend to duties outside the Senate often places him in the position of having to secure a replacement for what could be either a short or an extended period. The request sometimes comes without much notice and requires rearrangement of plans by, and other inconveniences to, the Senator asked to occupy the Chair.

The Committee considered whether, on the basis of the Speaker of the Senate Act, the Senate has the authority on its own to create the position of Deputy Speaker simply by a change in the Rules of the Senate. The evidence presented to the Committee revealed that the establishment of, and payment from public funds of remuneration for, the position of Deputy Speaker requires more than an amendment to the Rules of the Senate. It requires legislation.

The Committee, however, does not recommend legislation to establish the position of Deputy Speaker at this time. It believes that the problem can be met in another way.

Under section 3 of the Speaker of the Senate Act, the Senate has the authority "whenever the Senate is informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker" to "choose any senator to preside as the Speaker during such absence".

Two conditions, therefore, must exist before the law operates: (1) the unavoidable absence of the Speaker; and (2) the giving to the Senate of information regarding such absence by the Clerk at the Table.

Once these conditions are met two rights (or powers) may be exercised: (1) the right of the Senate to choose any senator "to preside as the Speaker"; and (2) the right of the senator chosen to have and execute "all the powers, privileges and duties of Speaker, until the Speaker himself resumes the Chair or another Speaker is appointed by the Governor General".

The Committee is of the opinion that, if the Senate, in the above circumstances, can choose any senator "to preside as the Speaker" during the Speaker's absence, then it can choose the same senator each time. If the same senator can be chosen each time, then the Senate can at the beginning or during the course of a session, as a matter of convenience, exercise that right and make its choice known in advance of being informed of the Speaker's unavoidable absence. In other words, it becomes a matter of internal policy whether the Senate chooses a senator for such purpose once for each session or whether it chooses that same senator each time he or she is required to replace the Speaker.

The Senate could, for convenience, make its choice known in each session by way of a motion to that effect and the senator named in such a motion would then regularly replace the Speaker on a pro tempore basis. He or she would be in the same position as the Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons who, when the Speaker of the House is unavoidably absent, can only take the Chair after the Clerk at the Table has so informed the House. The difference would be that the senator chosen in advance to be "Speaker pro tempore" would not have the title of Deputy Speaker nor would he or she be entitled to remuneration. The Committee was informed and believes that many senators would consider it an honour to be so chosen and would be pleased to assume the added temporary duties involved without additional compensation.

Accordingly, the Committee recommends as follows:

(1) That for each session there be a senator to preside as "Speaker pro tempore", such senator to be chosen by the Senate through the adoption of a motion with effect as follows:

"Whenever the Senate during the course of the present session is informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker, the Honourable Senator (name of Senator), if present, shall preside as Speaker pro tempore during such absence."

(2) That rule 10 of the Rules of the Senate be amended to read as follows:

"10. Whenever the Senate is informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker, or of any senator designated in a motion of the Senate to preside as Speaker pro tempore, the Senate may choose any senator to preside as Speaker during such absence; and such senator shall thereupon have and execute all the powers, privileges and duties of Speaker, until the Speaker, or the Speaker pro tempore, resumes the Chair, or another Speaker is appointed by the Governor General."

Respectfully submitted,

H. CARL GOLDENBERG,
Chairman.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the year ending December 31, 1981 has been referred to the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages.

THE LATE CHARLES A. CLARK

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of the government and honourable senators on this side of the house, I should like to express our condolences to the Right Honourable Joe Clark, his wife and family, on the death of his father.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Needless to say, on this side of the house we also want to express our condolences to the Right Honourable Joe Clark and his family.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I shall see to it that the expressions of sympathy of the Senate on this occasion are forwarded.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred the subject matter of Bill C-90, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal certain acts in consequence thereof, and to ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 4067.)

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, having regard to the fact that this is a subject-matter report and is not, as a matter of practice, adopted by the Senate, I should like to give a word of explanation of the bill, as I have done on previous occasions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (2005)

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, this bill implements a ways and means motion which was part of the material tabled by the Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981. It deals with two kinds of preferences—the negotiated preferences with New Zealand and the unilateral preferences given to developing countries. The bill contains an updating of the provisions of the Customs Tariff relating to New Zealand that give effect to the agreement on trade and economic co-operation between the Government of Canada and the Government of New Zealand dated September 25, 1981, which came into force on January 1, 1982.

The bill proposes to repeal the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932 and the New Zealand Trade Agreement Amendment Act, clauses 20 and 21. The bill confirms the existing tariff treatment, but deletes obsolete phrasing from the tariff which is based on the prior trade agreement.

The bill proposes, as well, changes to the general preferential tariff Schedule I, most of which were recommended by the Tariff Board in May 1981.

Clause 3 of the bill provides that the Governor in Council may designate any country, to which the general preferential tariff has been extended, to be a least developed developing country.

As honourable senators who are members of the committee will recall, that phrasing provoked considerable discussion among the members, and also among the officials of the department when they were before us, as to what is a least developed developing country. Most of us thought, or perhaps all of us thought, that there could be only one of that kind of animal, but, apparently, what is intended is that there may be a category into which a number of developing countries will fall to a level that may be the lowest level of all the developing countries. This particular item that I am referring to deals with that, and since we do not appear to have the patience to try to rephrase the expression, as far as this report is concerned, there has been no objection taken to it, but I have added these words of explanation.

However, the result of this will be the removal of duties on goods covered by the general preferential tariff when imported from countries which are so designated. It is to be noted that a large number of products, including textiles and apparel products, are not subject to the general preferential tariff, and such products will not enjoy any exemption from duty.

Clause 4 of the bill contains a safeguard mechanism for Canadian manufacturers which will allow the Governor in Council to establish tariff rate quotas should the Tariff Board recommend such quotas and should the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce agree with the Tariff Board's recommendations. As a result, there will be a limitation on the quantity of goods which can be imported under the general preferential tariff. Once the quantity is reached, the most favoured nation rate will apply which will subject the goods to a higher rate of duty. This is designed to provide relief for developing countries in cases where their products are causing difficulties for Canadian manufacturers, but at the same time will allow some trade to take place at lower rates of duty. This will allow developing countries to obtain greater export earnings on some exports to Canada.

It is also proposed that Tariff Item 47800-1 be introduced to authorize the Governor in Council to provide duty-free entry for products that are designed for disabled persons. This will include, for instance, removal of duties on selector controlled devices used by disabled people, and electronic devices to aid persons who have speech impediments. Duty-free entry is proposed for certain religious printed material and unexposed instant film for hospitals.

The bill also provides authority for the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, to amend the Customs Tariff by striking out "any measurement expressed in Imperial measure" and substituting the metric equivalent therefor.

The subject of the metric equivalent is one that has occupied considerable space in the press recently. The state of the law has developed, as it concerns the Senate, since August 1977, when the bill governing conversion to the metric system of measurement was debated and passed by the Senate. At that time Senator Molgat moved second reading of the bill. That act would appear to give authority to Parliament to make provisions of the kind proposed in this bill, although it was the view of the committee that we would have a more flexible statute if the alternative Imperial measurements remained in the statute with the metric measurements, so as to more readily deal with countries which retain the Imperial measurement.

The report also deals with certain dental materials. Your committee had raised this issue last year in connection with an earlier bill, and the minister had undertaken to study it. Certain changes have been made. Duties have been lowered, and if it appears that the duty is causing an unduly high price for these dental amalgams in the home market, then the minister has undertaken to have another look at it. Subject to that, that is the substance of the study which the committee made of this bill.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief observation on this bill, because there is one feature that caught my eye when it was discussed in committee, and perhaps it should be dealt with specifically at this stage. It has to do with the list of countries which are regarded as being "least developed" and therefore entitled to special consideration with respect to their exports to Canada.

One would have thought that the idea behind this piece of legislation was to make sure that countries which were least developed—in the sense of being poverty stricken or lacking those assets, materials or resources to graduate from the least developed stage—would be the ones to which we would extend the best tariff consideration. I confess that that is a principle to which I do not object and which I thought was the substance of the bill; but, on inquiry, we discovered that the list of countries to be included in this category of "least developed" was strange, to say the least. Unfortunately, I do not have the complete list in front of me, but I well remember—and this might be of interest to the house—that Kuwait was described as being one of the least developed countries. I think it probable that Kuwait has the highest per capita income of any country in the world. How that country can be classified as least developed puzzles me. I found that Brazil was among the countries described as least developed. While Brazil is not in the same class as Kuwait, it is certainly regarded as a country that has made excellent progress and by most, I am sure, as being out of the least developed category. If I had before me the full list of countries which are included in this category I am sure I could point to a number that would cause eyebrows to be raised.

• (2010)

Hon. David Walker: What about Argentina?

Senator Roblin: I wish I could remember. It is certainly least developed, but not in a material sense. It is least developed in some other sense.

In any case, I want to tell the house that this provision in the bill which includes Kuwait and Brazil in the category of least developed countries seems to me to be highly questionable. When this bill reaches the stage where we look at it in a formal sense, there may be the opportunity to offer an expression of opinion and the advice that we amend that list to make it reflect what most people regard as the least developed countries in the world.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

PRESENCE OF MINISTERS IN CHAMBER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate will not be in attendance this evening, but his colleagues, Senator Argue, Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Olson, Minister of State for Economic Development, and Senator Austin, Minister of State, as you will no doubt have noticed, are here.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Has the Leader of the Government in the Senate no parliamentary secretary, as was suggested on a previous occasion?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: He has a deputy, of course.

Senator Flynn: The deputy leader, of course, is not as loquacious as the leader himself, and so is not as much fun.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with Senator Olson here we can always use up at least an hour of our time in seeking replies to questions.

Tonight I want to tell Senator Olson that I have begun a study of the lists of mega-projects he provided last week. Those lists, of course, suggest many questions, all of which, however, I do not intend to put to him tonight. I will try just a few and see how he responds; then, tomorrow and on following days my colleagues on this side will no doubt be provoked to add more. I doubt, however, that we will be provided with appropriate answers. In any event, from a historical point of view, the record will ultimately speak for itself.

The minister gave us four lists of mega-projects. One is entitled, "Advanced Planning and Design Stage." Included under that heading is "Plains Upgrader, Saskatchewan." Is this well known to the minister?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Yes. I understand.

Senator Flynn: What assurance does the minister have that this project will proceed, and in what time frame?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, as Senator Flynn has already pointed out, as he always does—he gives all the facts and nothing but the facts—this project is in an advanced planning and design stage. A number of other projects are in that stage, too, but my honourable friend will realize that there have been some very significant changes, both in the demand for and the price of crude oil. What this upgrader will do is to take heavy oil and upgrade it to a synthetic fuel that will be suitable for a lot of refineries in a wide spectrum of refining design across this country.

I am not sure that I can give my honourable friend an exact date on which everything is going to go ahead, any more than other people can when costs of investment, driven either by inflation, or time lags, or indeed, by price itself, cause people to consider timing, and that sort of thing, as is normal with most astute businessmen. I do not have with me tonight a detailed analysis of commitments from the people directly involved in making investments.

Senator Flynn: I suppose, if you were to translate that reply into a few words, you would say, "I have no assurance, and cannot reply to the question of time frame."

Senator Olson: I tried to give the honourable gentleman, as I am sure he realizes he deserves, an expanded explanation so that he would not be disappointed at not getting some information after all his efforts.

Senator Flynn: The minister causes me to remember that the wife of one of my friends used to say, "If he knows the answers to the question it will be very short; but if he makes a long reply it means he doesn't know the answer."

● (2020)

I have a supplementary question, to which I suppose I will get the same kind of answer. Would the minister explain why two of these mega-projects, the TQ&M Pipeline and the Norman Wells Development, appear on two lists, one entitled "Under Active Construction," and the other, "Hydrocarbons and Petrochemical Projects in the Planning Stage"?

Senator Olson: That is because there is validity to both of those replies. With respect to the Norman Wells Development, the actual construction of the pipeline itself is not under way at this point in time, but the necessary authority and commitments by the government are in place to the effect that that project will proceed to the construction phase, which is to take place, I believe, in the third quarter of 1983, although the date may not be exactly that precise. That much time was given in response to some requests that were made by a number of interested groups.

There are, of course, some other activities related to that project, such as drilling out sufficient capacity from a known oil field so that the pipeline capacity of 25,000 to 30,000 barrels a day will be available when the pipeline is completed. I think that the commitment to go forward with that mega-project is of a level such that already some work has indeed been done with respect to the preparation: Therefore, I expect that it can quite truthfully be said that certain preliminary stages are under way.

Turning for a moment to the TQ&M Pipeline, the "Q" part of that represents the section in Quebec, as my honourable friend is well aware. Although I would like to verify this, I believe that there are three pipeline laying spreads that are actually under way on certain sections of that pipeline. I believe there is a river crossing under construction, for example, and that there are two other spreads actively working now.

You keep asking me about mega-projects that are going to go ahead and I have to keep reminding you that all of these things are, in fact, happening.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but slowly.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Some of them are not!

Senator Olson: There is another phase of the TQ&M Pipeline which involves some sections in the maritime provinces where the design and engineering have not been completed. That, I suppose, would fall into the category of planning.

I hope my honourable friend will ask me a question about the $600 million mega-project that is going forward in the Beaufort Sea, because otherwise I may have to find some way of reminding him of that.

Senator Flynn: There will obviously be a question with regard to that, but I leave it to my friend, Senator Roblin. I cannot swallow more than I have heard now.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, has concluded his inquiries for the moment, I will ask a couple of questions supplementary to his.

I think it would be helpful if the minister who provided us with this list of mega-projects were to withdraw it in order to revise it or, at least, explain it, because there are some items in it that certainly require an explanation.

Senator Olson: I could start at the top and explain each one, if you like.

Senator Roblin: One of the things that bothers me is that the Hibernia Oil Development appears on this list twice. Are we to add those together or does that constitute double counting?

Senator Olson: There are no totals taken of this list. As you know, it adds up to many billions of dollars. We are not trying to add things twice in order to arrive at a larger total, but if a mega-project falls into more than one category, such as "Under Active Construction" and "Advanced Planning and Design Stage" or whatever, in fairness, and in the precision and accuracy that we attempt to give, it should be placed in more than one category.

Senator Flynn: It is repetitious, as usual.

Senator Roblin: I agree with the minister; it is perfectly fair to count them twice and he has done that with great efficiency.

Senator Olson: No, I did not say that.

Senator Roblin: If the minister has not counted these projects twice, perhaps he could revise the list for us so that we may better understand what he is trying to tell us. For example, Heavy Fuel Oil Upgraders appears on this list no less than four times, I believe. Are these separate projects? If so, which ones are they? I think they should be detailed for us.

Perhaps the minister would look at some of these other items as well. He has the Dempster gas pipeline here. He also has the Alaska Highway gas pipeline on the list, but I hesitate to mention that, because I am sure that the minister has forgotten about that. If the Alaska Highway gas pipeline is not going to go forward, does the minister seriously suggest that the Dempster gas pipeline will go ahead? If that is so, it certainly seems to me that he owes us an explanation.

● (2025)

He also has on the list the polar gas pipeline. Is there anyone in Canada who thinks that the Polar gas pipeline is going to go ahead during the life of this Parliament or the next?

Senator Smith: Or the life of this government.

Senator Roblin: The life of this government may be much shorter than that.

Senator Olson: You have to use foresight and imagination. These mega-projects go beyond the year 2000.

Senator Flynn: Imagination, yes!

Senator Roblin: I pay my respects to the minister; he has enough imagination for two people. You will understand what I am saying after you have read this list of mega-projects.

He also has export of liquid natural gas to Japan, when we have not even received a National Energy Board declaration that there is enough conventional gas to export to the United States in excess of current authorizations, to say nothing of the finds in the north, which are far from being quantified in terms of appreciation of supply by the National Energy Board.

He also has the Suncor expansion program on this list. When does he think that is coming on? Is that scheduled in the near future?

Senator Olson: There has been planning done on that.

Senator Roblin: He is right, there has been a great deal of planning done. There was a great deal of planning done for the Alaska Highway gas pipeline; there was a great deal of planning done for Cold Lake. Cold Lake is still on this list, by the way.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, no!

Senator Roblin: Oh, yes, Cold Lake is here, as well as the Alsands project. All these other mega-projects, if not figments of the imagination, are certainly so far into the future that they are quite useless in providing any real guidance for tracing the economic course of this country within the next short while, at any rate.

So, I say to my honourable friend that this list may have some merit. I am not one to say that there are not going to be many projects of value and of use to this country put into place in these fields in the next few years. I am sure that there are. I am betting that there are.

Senator Smith: In spite of the government.

Senator Roblin: This government will not be around much longer.

So, I say to the minister: Would you please help us out? Would you please revise this list? Would you give us some idea of the time frames? Would you give us an idea as to which are duplications and which are not? Would you give us some up-to-date material so that we can form a true appreciation of the extent of the individual projects and the time factors attached to them?

If we had that, I think it might be of some assistance to those of us who want to consider government policy with respect to mega-projects. If the minister will not do that for us, then this information is not very helpful.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am just amazed at the attitude taken by the opposition. I provided that list to my honourable friends in the form in which they asked for it. They asked for a list with respect to mega-projects. They know—and I know that they will not even try to deny this—that the major projects task force set themselves the task of looking at projects defined as being projects over $100 million between now and the year 2000. That is exactly what they did.

I have given that to the members of the opposition. As well, I have added those projects that we know will go ahead, and one example is the major expansion of the railway capacity in western Canada.

Senator Flynn: Double tracking.

Senator Olson: That, by the way, will cost approximately 130 times the minimum definition of a mega-project. If my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition wants to be fair, and I know that he does, he should regard that as being 130 mega-projects, according to the definition.

Another amazing thing is that Senator Roblin acts as though the Alaska Highway gas pipeline has been cancelled. He knows that nothing could be further from the truth. There is simply a soft gas market in the United States at the moment, so the companies want time so that they can sign the gas contracts when it is to their advantage, and in an era when it is more economical for them to do so. He also knows that it is necessary to have these contracts signed prior to the final details of this massive financing program being worked out. He knows that they must be in place before the final details of this massive financing program can be put together. As a matter of fact, he probably also knows that there will be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $300 million to $400 million spent this year on the eastern leg of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline.

● (2030)

The honourable senator suggests that it has been cancelled and asks why it is on the list. Two or three times as many dollars are being spent this year in order that it may qualify as a mega-project. The balance of the massive part of the 56-inch line from Caroline, Alberta, to the Yukon and Alaska border is not cancelled and will, very likely, be completed in this decade and, certainly, within the time frame in respect of which the senator was asking for a list of mega-projects.

Honourable senators, my answer is probably a little longer than those opposite like.

Senator Flynn: It's not much longer than those you usually give.

Senator Olson: Senator Roblin asks if I will come back with another list which will include a more precise time frame as to when they will start, be completed, and so on. The problem with that, of course, is that he is now asking for my opinion.

Senator Smith: You have not given it yet.

Senator Olson: He is asking me to give an estimate as to when the mega-projects will be going forward, and the details I gave are based on facts. A lot of work has already been done by a number of companies in the private sector, and they carried that information not only to the government but to the task force that studied mega-projects. That information is included in the compilation of the information before you.

If that is not what the honourable senator wants, then I can do it some other way, but I am not going to fall into the trap—

Senator Smith: You are always falling into the trap.

Senator Olson: —of coming forward with my opinion based on someone else's decision as to when all of these will go forward.

I should like to suggest to the party opposite, and its spokesman, in this case Senator Roblin, that they need a little more imagination than they have displayed now.

The government and private sector, especially in projects of this size, need some forward planning and consideration for many reasons such as market conditions, design, engineering, financing and all those sorts of matters. It seems to me that those opposite should lift their sights a little and look into the future, as we are doing. They will then generate the kind of optimism that we have in Canada, and that could well permeate that party for a while too.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has given us some excellent advice. He says that we should look forward into the future. How I wish he had had that thought in his mind when he and his colleagues looked forward into the future when the National Energy Program was put together; how I wish he had had that thought in his mind when he brought in a tax régime that made it impossible to proceed with many of the energy projects he is talking about; how I wish there had been a little foresight when those enthusiastic amateurs over there started to fiddle with the energy industry in Canada. That would have been of service to the country.

If my honourable friend has learned something from that and now wishes to look into the future, I wish him well. However, when he tells me that the Alaska Highway gas pipeline has not been abandoned and says that the proof of that is that the eastern and western legs are going forward, and I know about that—

Senator Olson: There is far more to it than that. If I had wanted to take longer, I could have laid it all out.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can lay it all out because, whatever he may say, the connection of supply between Alaska and the lower 48 states is not going ahead at the present time.

Furthermore, he might very well explain to us why our ambassador to Washington has said that the deal will have to be re-negotiated. Mr. Allan Gottlieb has said that the agreement with the two countries on building the 7,700-kilometre pipeline will now have to be re-negotiated and that Parliament will probably have to re-authorize the construction of the line. If that does not mean it has reached a pretty serious patch, I would like to know what it does mean.

I should like the minister to answer a question which he ducked the other day in connection with a letter sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Secretary of State of the United States, Alexander Haig, in which there was an implied threat as to what Canada would do if the pipeline did not go ahead. Is this what he was talking about? Was he going to tell the Americans that the deal was off; that we were going to re-negotiate; and that it would have to go back to Parliament? In fact, I think the wording of the present law may indicate that it has to go back to Parliament, but that can be looked into at a later date.

If my honourable friend wants to talk about mega-projects, then I certainly invite him to do so. I invite him to relate the failure of Cold Lake, the failure of Alsands, the failure of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline, and the failure of Judy Creek.

Senator Olson: That is the wrong terminology.

Senator Roblin: It has failed as of this moment. Can my honourable friend tell me that it is going ahead? He cannot; he can only say that it may go ahead.

Senator Olson: Does my honourable friend want to stop long enough in order to get a reply?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend favoured me with a reasonably long reply, and I am going to favour him with a reasonably long question.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Unreasonably long.

Senator Roblin: That is your opinion and you are entitled to it, but I am not going to endorse it.

Senator Smith: Even if it is wrong.

Senator Roblin: I would not endorse it if it were right or wrong because it is his opinion and not mine.

I want the honourable minister to face up to the fact that we have missed the boat in using energy to boost the Canadian economy. He thought he was going to do it when he wrote Economic Development for Canada in the 1980's, which was contained in the last budget papers.

I should like him to relate the forecasts that were made at that time of energy being the motive force of the Canadian economy, and the very unsatisfactory and unhappy situation in which my honourable friend finds himself at the present time.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will be brief. I do not believe that two wrongs make a right. Ambassador Gottlieb has said that the article contained in the New York Times was full of errors of fact and misinterpreted Canadian policy, which will be evident to any Canadian and most Americans who read that article.

Senator Frith: That's what makes it attractive.

Senator Olson: As Senator Frith has said, that is what makes it attractive to members of the opposition.

Senator Flynn: Be careful if you are being coached by Senator Frith. You may shorten your answers to come to grips with the facts.

Senator Olson: In response to the other part of the preamble that had at least an element of an inquiry for information, it is my information that the sponsoring companies, that is Foot-hills in Canada and the consortium in the United States for both the lower 48 section as well as the Alaska section, are continuing to contribute, to the tune of scores of millions of dollars per year, towards the preparation of the building of that line. I am not sure there is anything that can speak louder than that kind of continued support for the building of the pipeline.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to the minister outline the mega-projects which he says are to be the cornerstone on which the prosperity of this country is to be re-built.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I did not say that at all.

Senator Donahoe: I did not wish to imply that those were his exact words, but if that is not his meaning, then his recitation of the meaning of mega-projects that he listed is meaningless.

Senator Smith: Such imagination.

Senator Donahoe: I understood my honourable friend to say that; at least that was the sense which I took, inasmuch as there was any sense, from what the minister had to say. I noted one striking omission from the list of mega-projects, and I rise to my feet to ask a supplementary question, which is: Did the minister intentionally avoid any reference to the Guysborough Railway, or can he now give us a status report on that mega-undertaking?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will have to take that question as notice since I do not have a detailed or updated report with me.

Senator Roblin: How did you miss it?

Senator Smith: The honourable gentleman has entertained us with his very fancy flights of imagination, and they have distracted his attention from the problems of the future and, no doubt, he hopes they will distract ours.

However, I would ask him to come back now to some of the hard facts of life if he can bring himself down to the level of facts. I would remind him that the official unemployment statistics last week indicate that there are 1.5 million unemployed people in this country.

Can the honourable gentleman connect his flights of imagination about mega-projects before the year 2000 with the daily needs of these people and their opportunities for jobs? I would be glad to have him do it now. How does he connect those two things?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I want to reply to the preamble to the question.

Senator Smith: No, no.

Senator Olson: If the preamble has no meaning and the honourable senator does not want me to deal with it, he should not have included it.

Senator Smith: I included it because it is true.

Senator Olson: He can have it one way or the other. I would tell my honourable friend and Senator Donahoe that it is not a matter of downgrading for me to come down to the facts of life, because I live there all the time.

Senator Smith: What a change.

Senator Roblin: Like the mega-projects?

● (2040)

Senator Olson: When questioned, I have said over and over again in this chamber and at various meetings that, in my opinion, the so-called mega-projects—the ones that are known or are on the list—will amount to approximately 20 to 25 per cent of the total capital investment that will be required and will be made in this country between now and the year 2000. In aggregate, a number of massive investments is required in this country. How either Senator Smith or Senator Donahoe—and the Leader of the Opposition does it every once in a while too—can accuse me, and at the same time keep a straight face, of hanging our hat on the mega-projects as the main thrust of economic development in this country is beyond me. I have said exactly the opposite. The arguments that we have presented in a number of papers say exactly the opposite. If they want to go down that road, I guess that is up to them, but I have to tell them, over and over again, that I am going to correct them when they make that erroneous statement.

Regarding the rate of unemployment, that is an extremely serious matter.

Senator Smith: Yes, it is.

Senator Olson: We have not attempted, in any way, to mislead the opposition, or the people who are suffering as a consequence of unemployment, to the effect that a number of these mega-projects, which will obviously not get under way for several months and in some cases for several years, should be construed as an immediate remedy for the very serious economic and social problems—

Senator Flynn: It's about time you made that clear.

Senator Olson: —that stem from today's unemployment. No one needs to spend a lot of time on that, and I do not think it is particularly helpful for the opposition—

Senator Smith: It's not helpful to him.

Senator Olson: —to constantly play that old record because—

Senator Flynn: It's your old record.

Senator Olson: —we look to the future, bearing in mind the social and economic hardships that are being experienced as a consequence of the international economic downturn. I will not apologize for my colleagues and I having some vision in looking towards proper consideration, which includes things I mentioned a minute ago—planning, designing, engineering, financing and market conditions—for all of the great things that are going to go on in this country between now and the end of the century.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I have no doubt that, as soon as the public has a chance to change the government of this country and some other government takes office, some of those things will come about, but right now the people who have responsibility for this have responsibility not only for these flights of imagination as to what will happen before the year 2000 but also for dealing with those people who are out of work and are hungry today. What will a mega-project that matures in the year 2000 have to do with that? It is time the honourable gentleman quit fooling himself. He is not fooling anybody else, so why should he continue to worry about fooling himself as to the great importance to today of these mega-projects for the year 2000, and not decide to change the present policy or institute some other policy that will help to ameliorate the problems of the million and a quarter people who are out of work today because of the policies of this government, which we have been telling him about now for years and which he pays no attention to but which pretty soon he will have to pay attention to, or he will not be around to pay attention to anything.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is a rather simple and brief answer—

Senator Smith: Any answer you give will be simple.

Senator Olson: —to both those questions. They are so simple that my honourable friend should have known them before he asked the questions. Apparently, he does not; otherwise I presume he would not have asked them.

Senator Smith: Don't worry; I know them.

Senator Olson: In the first place, insofar as making some change is concerned, the people of Canada had a chance and they did that in May of 1979.

Senator Flynn: They made a big mistake.

Senator Olson: It took them only until February of 1980 to realize what a very serious mistake they had made, and they remedied it.

Senator Smith: On a falsehood.

Senator Roblin: Make the most of it.

Senator Olson: Well, you can call it what you like.

Senator Smith: Call it like it is.

Senator Olson: When people go to the polls, that is not a false situation; that is what they want to happen at that time.

Senator Smith: It didn't happen.

Senator Olson: We accept that for May 1979, and you might as well accept it—

Senator Smith: It didn't happen.

Senator Olson: —for what happened in February 1980, too.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Flynn: You went under false pretenses.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I note the careful attention the honourable gentleman paid to answering my question, and what a great amount of encouragement and relief there must now be welling up in the heart of every unemployed person.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development which I think will elicit a "yes" or "no" response.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Oh, gee whiz!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Careful now!

Senator Murray: Was the speech delivered yesterday by the Minister of Finance at the OECD meeting intended to reflect any change in the economic policy or priorities of the government?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance, of course, can give a more detailed answer himself when he—

Hon. G. I. Smith: Well, he's not here.

Senator Olson: He'll be back before long. The Minister of Finance indicated in very clear and precise terms that Canada wants a major focus to deal with the unemployment problems—

Senator Flynn: It's about time.

Senator Olson: —that are a result of the monetary and fiscal policies of a number of nations in the western world. If my honourable friends knew that and had read some of the articles that are reasonably accurate before they came in for Question Period today, then, of course, they were seeking answers to questions they already knew the answers to. In any event, I should like to re-emphasize for them, in case they missed it, that the Minister of Finance is extremely concerned about the hardship and other social and economic problems resulting from this international slump or downturn in the economy, and Canada would like to play its part in remedying that as soon as possible, with a higher level of emphasis on the unemployed than has been the case in dealing with inflation and all of the undesirable consequences like high interest rates that stem from that.

Senator Murray: Does this represent a change in the economic policy or priorities of the Government of Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I guess Senator Murray can decide what—

Senator Murray: No, Senator Murray cannot decide.

Senator Olson: —definition he wants to give it.

Senator Murray: The minister is supposed to tell us.

Senator Olson: He can read what the Minister of Finance has said. It may not be completely accurate or complete, but it may be fairly close, and he can decide if there is a change.

Senator Murray: That is an irresponsible answer.

Senator Olson: What the Minister of Finance has said is that he wants to raise the concern about unemployment and the consequences of it, and it ought to be self-evident to my honourable friend that there may be some shift—

Senator Flynn: He hasn't replied to the question.

Senator Olson: —in the emphasis on what needs to be attended to because of the secondary and consequential problems.

Senator Murray: If, as the Minister of State for Economic Development states, it was the hope and intention of his colleague to raise the concern for unemployment, is it now the position of the government that they have shown inadequate concern for unemployment to this point?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Murray misses a lot of things. For example, the Minister of Finance gave a detailed explanation to anyone who wanted to read either Hansard of the other place or the record of wherever he made these speeches. For example, he made a good speech in New York and he made several other excellent speeches explaining that in great detail. He has contended—and I am sure that even Senator Murray, in his quieter, more reflective moments, would agree—that inflation going at the pace it is, and the costs of production and interest rates, all of which are intertwined, related consequences of this, represent one potential cause of more severe unemployment down the road. The root cause of all of this is one that the minister is concerned about, and he has continually made a very clear explanation of the interrelation and the consequences.

Senator Murray: Finally, may I ask the minister whether this raising of concern for unemployment, which he has just heralded, is to be reflected in a new set of policies or amended policies, or a new budget? How is this raised concern going to be translated into action by the government?

• (2050)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance has raised that as a higher priority, and perhaps a suggestion that there may be some action the western countries, in their fiscal, monetary and other policies, can take to accelerate the remedial action that should be taken to relieve the hardship that has accompanied the high level of unemployment.

The honourable senator's next question was whether there was going to be a new budget; but he knows as well as I do that whenever there is a new budget, whether it is going to be in September, October or November—

Senator Smith: Or never.

Senator Olson: —is something that will be announced by the Minister of Finance, and only by the Minister of Finance.

Senator Murray: In speaking to the other western countries about what the western countries should do, the Minister of Finance can urge various courses of action upon them. He can, however, speak only for the Government of Canada. Are we to assume, therefore, that this raised concern is going to be translated into action by a new set of policies, or modifications of existing policies, and, if so, when?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend can take it that the Minister of Finance has demonstrated a high concern for the unemployment situation. Now he is stating it more directly, and the honourable senator can also be assured that the Minister of Finance will be in the forefront of having an ongoing concern and review of policies that will relieve it to the greatest possible extent.

Senator Smith: As a supplementary, I should like to ask the minister when and how this great concern of the Minister of Finance has been demonstrated with respect to unemployment—

Senator Flynn: In words.

Senator Smith: —and whether his expression of concern yesterday to other nations about what they should do is merely an attempt to make Canadians think it is someone else's fault, or whether it indicates that he is going to try to do something himself to help affairs in Canada, and not beg other countries to give him a hand when he is not doing anything himself.

Senator Olson: That is the most contradictory preamble to a question I have ever heard. I have never heard the honourable senator argue both sides of such a major question in one sentence in such a way that he did not have to take one breath while he said it.

Senator Smith: Because it is apparent to everyone, that's why. Give us an answer.

Senator Olson: The Minister of Finance has stated clearly over past months—it is partly a repetition of the reply I gave to Senator Murray—that one of the causes of some degree—not all of it, but some degree—of the unemployment in this country is the cost of production based on our losing the productivity and our competitive position with other countries. It is therefore necessary, if we are going to shorten the period until we get back into that competitive position, to bring our inflation rate, interest rates, and other costs down to a competitive position.

Honourable senators, I do not believe that we should go any further with this subject during Question Period. We should have a full-scale debate on it, and honourable senators could then take the speech that I would be prepared to make, together with the speeches of my other colleagues, and, if they did not understand it the first time, they could take it back to their offices and read it over several times until they understood it.

I would suggest to the honourable senator that there is a change in emphasis. What is pointed out is that Canada is doing its share. However, we know that if we are going to be in the business of trading with other nations and having a free flow of capital, unless we are prepared to insulate ourselves from all of that, then Canada, as a responsible member of that group of countries, should try to get them to work along and help ease the situation.

The honourable senator focused on some of the main problems that are keeping capital investment and related matters at an unacceptably high level to the private sector.

Senator Smith: As a preliminary to a supplementary, I can well understand that the honourable gentleman does not want to continue to pursue this subject, because he is continually demonstrating that he knows nothing about it, and his inability to defend the government on this indefensible position is becoming recognizable to everyone. Therefore, I do not wonder that the honourable gentleman wishes to end the debate.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: What is the question?

Senator Smith: We will deal with the question. If the honourable gentleman has any questions to ask, let him ask them.

Senator Steuart: What are you talking about?

Senator Smith: I would not expect the honourable senator to understand it, anyway, and if he does not understand it he cannot understand my honourable friend either; so he should not get so noisy, unless he has something to contribute.

We have heard the minister say that Canada is having some difficulty because of a certain lack of productivity. He cannot deny that; he has just said it. I now ask him: Whose governmental policies have been in effect during all but approximately nine or ten months during the past 20 years when that loss of productivity has occurred, and what policies have contributed to that lack of productivity, if it exists? And I do not agree that it does. If it does, then under whose policies did it grow, and what policies has the present government implemented to improve that situation?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it is easy to answer that question. My honourable friend has a particularly well-developed talent to leave out those parts that he wishes to leave out. I said that productivity and the relationship of our competitive position in international markets is important—and it is a fact; it is not my opinion. The fact is that in some respects Canada has not done as well, for example, in bringing down inflation and our competitive costs, as some of our trading partners, particularly the United States. Yet, at the same time, when we bring out a budget, and a major thrust of that budget is to try to come to grips with the inflationary problem and the capital costs that are so difficult, we hear, of course, a never-ending chorus of complaints. The answer is self-evident. A great deal has been done, and it is not always so palatable to deal with those very difficult problems.

Senator Smith: The honourable gentleman has successfully evaded answering any question we have asked him tonight, and he has done so with a large number of long and evasive speeches which have simply contributed to the growing belief—in fact, it is now an accepted belief almost everywhere—that the government has no defence. The honourable gentleman is a very poor person to try to defend it, because he does not even believe in what it is doing.

Senator Olson: I totally disagree with that summary.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

THIRD REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, after the exercise in futility that we have had in connection with replies, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of a committee of this house. It is one which should have been directed to him at a much earlier stage, but this is my first opportunity to direct it—not because I have not been here but because the person to whom it is directed has not been here; and I am delighted to see him present tonight.

My question to Senator van Roggen is whether the section in the recent third report of the Foreign Affairs Committee study on Canada-United States relations was hastily rejected by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce because of the statement contained in the report that:

—Canadian industrial development policies are not only failing to achieve a restructuring of industry in this country, but they are also causing Canada to become a target for the U.S.—

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, while I understand it is perfectly proper during Question Period to ask a question of a chairman of a committee, I believe such questions should be confined to the activities of the committee itself. I am not familiar with the quotations to which the honourable senator is referring, but I do not think they relate to the activities of the committee.

• (2100)

Senator Donahoe: I am not surprised that the honourable senator is not familiar with the quotations I used, though I extracted them exactly from the report he prepared himself, but I am surprised that he would plead ignorance of them. The senator need not stand, because he knows that he said that he was not familiar with the quotations. I am telling him the source of the quotations, and I will give him another one. Despite the initial rejection of the report, does the senator propose to continue to impress upon the government that:

—measures to strengthen the position of industry are not generally having the desired effect of stimulating the growth and competitiveness of the manufacturing sector.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, if I may deal specifically with the honourable senator's remark about my not understanding the quotation from the committee report, I recognize the quotation completely. However, the honourable senator's remarks prior to that quotation involved quotations made by other people commenting on the report of the committee, and those are the quotations to which I referred. The report of the committee speaks for itself, and I would be very pleased to have the honourable senator quote from it at any time.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, perhaps I should not say anything further, but I shall conclude simply by saying that I made no reference whatever to anything said by any other person on the quality of the report. I referred solely and simply to the action taken by certain individuals as a result of the report.

Hon. G. I. Smith: We know his memory is bad.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

TQ&M PIPELINE—COMPLETION DATE

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Mega-Projects 2000.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Oh, not him.

Senator Muir: In response to questions posed earlier by some other honourable senators regarding the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline, I believe that the minister said, to paraphrase his comments from my notes—and I hope I am not paraphrasing him wrongly—that some of the work was under way now, that in the Atlantic provinces there was no actual work under way, that the development of the pipeline with regard to that area was possibly still at the planning and drafting stages. Will the Minister advise this house when the planning and drafting stages of this mega-project with regard to the Atlantic region will be completed? Will it be some weeks, months, or years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I reported to the Senate on this matter some days ago. I am not sure whether it was in response to a question asked by Senator Muir or by Senator Smith, but it was with regard to the projected dates for certain phases of the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline. However, if there is an update available, I shall bring it to the chamber, but I think my last reply is only about six weeks old.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I quite realize that it was either Senator Smith or myself, but since the minister brings in different answers to so many questions on so many different occasions, it does not hurt to repeat the question to see what he will come up with next.

NOVA SCOTIA

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—INELIGIBILITY OF LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. Robert Muir: In any event, I have another question for the minister in charge of “mega-mouth”—I mean, the minister in charge of economic development. Bearing in mind the minister’s response to Senator Murray, that his heart is bleeding and, as Bobby Burns would say, he is “greetin’” for the unemployment and for how terrible things are, what does the minister intend to do about the situation with regard to the Sydney Steel employees. As he is well aware, there has been a strike, a settlement and the employees have voted to return to work. A great number of these employees, and I am not sure how many, though it is close to 1,500 to 2,000, will be laid off. Unfortunately, when these people apply for unemployment insurance benefits, due to some small technicality involving certain bureaucrats, they are being told they do not qualify.

I ask the honourable gentleman—as brilliant as he is, I do not expect him to have all the information pertaining to this matter at hand; it only came to my attention this evening—to check into the matter and to enquire as to why this situation exists. I am told that the matter involves some slight technicality which involves the fact that the employees were on strike, voted to go back to work but were unable to go back to work because in the interim Sydney Steel Corporation had received no more orders and, therefore, could not carry the men on the work force. So would the minister be good enough to inquire and ascertain how soon these men and women may qualify for their unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I shall take the question as notice and try to determine what the honourable senator calls “a small technicality”. I do not accept that the situation involves a small technicality, but an inquiry shall go forward.

Senator Muir: I thank the minister for his kind response. Of course, he does not accept anything because he always wants to lecture on something of that nature, although tonight he has been brief with me compared to the replies he gives to most senators. I am not begging or asking him to accept what I said. I was given that information and, considering the source from whence it came, it appears to me to be sincere, trustworthy and honest. If it is a lie—

Senator Olson: It must be.

Senator Muir: —then someone is lying to me. I hope the honourable gentleman is not suggesting that I am lying.

Senator Olson: Oh, no.

Senator Muir: I hope that he will look into the matter and ascertain just how soon these people will receive their benefits. They are hungry, they need work and they need their unemployment insurance benefits.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—QUALITY OF PRODUCT—ALLEGED COMMENTS BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Hon. Robert Muir: I have another question for the minister. Would he ascertain why the Minister of Transport of this country is parading around stating that rails produced by Sydney Steel Corporation are of inferior quality.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Oh, oh.

Senator Muir: The deputy leader should not be trying to help the minister here.

Senator Frith: Why not? Is there something in the rules against it?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He needs your help; give him a hand.

Senator Muir: The minister usually has all of the answers and I am sure he will have the answer to this question. The Minister of Transport has stated that the steel rails manufactured in the steel mill are of inferior quality and that, therefore, Canadian National Railways will not purchase them and has gone outside Canada to give work to people in other countries as opposed to Canadians.

If the honourable senator will check the records of the many committees of the other place, and the statements made by ministers in the other place over a period of many years, he will see that they have always stated that the rails produced in the Sydney steel mill were the best produced anywhere. They have been shipped to Korea and Mexico through the efforts of the Export Development Corporation with which the minister is very familiar and probably was involved in to some extent. The rails have been judged to be very good. But here we have free "advertising" by a minister who is stating that the rails are of inferior quality.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The minister is of inferior quality.

Senator Muir: If they are of inferior quality, will the minister ascertain why they are of inferior quality and what we can do to try to remedy the situation. There may be some problem, though I am not aware of it. Will the minister assure me that he will investigate the situation and ascertain what is the problem?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the first thing I shall do is ascertain what the Minister of Transport said, and whether it is exactly the same as the interpretation we have heard this evening. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of excellent rails—

Senator Muir: Would you like to check on some of the news reports concerning the minister?

Senator Olson: I shall do that. Hundreds of thousands of tonnes of good, excellent rails have been produced by the mill. However, I think it is fair to say that recently there were some particularly special steel rails for a special purpose in the area west of Edmonton which were sent for a random check to the labs to determine certain quality factors, and it was found that the rails did not meet the specifications. I shall check the matter out and try to obtain a more detailed answer. However, I do not wish to discuss off the top of my head the various qualities that were looked for in the steel, because I am not that technically familiar with the background. But I shall obtain the information.

Senator Muir: I thank the honourable gentleman. Would he also ascertain whether the matter involves the 60-foot heavy duty rail and its metallurgical quality and whether, since this event, there have been any more orders taken. If there was a second order, will the minister determine whether the quality has improved, or are the powers that be just going to say, "No, from now on there will be no more steel rails ordered from Sysco for CN; we will buy them in Japan or some other country."

[Senator Roblin.]

• (2110)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is overstating the case very severely. There is, of course, at least one other major supplier of steel rail in Canada that, as far as I know, is not at capacity of output, and it may be that it was necessary to place an order with that company. I am referring, of course, to Algoma.

I will check, and try to find an answer. I am sure, however, that the honourable senator's comments with regard to buying rail in Japan, or any other foreign country, are not valid.

Senator Muir: Are you saying that there were rail purchases by Canadian National Railways outside Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what I said was that I would check into it, but that there was another Canadian supplier.

Senator Muir: Thank you. I know there is steel rail made in Canada besides what is made in Sydney, Nova Scotia. I do happen to know that. Can the honourable the minister tell me if the rail that would have been purchased from Sysco was purchased from Algoma?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I said I would check into it. I think it would be rather helpful if the honourable senator would give me the time to do so rather than, first of all, asking the question, asking me to check into it, and then proceeding to ask about all the little details before I get a reply to the inquiry I have already given an undertaking to make.

Senator Muir: I thank the honourable gentleman for his response. I should think that he would be most grateful to me for providing him with all the background possible, so that he can bring back a better answer.

Hon. G. I. Smith: May I ask a supplementary, honourable senators?

I heard the honourable minister say that he understood—I know he did not state the matter as a fact, but that he believes the situation to be so—that certain random tests had been made of the quality of the rails produced by Sysco, which were found not to measure up to certain standards. My supplementary is simply this: Were those standards the standards which were demanded of the rails when they were purchased, or were they alleged, if they were defective, to be defective in respect of some other factor aside from the specifications which were put forward when the rails were ordered?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I will wait before giving a detailed reply to that question. I have already had some briefing about this problem. We are very, very concerned about it.

What we are talking about in this case, of course, I think, is a change in specifications intended for some very severe surface areas where the weight is up to what I think they refer to as 136-pound or 138-pound steel. For this purpose they required a different alloy which would stand up under the pounding that the rail gets in those areas from unit trains rolling over it approximately every hour. Therefore, there were some requirements in existence.

I have already said more than I ought to, however, without the detail that I want to get. When I have that detail I will reply to my honourable friend.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I appreciate the honourable gentleman's caution about this matter, and if I were in his position I would be very cautious too. But I would like to know, as I am sure he would—I am just repeating my question, but I am trying to make it clear—whether the rails were deficient in respect of some specifications that were required when the order was given, or whether, after an order without specifications was given, the rails that had been manufactured were then tested and found to be not up to certain standards which they were then measured against.

If the honourable gentleman will permit me to give a word of explanation, he will perhaps recall that I have had something to do with this question over years past. I believe—and I suggest to him that it is true—that the people who are responsible for the design and content of Sydney rails are the equal of any in the world. They have earned that reputation against competition all over the world over a great many years. It therefore surprises me no end that some deficiency has been found.

I cannot help but wonder whether this deficiency was measured against—and I am saying it again, because I think it is vitally important—specifications that were put forward at the time the order was given, or whether they were measured against specifications that were put forward after the order was given and the rails were manufactured.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I understand the nuance in the question very well, and I will initiate an inquiry in order to get a reply to it.

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I know that the hour is late, but I have exercised a lot of patience up to this point.

My question is a very important and urgent one, and I must bring it to the attention of my leader so that in turn he may take it to cabinet as soon as possible. I am asking the deputy leader to bring the question to the attention of our leader.

My question refers to the Garrison dam. It seems to me that since Christmas my colleagues from Manitoba and I have kind of laid low, assuming that everything would be all right, since there would be representation from the Province of Manitoba and from the Department of External Affairs, and so on. This however, has turned out not to be the case, and that is why my question is so important.

I would like to read a quotation from the Winnipeg Free Press, as follows:

Construction of the $1 billion Garrison irrigation project is more likely following a U.S. Court of Appeals ruling striking down a lower court decision that until February had held the project in check.

The court ruled Friday that Congress does not have to reauthorize the Garrison Diversion Unit, an irrigation project Canadian officials fear would result in the introduction of undesirable aquatic life to Canada's rivers and lakes.

The judges ruled that Interior Department officials no longer are bound by an agreement formulated by the administration of former U.S. President Jimmy Carter that held the project in check for five years while environmental studies were being done. That agreement also said the project couldn't be completed until Congress voted to reauthorize it.

This is not the case.

The court didn't rule on the broader constitutional matter of whether Reagan administration officials could be held accountable under an agreement of a previous administration.

The Garrison dam project would affect all the pure water in our province. I would like to say that this matter is more than important, it is urgent. It is urgent that the cabinet act with regard to this situation and give us at least some assurance that this project will not proceed.

Senator Roblin and I and others have been getting up for some time now, showing our concern in this particular regard. I have no doubt that we ought to be getting an assurance that it will be delayed once and for all. If this cannot be achieved, at least the water flowing from the project should be diverted into the United States and not into Manitoba, Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information on the decision of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court's decision allows further construction and releases approximately $9 million previously appropriated for Garrison. Reports indicate that construction may begin this spring on the West Oakes irrigation test area in the James River basin. This would not affect waters flowing into Canada.

In a diplomatic note of February 5, 1974, the United States gave formal assurances that it will honour its obligation under the Boundary Waters Treaty not to pollute Canadian waters, and that no construction potentially affecting these waters will be undertaken until it is clear that this obligation will be met. United States authorities have regularly reiterated these assurances, most recently during bilateral consultation in February 1982. We are continuing to emphasize to the United States our opposition to any aspects of the Garrison project which could potentially affect Canadian interests.

• (2120)

I will draw Senator Guay's question and this information to the attention of Senator Perrault, as has been requested.

Senator Guay: I thank the honourable gentleman for that. The reason for my concern is that we get the same answer all the time. I appreciate that consultations have been going on over many years, but it seems to me that the project is taking place in bits and pieces. Eventually, if you follow the course of the entire project, it seems that they will get that water. That is the reason for my concern with regard to any assurances we may get. I appreciate the information that has been given me but I am not yet satisfied. I still fear that the project will continue on the basis that has been outlined with regard to the $9 million this year, and probably the same amount the following year.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I simply want to emphasize that I think it is quite clear from this information that, as Senator Guay is saying, there is good evidence that the project will be going ahead. However, as I understand it, the concern over this project has to do with the pollution of Canadian waters. According to our information, nothing has changed with regard to that aspect of the project. I realize, however, that the senator wants to have assurances about that aspect of the project, and I will draw his request to the attention of Senator Perrault.

PRIVATE BILL

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA— SECOND READING

Hon. Jack Marshall moved the second reading of Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I have the pleasure and the honour to present Bill S-25, respecting the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, for second reading.

The bill is a simple one and seeks to amend the act of incorporation of the association known as The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada. Its purpose is to broaden the conditions of eligibility for membership in the association in order that persons who support the purposes and objects of the association can become members. It also proposes to amend certain provisions relating to provincial commands, local units and ladies' auxiliaries. It seeks as well to effect other technical changes of a minor or incidental nature.

Honourable senators may remember that, in November of last year, a similar bill was presented by Senator Godfrey respecting the Royal Canadian Legion, which bill served roughly the same purpose.

I feel that I am fulfilling a duty and responsibility to this veterans' organization by putting on record some of the background of The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association. Perhaps some Canadians think that there is only one organization representing veterans in Canada, that being the Royal Canadian Legion. There are, however, several such organizations and The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada holds the proud distinction of being the oldest veterans' organization in the country.

Documentary evidence shows that the organization was in existence in 1840 under the title of "Army and Navy Veterans," and it is reasonable to believe that units of the association were active before that date. Membership in the earliest units was recruited from the ranks of veterans of the War of 1812-14 and migrating veterans of the navy and Wellington's army. It is even possible to assume, therefore, that some form of this organization was in existence as early as 1812. The first actual record of the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada indicates its existence in the city of Montreal in 1840, and that date is arbitrarily accepted as the time of its founding.

Soldiers who served in various campaigns abroad, such as the India Mutiny of 1858, along with other battles back in those years, formed, through their achievements, a sense of comradeship born of dangers faced together. From this comradeship grew ever-increasing membership in the oldest of all Canadian veterans organizations.

As a matter of fact, during the South African War, Canada had in service nearly 9,000 men, probably half of whom served in South Africa, but most of whom comprised the bulk of the membership of the Army and Navy Veterans up to the time of World War I.

When the country was confronted by the grave crisis of August 1914, members of the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada of that day were foremost in volunteering their services and in aiding the authorities to recruit men for the first contingent. As an instance of this effort, reference was made to the history of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, which, as everyone is aware, was a famous regiment that served in the wars fought by Canada.

The activities of the association in World War II are of recent memory. Added to the numbers of those who served in the army and navy from the outbreak of hostilities to the eventual collapse of Germany and Japan was the very large contingent which fought in the RCAF. By act of Parliament passed in 1946, the name of the association was changed to The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

Veterans of the Korean conflict and those who served in the Special Forces in peacekeeping missions have added to the membership of the association. As I understand it, there are now 40,000 members across Canada, and there are units in every province with the exception of Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Of course, the fact that there are no units in Newfoundland won't be held against them.

The association belongs to the National Council of Veterans Associations of Canada, which is comprised of most of the leading veterans' organizations, and which organization makes representations to the government on behalf of all veterans, even those who do not belong to the association, of whom there are many, such as the National Prisoners of War, the War Amputees, the Hong Kong Veterans, the Jewish Veterans of Canada, and the Dieppe Veterans.

The association is also a member of the World Veterans Federation, which consists of veterans associations from every continent of the world, and has a total membership running into the millions. Among the principal aims of the federation are: the establishment of permanent relations between associations of veterans, aid to veterans through the exchange of information on legislation and rehabilitation, and promotion of international peace and security through support of the United Nations Charter.

Honourable senators, it was an enlightening experience to have met with the officials of The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans of Canada, who are unheralded but are indeed doing work equal to that done by the Royal Canadian Legion—perhaps in a more minor way, but certainly to the benefit of the veterans who belong to this organization.

Honourable senators, I reiterate that this is a simple bill but it means so much to The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans. They will meet in convention this year around July 1. It is hoped, as the veterans grow older, that they will be able to continue to receive the benefits provided by those leaders who now serve that membership, and that those who will become members later will carry on the great work of this organization.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to committee for further study.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, as Senator Marshall has mentioned, I sponsored a similar bill with respect to the Royal Canadian Legion. I believe that I was the third sponsor of that particular bill. It had been started by Senator Connolly back in 1978 or 1979, and it was not passed. Under the Conservative regime, Senator Marshall sponsored the bill and again it was not passed. Finally, I sponsored it. I recall that at that time some objections were made, particularly from Nova Scotia, and Senator Macdonald was the main proponent of those objections. I was delighted tonight to hear that he seconded the motion of Senator Marshall. I know that he has examined this bill carefully and has no objection to it.

Honourable senators, I have examined the bill and all it really does is recognize the fact that veterans are getting older and that, if the association is to continue to exist, it must bring in new people. I think that if there are any objections or technicalities with respect to this bill, they should be raised in committee. Therefore, I support the bill and the suggestion that it be referred to committee.

● (2130)

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I strenuously opposed a similar bill which came before the Senate respecting the Royal Canadian Legion. Let me say at the outset that the mere fact that I seconded Senator Marshall's motion in no way should be taken as an indication that I support this bill. I did that simply as a courtesy to him, which courtesy I would extend to any honourable senator wishing to have a seconder to a motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That could be useful information.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): I doubt it.

Senator Macdonald: In any event, since I have strenuously opposed a similar bill respecting the Royal Canadian Legion, I wish to place on the record of today's proceedings my objection to this bill—at least, the main provision of this bill.

I have no connection with The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, but I do have a connection with the Royal Canadian Legion. I have been a member of the Royal Canadian Legion since 1945 and can say that that is the only organization to which I belong, apart from the Conservative Party of Canada and the Roman Catholic Church.

Hon. Lowell Murray: You do pick winners, don't you?

Senator Macdonald: I oppose this bill simply because we are in a period of transition as far as veterans are concerned. Veterans are growing older and their numbers are diminishing. Veterans organizations today are simply looking for people to take the place of veterans.

What I refer to as being the main provision of this bill is clause 2, subparagraph (a), which states:

unite fraternally persons who have served in Her Majesty's armed forces or any auxiliary force thereof or in the armed forces or any auxiliary force of any nation allied to the British Commonwealth of Nations engaged in an active combat zone—

Up to that point, the clause deals with veterans who have served in some way or another in combat or in the armed services in one form or another. However, they add the following words—and this was the same situation in the bill respecting the Royal Canadian Legion:

—and persons who support the purposes and objects of the Association—

With that wording, there is no need for the other wording. They can simply say:

unite fraternally persons who will support the purposes and objects of the Association.

With those words, it is no longer a veterans' organization. That wording simply gives the organization the power, the authority, to allow entry to persons who are not veterans and who have had no connection with veterans.

I also oppose this because there are no limitations on the membership, as was the case with the bill respecting the Royal Canadian Legion.

This does not say that membership should be confined to those who support the aims and objects of the association and who reside in Canada, or persons who are Canadian citizens, but allows any person in the world, possibly persons who were enemies in the last two wars, to simply say that they support the aims and objectives of the association and, therefore, should be allowed to take out membership in the association, and there probably are people foolish enough to let them. Former SS people could say that they support the association.

As I said, honourable senators, there are no limitations. I suppose one could say that persons who served with the enemy forces in the Japanese war and who fought in Hong Kong could say that they support the aims and objectives of the association and, therefore, should be members. I believe that there should be some limitation.

If the bill would allow only those who had had some association with veterans, well and good; I can see that that may be necessary, but I do not think it is necessary to bring in any Tom, Dick, Harry or Mary into these associations simply because they say that they support the aims and objectives of the association. There should be a restriction that they at least reside in Canada.

The title of this bill is:

An Act to incorporate The Army, Navy, and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

Further on the bill states that any person who lives anywhere in the world can be a member of the association.

For these and other reasons, which appear to me to be perfectly good reasons, I oppose this bill. I will not object to the bill's being referred to committee, and I know that it will be passed simply because the bill respecting the Royal Canadian Legion was passed, and we cannot very well object to one when we have passed the other. I simply wanted to make it clear that I am not in favour of this bill.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I would not like it to be thought that my colleague Senator Macdonald stands alone in his opposition to this bill. I want to make it clear that at least one other senator supports his stand, as I did with respect to the bill concerning the Royal Canadian Legion. I support his opposition to the bill for the reasons which he so eloquently put forward.

Just as Senator Macdonald has said, I do not oppose this bill's being referred to committee, but I do want it to be clearly understood by veterans' organizations in Canada that I think they are following the wrong path and that some of their members—and I am a member of the Royal Canadian Legion—are not in sympathy with them.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Marshall moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT ON THE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-90
"AN ACT TO AMEND THE CUSTOMS TARIFF AND TO REPEAL CERTAIN ACTS IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF"

May 11, 1982

On January 28, 1982, Bill C-90, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof", was tabled in the House of Commons. This Bill is intended to implement the Ways and Means Motion relating to the Customs Tariff that was tabled by the Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981.

By resolution of the Senate of February 16, 1982, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill in advance of the Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the Order of Reference, the Committee has considered Bill C-90 and in connection with such consideration has retained as its counsel Mr. Thomas S. Gillespie of Ogilvy, Renault, Montreal. The Committee has heard from representatives of the Department of Finance, Tariff Division and has received a written submission from the Canadian Dental Association. The Canadian Hospital Association declined to make any submission or appear before the Committee, indicating it was satisfied with the Bill. The Honourable Pierre Bussières, Minister of State (Finance), has also appeared before the Committee.

The Bill deals with two kinds of preferences: the negotiated preferences with New Zealand and the unilateral preferences given to developing countries.

The Bill contains an updating of the provisions of the Customs Tariff relating to New Zealand to give effect to the Agreement of Trade and Economic Co-operation Between the Government of Canada and the Government of New Zealand, dated September 25, 1981, and which came into force January 1, 1982. The Bill proposes to repeal the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932 and the New Zealand Trade Agreement (Amendment) Act (Clauses 20 and 21). The Bill confirms the existing tariff treatment but deletes obsolete phrasing from the Tariff which is based on the prior Trade Agreement.

The Bill proposes changes to the General Preferential Tariff (Schedule I), most of which were recommended by The Tariff Board in May 1981 in its Report of Part I of Reference No. 158 and which are proposed to improve preferential access to developing countries under certain tariff items.

Clause 3 of the Bill provides that the Governor in Council may designate any country to which the General Preferential Tariff has been extended to be a "least developed developing country". This will result in the removal of duties on goods covered by the General Preferential Tariff when imported from countries which are so designated. It is to be noted that a large number of products, including textiles and apparel products, are not subject to the General Preferential Tariff and such products will not enjoy any exemption from duty.

Clause 4 of the Bill contains a safeguard mechanism for Canadian manufacturers, which will allow the Governor in Council to establish tariff rate quotas should The Tariff Board recommend such quotas and should the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce agree with The Tariff Board's recommendation. As a result, there will be a limitation on the quantity of goods which can be imported under the General Preferential Tariff. Once the quantity is reached, the Most Favoured Nation rate will apply which will subject the goods to a higher rate of duty. This is designed to provide relief for developing countries in cases where their products are causing difficulties for Canadian manufacturers but, at the same time, will allow some trade to take place at lower rates of duty. This will allow developing countries to obtain greater export earnings on some exports to Canada.

It is proposed that Tariff Item 47800-1 be introduced to authorize the Governor in Council to provide duty-free entry for products that are designed for disabled persons. In addition, it is proposed that duties be removed on selector controlled devices used by disabled persons (Tariff Item No. 47800-1) and electronic devices to aid persons with speech impediments (Tariff Item 47831-1).

Duty-free entry is proposed for certain religious printed materials (Tariff Item 17210-1) and unexposed instant film for hospitals (Tariff Item 47605-1).

The Bill also provided authority (Clause 5) for the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, to amend the Customs Tariff by striking out any measurement expressed in Imperial measure and substituting the Metric equivalent thereof.

The Committee considers that greater flexibility is necessary in respect of goods imported from countries which continue to use the Imperial measure. The Committee therefore recommends that the Customs Tariff be amended to stipulate both Metric and Imperial measure and that importers be given the option of choosing either.

DENTAL MATERIALS

On June 29, 1981, the Minister of State (Finance) made certain commitments to the Committee respecting the dental supply industry which were confirmed by letter dated July 2, 1981 and which letter reads, in part, as follows:

"Upon completion of the review of the dental supply industry which is currently being conducted by officials of the Departments of Finance and Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will introduce amendments to the Customs Tariff to provide duty-free entry for those dental supplies for which demand in Canada is judged to be too small to support production in this country. If the review should indicate that the tariffs currently applicable to dental amalgam and other dental materials of a kind manufactured in Canada are higher than would be absolutely necessary to maintain production in Canada, the legislative amendments referred to above will provide, as well, for lower rates of duty on these products.

I expect to be in a position to propose such amendments at the time of the next Budget. Your Committee would, of course, have an opportunity to review them when the relevant Bill is before Parliament."

The Canadian Dental Association has reiterated its position submitted in a brief dated April 13, 1981, and indicated that it continues to disagree with the placement of any duty on imported dental materials. In particular, it objects to duty being imposed on dental amalgams and other similar dental filling materials (Tariff Item 48007-1). The intent of this Tariff Item is to protect the sole manufacturer of such materials in Canada, Johnson & Johnson. The Canadian Dental Association suggests that this protection given violates the principle of the GATT Agreement which is to reduce the tariff over a period of time.

The Committee notes that the Minister has honoured his commitment to the Committee and has introduced amendments to the Custom Tariff for certain dental supplies. It also notes that the Bill proposes that the Most Favoured Nation rate of duty for dental amalgams be reduced from 14.4% to 12.5%. It seems preferable to the Committee that duty be maintained on dental amalgams and other similar dental filling materials unless and until it can be demonstrated that the imposition of such duty will have a significant impact on the cost to the patient.

CONCLUSION

Your Committee has examined and considered the subject-matter of Bill C-90 in accordance with its terms of reference and has no further comment to make on the Bill at this time.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN,
Chairman.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED COMMENT BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

On Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I do not know whether this is the proper place in the order of business to make my point. However, as one who has spent much time and effort in public life, along with many others, in trying to promote social services as we know them in this country, I rise today to protest what I call interference by a non-Canadian in the affairs of this country.

I refer honourable senators to a press report in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail which states that the United States Ambassador to Canada said that Canada overspends on social services.

I am sure that many of us would like to express our feelings on the policies of the present administration in the United States. Personally, I do not think that is any of my business. In this day and age, when conservative—and I do not mean Progressive Conservative, but regressive conservative policies and politics are being promoted by so many people, both in this country and abroad, and when many of us in Canada are proud of the fact that we have in place social policies that guarantee a certain level of support against hunger and for shelter and so on, I believe it is my business to protest such statements.

In the name of all the people who are protected by the social policies which have evolved at the various levels of government over the past 30 or 40 years, and considering the good that such policies have brought to the infirm, the old, the poor, single parents and so on—again, as one who, along with many others, has worked and still works to promote such social policies—I protest such statements being made by a foreign ambassador to Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, dealing with the question of whether or not this is the proper heading of the order of business under which to raise this point, I suggest, for the sake of the record, that if Senator Thériault wishes he may draw this matter to the attention of the Senate by way of an inquiry. The honourable senator is free to give notice under Notices of Inquiries that he wishes to initiate an inquiry. He could then make an intervention, as he has now done, and other senators could also do so. Or he may wish to move a motion on the subject.

In any event, if Senator Thériault wishes to continue with the matter as an inquiry, then he may wish to give notice of inquiry and continue with the matter tomorrow. Otherwise, I do not believe this is the proper point in the proceedings to raise this subject. I am speaking only to the form, not to the substance of the matter.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): This is not the place or the method.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I have made my point.

Senator Flynn: Of course, but you were out of order.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

ALASKA HIGHWAY GAS PIPELINE—FINANCING OF PREBUILD PORTION

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. According to the minister and Mr. Sharp, Commissioner of the Northern Pipeline Agency, the Canadian prebuild portion of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline is self-financing on the basis of take-or-pay contracts.

However, some western oil or petroleum sources state that this is due to a lot of traffic being diverted from the TransCanada pipeline. Would the minister care to comment on this?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not believe that this is due to any gas being diverted from the TransCanada pipeline, which was, in fact, included in the export permits that had previously been issued and which related to the gas flow already in the pipe. I suppose, if you use the word "diverted," it would infer that the gas had to be travelling by some other route before.

To be absolutely sure I am accurate, I will check my statement, but I am reasonably sure that all of the gas now going through, and projected to go through, both the western and eastern legs of the southern section of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline pertains to new applications, and those volumes are included in the export permits that were issued specifically to that line by the National Energy Board.

There is, of course, another argument that, if those permits had not been issued, some of that gas might have been conveyed through existing TransCanada pipelines to some markets in the United States, but that is a quite different argument from that pertaining to gas being diverted.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: I have another question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The HUDAC research report released on Tuesday predicts that 1982 housing starts will drop by 18½ per cent from 178,000 in 1981 to 145,000 in 1982, reaching their lowest level in 15 years.

The minister is no doubt aware that almost 24 per cent of the construction industry's labour force was unemployed in March. Is the economic development branch of the government considering any policies to encourage the construction segment of the economy in order to put people in more industries back to work and to address the need for housing which will fall short of traditional needs by 60,000 to 70,000 starts this year alone?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the minister who is more directly involved, the Honourable Paul Cosgrove, has initiated a number of programs to increase the activity in the housing construction sector.

We are aware, of course, that interest rates have moved up to where they discourage the pace for housing that we saw some time ago. I would be very happy to bring the honourable senator a comprehensive list of a number of activities the minister announced recently in order to be as helpful as we can in this situation.

Senator Charbonneau: Would the honourable minister tell us when we may expect to be told of these measures?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, a great number of those announcements have been made, and my honourable friend can find them in some of the communiqués that have been sent to his office. However, to save him all that trouble, I will ask my office to put together a brief or concentrated dossier on this subject.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Hon. Florence Bird: Honourable senators, some time ago the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science recommended that legislation be passed that would entrench the indexing of veterans' pensions instead of requiring them to come cap-in-hand from time to time asking for increased payments.

I should like to know if the government intends to implement our recommendation and, if not, why not?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

Hon. Jack Marshall: I have a supplementary question. Senator Bird has indicated that the problem of establishing and entrenching in the legislation the basic rate of pension has been hanging around for many years. She has also referred to one of the recommendations of the committee. What seems strange is the fact that after so many months the minister has not reacted to that recommendation, other than to make vague promises to correct the situation, which should be corrected now, or there will be fewer veterans to take advantage of the legislation.

● (1405)

I wonder if the Leader of the Government would use his influence to have that legislation come forward in the near future.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator's concerns will be expressed in the appropriate quarters. Honourable senators are aware that this government has pioneered enormous advances for the veterans of this country and maintains a lively interest in further improvements.

CANADIAN FORCES

STATE OF PREPAREDNESS

Hon. Jack Marshall: I wonder if I could move from veterans' pensions to a related subject. My question has to do with the Prime Minister's recent visit to Maritime Command. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is so enthused with respect to the state of the Canadian navy—and is perhaps the only person in Canada who would make the statement that the navy is in good shape—will the Leader of the Government invite the Prime Minister to the west coast so that he can see what we have there, and, if so, how will the Prime Minister travel to the west coast?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The Prime Minister is always welcome on the west coast.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We know that.

Senator Perrault: The Prime Minister, as are all Canadians, is very proud of the Canadian armed forces. Instead of attempting to find reasons to criticize them, we should be praising them. Based on their numbers, they are making as great a contribution to NATO as any other country in terms of quality and proficiency. The Canadian people should be told that.

Senator Marshall: The Senate Subcommittee on National Defence recently visited Halifax, and I can say that we were overwhelmed by the dedication shown by the members of Maritime Command. The officers and men of that command are very dedicated, in spite of the fact that they have next to nothing to work with. The Canadian government does not deserve that type of dedication.

Bearing in mind the various crises which arise in the world almost daily, we should be up-dating our equipment so that the members of the armed forces have modern equipment with which to work.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the fact of the matter is that,—and this can be attested to by Senator Olson—

Senator Flynn: Why? He has nothing to do with that.

Senator Perrault: —in terms of the percentage of budget expenditures, there has been a marked improvement and increase in the amount allocated to defence spending in recent months. Examples of these are: The purchases of the new Leopard tanks; the new aircraft that are being purchased, and the work now being done to strengthen our maritime component. A great deal of activity is planned for the maritime sector in the near future.

These are facts that should be brought to the attention of the nation instead of the ever-lasting assaults on the Canadian armed forces by the opposition, who know better.

Senator Marshall: Everyone realizes that the increase in spending is 19 per cent, which is very good, but that should have occurred 10 years ago.

The Leader of the Government did not answer my question as to whether, first of all, it is proper for the Prime Minister to make such mischievous remarks to members of the press. Should he say that our navy is in good shape when we, the members of the Subcommittee on National Defence, heard the very opposite? Also, the Leader of the Government did not answer my question as to how the Prime Minister is going to travel to the west coast. If he is going by ship, how long will it take him to get there?

Senator Perrault: Of course, the honourable senator's question is facetious. What Senator Marshall is not quoting is the rest of the Prime Minister's statement in which he elucidated the advances which have been made in improving the status of Canada's armed forces. Of course, that was totally omitted from Senator Marshall's question.

The Prime Minister has said that there is excellent morale in the navy, as I read the article, and there is great morale in the rest of Canada's armed forces. Of course, improvements should be made and need to be made, just as they are required in many other sectors of this country. Progress is a never-ending thing. The suggestion that somehow Canada's navy is made up of a bunch of "leaky tubs" in imminent danger of sinking because of neglect, is totally false and mischievous. Senator Marshall is not helping this nation by making allegations of that kind.

● (1410)

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, that is very interesting. I wonder if the Prime Minister will be happy to read the sort of defence the Leader of the Government is offering. He might again find himself saying, "Lord, deliver me from my friends; I'll look after my enemies."

I have a question for the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs with regard to the report of the Subcommittee on National Defence. Would Senator van Roggen submit to the committee the views the Prime Minister expressed over the weekend for them to be compared with what the committee reported in its recommendations concerning Maritime Command, especially since the report quoted—

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition is asking for an opinion.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but the committee is not only composed of opposition members. Unless I am mistaken—

Senator Marshall: It is a good report.

Senator Flynn: The majority are government supporters, and the Leader of the Government is suggesting that only opposition members are questioning the Prime Minister's recent comments.

At page 25, the report states:

Another witness noted that Canada had no minesweepers at present. The fleet has a very limited capability for identifying and tracking naval threats to Canada—

From the same page, it says:

Concerning the present state of the fleet, a former Commander of Maritime Command testified before the Sub-committee that "of the 23 destroyers in Canada's navy, four are able to fight a modern war. The other 19, to be truthful, should not be sent to sea to fight a present-day war. They are not capable of looking after themselves against air missiles or submarines."

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Flynn: This is the committee reporting these statements, and thereby adopting them. My only question to the chairman of the committee—

Senator Perrault: That is completely out of order.

Senator Flynn: If the Leader of the Government wants to make a point of order, he can go ahead.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make the point of order.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: It is getting too embarrassing for the Leader of the Government.

Senator Frith: While I am not suggesting that the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is an improper question—

Senator Flynn: How can he know that? I have not put the question yet.

Senator Frith: He has laid enough foundation by quoting from the committee report. I think that might very well be a proper question directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: And I'll answer it, too!

Senator Frith: Rule 20 states that it is proper to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate questions if they are questions relating to public affairs. I am not suggesting that the question is an improper one, but the rule does say that a question may be addressed to "the chairman of a committee, if it is a question relating to the activities of that committee."

Senator Flynn: That is right.

Senator Frith: Therefore, I am suggesting—

Senator Flynn: Perhaps you would wait until I put the question.

Senator Frith: —that the question, if it relates to the activities of the committee as distinct from its report, should go to the chairman; if it relates to the report as a matter of public affairs, it should go to the Leader of the Government.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to reply to the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: A point of order has been made and if the deputy leader wishes to withdraw his point of order, fine, but at least let me put my question, or first reply to the point of order.

I have not put my question, and it is in relation to the activities of the subcommittee that I was quoting from this report. My question is: In view of the fact that the subcommittee is continuing its examination of our problem of national defence, is the committee going to invite the Prime Minister to appear, is it going to consider whether this testimony, which the committee has adopted—and apparently supports—should be deleted or corrected in a future report? Is the committee going to do something about the flagrant contradiction that exists between its position and the position taken by the Prime Minister?

● (1415)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the first part of the question is in order, because it dealt with the activities of the committee; but when the Leader of the Opposition talks about dealing with the flagrant contradiction between a report of a committee and something said by someone, then that part of the question should be directed to the Leader of the Government. There were two parts to the question—

Senator Flynn: Let them share the responsibility of answering them.

Senator Frith: My respectful submission is that the first part of the question, as put to the chairman of the committee, is in order but the second part is not.

Senator Flynn: I have no objection to the Leader of the Government's replying in his usual fashion.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, if I understand the Leader of the Opposition's question correctly, it is whether or not the recent remarks of the Prime Minister, which he quoted, will be referred to the committee. As chairman of the committee, I can only say that I shall bring his observation and request to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee, Senator Lafond, who unfortunately is not in the chamber at present.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this entire exchange began with the Honourable Senator Marshall—

Senator Flynn: Are you replying or debating?

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition has had his opportunity to make a statement, and he shall receive a reply. The original statement was made by Senator Marshall. He quoted completely out of context certain remarks attributed to the Right Honourable the Prime Minister. He did not bring a full text of the altered speech or the alleged statement. In Tory fashion, he lifted two or three random phrases out of a tattered newspaper and dragged them into the house like a red herring and said, "Isn't it terrible?". Well, we do not frighten that easily on this side. The Leader of the Opposition, gadflying through a committee report, hops and alights on one paragraph, which is part of the testimony and not the conclusions of the committee.

Senator Flynn: It was adopted by the committee.

Senator Perrault: It was someone who testified before the committee. The Leader of the Opposition gadfied on to this point and engaged in his emotional fireworks. The fact of the matter is that too often the quality of Canada's armed forces has been attacked by irresponsible people in public life—

Senator Flynn: By the committee, I suppose.

Senator Perrault: If one checks on the performance of our armed forces, whether it be the air component, the maritime component or the land component, and compares that performance with that of other armed forces making up NATO in war games, he will find that Canada is always at or near the top of performance—and that is doing very well.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government would elucidate and clarify for opposition critics of Canada's national defence that Canada's anti-submarine capability is the best in NATO and is rendering a most valuable contribution.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: How do you know? Are you a member of the subcommittee?

Senator Haidasz: That is the testimony of the generals of NATO Command.

Senator Perrault: I thank Senator Haidasz for his valuable contribution to this exchange. Those honourable senators who had an opportunity to meet recently in Ottawa with the NATO military leadership, those responsible for the operation of NATO, would have been gratified at the praise heaped upon Canada's armed forces. It is unfortunate that members of the opposition seem to be attempting to make political capital out of something that should not be a political football.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise to point out that, in flagrant contradiction to what Senator Haidasz has just said, on the committee we have Senators Buckwold, Hicks, Langlois, McElman, Molgat, Neiman, Perrault—of course—Thompson and van Roggen.

Senator Haidasz: And you are a member.

• (1420)

Senator Flynn: Yes, I am. I certainly am. But, Senator Haidasz, you should appear before the committee, and bring forward this evidence. Then, if the committee is wrong, it should be ready to admit it. After all, the committee has been criticized, and its chairman is not even able to defend his own committee from the accusation by the Leader of the Government.

Senator van Roggen: On a point of order, honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: You may rise on a point of order as much as you like. You never bother to defend yourself when the Leader of the Government attacks you.

Senator van Roggen: Don't get excited, now. The Leader of the Government has not been attacking the committee. The Leader of the Government has been properly defending our excellent armed forces.

Senator Flynn: But not defending you.

Senator van Roggen: If you would take the time, since you appear to be dealing with Maritime Command at the moment, to look at the first report of the subcommittee you will see that it is on manpower. The subcommittee is presently studying Maritime Command, and has not yet come out with its report on that subject.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Just wait till you get it. You'll have to cry "uncle".

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would just like to say that it is regrettable that the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate is not aware of the testimony of the NATO generals, who were here in Ottawa a month ago testifying before the House of Commons defence committee, to the effect that Canada's naval anti-submarine capability is the best in NATO, and is making a very useful contribution.

Senator Flynn: Since Senator Haidasz rose on a question of privilege, I suppose I should quote from the report. This will also be a reply to Senator van Roggen. At page 26 the report says:

There should be no increase in the Command's manpower until there are new ships and equipment to be manned. The immediate goal should be to make up current shortages in recognized requirements.

Perhaps I do not know what the NATO officials said, but they apparently do not agree with the report of the subcommittee.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, with regard to the comment of Senator Haidasz, who—

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is an interesting thing that during that mercifully brief period—

Hon. G. I. Smith: Senator Marshall is already asking a question.

Senator Perrault: Is there another question? I wanted to reply to the one put by the Leader of the Opposition.

First of all, it is unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition did not grace the NATO meetings with his presence so that he could learn the facts. In the second place, it was during their mercifully brief tenure of office that the Conservative government delayed the frigate program, designed to arm Canada's naval forces more adequately.

Senator Flynn: I do not agree.

Senator Perrault: You were responsible for the delay.

Senator Flynn: Don't be stupid.

Senator Perrault: And now we see—

Senator Flynn: Don't be stupid.

Senator Perrault: And now we see this exhibition today.

Senator Flynn: How can you speak of delay when we were in office only six months, in practical terms? Who do you think we are?

Senator Perrault: The people found out who you are. If you had been in power long enough, you would have armed us with rowboats.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I want to reply to Senator Haidasz either on a point of order or a question of privilege.

The words he used are correct, but unfortunately these are not the words the committee heard from Admiral Train in Norfolk, Virginia, nor are they the words of Admiral Fulton in Halifax, nor those of General Pickering. Unfortunately, there are no printed proceedings of those statements because the hearings were in camera, but the record speaks for itself respecting what those who are concerned about the future of the navy and the future of world peace have said.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as I said earlier in this exchange, we felt that further progress was necessary, and that further steps must be, and are going to be, taken to improve the maritime component of our forces. But this process of attacking what we have, and suggesting that somehow it is a disaster area, is simply not an accurate portrayal of the facts.

Senator Flynn: We never said that.

Senator Roblin: You should have said it, though, because it is a disaster area.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I put it to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that he does not recognize that the criticism being made now by this side of the house is not of the armed forces, but of the government that refuses to contribute sufficient money to put those armed forces in proper shape. It is no good his trying to divert attention from this by alleging that we are attacking the dedicated members of our armed forces, because that is not true. Such an attack was never made.

• (1425)

If the minister of failed mega-projects is going to get into this, I suppose he will talk about failed destroyers.

Senator Flynn: He will include that in his list.

Senator Roblin: He torpedoed the mega-projects; I suppose he can torpedo other things.

Senator Perrault: On this one the opposition is in full retreat.

Senator Smith: If this is full retreat, you should see us when we are on the attack.

Perhaps, indeed, the situation has changed. Nevertheless, the honourable gentleman knows that it is only a few months since the financial contribution of this government to the armed forces of Canada, in comparative terms, was less than that of any other government in NATO, except for that of Luxembourg, which is the smallest and least able to contribute. The honourable gentleman would have us believe, by his reference to the things that have been done and are planned, that Canada has finally got itself away from the position of being next door to Luxembourg in terms of contributions to the defence of NATO as a percentage of gross national product.

Senator Perrault: That is a real distortion!

Senator Smith: It is not a real distortion; it is a fact. All you have to do is read the NATO report.

Senator Perrault: It is not a fact at all. This is an attempt to portray our armed forces as a group of military pussy cats, incapable of defending the nation or contributing to the defence of the west. Does a comment of that kind really help the nation? As Senator Olson has stated, it is not factual to say that Canada's armed forces are on a par with those of Luxembourg.

Senator Smith: I did not say that!

Senator Perrault: There has been, in recent months, a substantial improvement made to the budget allocation to defence. Canada has the finest tanks in the world, the best troop carriers in the world, the finest fighting aircraft in the world, the best patrol aircraft in the world, and still we hear this criticism.

Senator Smith: As I said to the honourable gentleman and to the Senate as a whole, if the Government of Canada has finally raised its contribution on a comparative basis to the defence of our country and of the NATO nations to a substantial degree above that of the tiniest nation within the NATO group, Luxembourg, it is long past the time it should have done so. For a long time, Canada did reside in that position relative to the other NATO nations in terms of contributions to national defence. If it has finally been able to remove itself and climb the ladder a little, nobody will be happier than us. Nobody will be quicker to remember, however, that if we are in any difficulty now, in terms of the full capability that our armed forces should have, it is because of the activity of this government—or the lack of it—over the last 20 years.

After all, the honourable gentleman knows that during the last 20 years, except for approximately nine months, he and his predecessors have been in charge of the affairs of this country, including the contribution to the national defence.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: We never lost a war in all that time!

Senator Smith: In common with everybody else, I suppose, we should rejoice in the fact that we have not lost a war. I did not notice that the Liberals, any more than those of other political faiths, were active in bringing about that result.

Senator Steuart: I was there, just as you were. They took one look at you and me, and died laughing!

Senator Smith: The depth of the honourable gentleman's contribution is really overwhelming.

Senator Steuart: You didn't answer my question.

Senator Smith: I didn't hear your question.

Senator Frith: We are about even on that one, then.

Senator Smith: I don't know who I'm even with, but I would hate to be considered even with the honourable gentleman. If I have sunk that low, I certainly would hope for redemption.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I hope that we can conclude this exchange.

Senator Flynn: You had better change your tune if you want to conclude it.

Senator Perrault: Surely the number of dollars formally allocated for defence purposes is not the sole criterion by which a defence program should be judged. On the basis of quality and performance, Canada has done extremely well. Canada stands one, two and three in all war games and naval manoeuvres among NATO countries. While it is important to spend money, the way in which the dollars are allocated is also of great importance. The percentage of Canada's budget which is allocated for defence purposes has increased remarkably. Let us get behind the armed forces instead of attacking them.

Senator Smith: We are certainly behind them and give them our full support!

Senator Roblin: I resent that statement. No one is attacking the armed forces; we are attacking you.

● (1430)

Senator Smith: The trouble is that the government has not been behind or supported the armed services for years.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, since Senator Lafond is present, he may want to intervene in this debate as chairman of the Subcommittee on National Defence. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs said that he would report to him on the question raised about the statement made by the Prime Minister, which was a flagrant contradiction of the first report of the Subcommittee on National Defence and of the very good speech made by Senator Lafond. In view of the comments made by the Leader of the Government, I think Senator Lafond should intervene and at least raise a question of privilege. I would think that he would want to put the Leader of the Government in his place.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I have no such aspirations. First of all, I wonder whether it is in order for questions to be addressed to the chairman of a subcommittee, as opposed to the chairman of a committee. Second, I had my say when I presented the first report of the subcommittee. At the present time the subcommittee is studying the materiel and equipment of Maritime Command. It has not reached any conclusions.

Senator Flynn: We are speaking of the first report.

Senator Lafond: Senator Flynn, the first report dealt with manpower.

Senator Flynn: Oh, I don't know how to read.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I have suspected that for some time.

Senator Lafond: So, until the subcommittee has reached conclusions on the function of materiel and equipment in Maritime Command, I believe it would be out of order for me, as chairman of the subcommittee, to make any comments at all.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: I do not insist. If Senator Lafond wishes to accept the insults of the Leader of the Government, then that is up to him.

Senator Olson: There were no insults.

Senator Perrault: Just simple truths.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I direct this question to him to give him the opportunity to clarify the answers he has given to honourable senators this afternoon. I believe Senator Haidasz asked the Leader of the Government to "elucidate". It seems that the minister misunderstood him and took him to mean "hallucinate". Would the Leader of the Government like to correct his hallucinations this afternoon?

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

ALLOCATION OF GRANTS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, to change the mood a bit, I have a question for the genial Minister of State for Economic Development. I have in my hand a number of news releases.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): From the Conservative Party?

Senator Flynn: Pardon me?

Senator Perrault: I am interested in hearing them.

Senator Flynn: What did you say?

Senator Perrault: I am wondering about the source.

Senator Flynn: As usual, you make a lot of noise but not much sense.

Senator Perrault: You must give us the source.

Senator Flynn: I was about to do so, but you did not give me a chance. I was about to say that the releases were made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Does that satisfy the honourable senator?

Senator Perrault: It is a fine department.

Senator Flynn: Of course, it is a fine department, but do you understand where the news releases come from? I want to be sure that the honourable senator understands. I realize that sometimes it is difficult, but I ask him to take all the time that is necessary. Of course, the question is not addressed to the Leader of the Government, so he need not understand.

Senator Perrault: We are hanging on your every word.

Senator Flynn: Once again, honourable senators, I am speaking to the genial Minister of State for Economic Development. I have a pile of news releases about grants made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the Enterprise Development Program, or the EDP. In each case the announcement is made on behalf of the minister by the Liberal member of Parliament for the area to which the grant was awarded. For instance, this news release reads:

—Dennis Dawson, Member of Parliament for Louis-Hébert, on behalf of the Hon. Herb Gray, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, today announced that Gen-Tax Inc. of Sainte-Foy, Québec, has been awarded $75,000 under the Enterprise Development Program (EDP) of Mr. Gray's department.

Here is another one made by J. Roland Comtois, the Member of Parliament for Terrebonne; another one by Rod Blaker, the member of Parliament for Lachine; and there is even an announcement made by Senator Argue, because there is no Liberal member in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Where is he? I want to talk to him.

Senator Flynn: My question is: Will it be the practice of this department, from now on, to give credit to the local member of Parliament for all these grants, and does it suggest that these grants will only be made if they are supported by the Liberal member of the riding concerned?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, this party has always taken the view that it is helpful, essential and important that the elected members—

Senator Flynn: Liberal members.

Senator Olson: —and other members from areas where we do not have so many elected members, be informed of what is going on in the area or region they represent. I find it rather strange that the Leader of the Opposition would take exception to that because, surely, he would want the members of Parliament, whether they be from the Senate or from the House of Commons, to know what the various government departments and agencies that conduct programs such as the EDP are doing in his riding.

Senator Perrault: I know the Leader of the Opposition will be interested to know that this practice of bringing members of Parliament into announcements was initiated by the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker.

Senator Flynn: You have no foundation for that remark.

Senator Perrault: It is a matter of record.

Senator Roblin: It is not. You made it up.

Senator Perrault: It is a matter of record.

Senator Roblin: It began long before Diefenbaker's time.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the minister's reply is not entirely true because in the case of Senator Argue—

Senator Olson: I said "other members of Parliament."

Senator Flynn:—who is not an elected member, he made the announcement in an area where there is an elected member. That elected member was not given the credit, as is the case in other areas of Canada where the elected member is Liberal.

Senator Olson: The Leader of the Opposition has misinterpreted me, because I said "elected members and other members." I believe that senators have a useful role to play in this country. If the honourable senator wishes to have a longer list, I can show him a number of instances with regard to the province of Alberta, where I have some responsibility under the system, where I have made announcements. I make announcements in such a way as to ensure that there is the widest possible publicity for the people who are directly affected.

Senator Perrault: It is freedom of information.

Senator Olson: That, I believe, is a responsibility of the government—keeping the people informed of what is happening. I am sorry if my honourable friend wants to put another interpretation, however subliminal, on the matter, but I will continue to be in favour of letting the people know what the federal government is doing.

Senator Flynn: Nobody is criticizing that point. I am asking the minister: Did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have any announcements made on his behalf by someone who is not a member of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons or in the Senate?

Senator Olson: I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would ask that question, but I shall find out for him. I can tell him that if he wants to face the real world, members of the opposition parties, both here and in the other place, are not generally disposed to being very co-operative in seeking the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in those news releases.

Senator Perrault: You should rejoice in those grants.

Senator Flynn: I am not criticizing them. Again, the Leader of the Government is misconstruing our remarks.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Perrault: Yes?

Senator Flynn: When we were asking questions about national defence, he said that we were being critical of the armed forces, which was entirely untrue. And now he says that we are being critical of the grants when we are discussing the method of announcing them.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Hallucinations!

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question? My leader could have proceeded further with these news releases, had he wished. There are some he did not refer to. I have one here to which I would like to direct the attention of the minister of mega-projects. It, too, is a release by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and it is dated May 7. I presume it was distributed to each member of both houses; at least, it came to my desk, and I do not suppose I was specially singled out. It reads;

Ottawa, May 7, 1982—The Hon. Gerald Regan, Secretary of State, on behalf of the Hon. Herb Gray, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion, today announced that Southwind Manufacturing Ltd. of Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, has been awarded a contribution of $10,000 under the innovation side of the Enterprise Development Program (EDP) of Mr. Gray's department.

● (1440)

As the Leader of the Government suggested, I rejoice in the fact that the grant was made but, in view of the answer given a moment ago by the Minister of State for Economic Development—or whatever his proper title is—about making sure that the elected member for the area had the opportunity or the responsibility of making these announcements, I draw to his attention that the Honourable Gerald Regan is not the elected member for the electoral district which includes Dartmouth, but a person by the name of Michael Forrestall, who is not of the same political persuasion as Mr. Regan.

Is the announcement any more informative having been made by somebody who is not elected for the region, or would it have been equally well done had the announcement been made by Mr. Forrestall? Would it not have been fairer and more sensible to allow the elected member for the area to make the announcement?

Senator Olson: If I were making the decision and had a choice to make between the two members of Parliament the honourable senator is referring to, or even others from a greater area than the Halifax-Dartmouth area, I would select the Honourable Gerald Regan every time.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The people of Dartmouth did not, however, and it is time you showed some respect for them.

Senator Flynn: He would be handing out a cheque saying, "The Liberal government is giving you this money."

Senator Murray: No, the taxpayers are giving the money, not the Liberal government.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The decision was made by the Liberal government. Of course, it is always taxpayers' money.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Are you still over there asking questions?

Senator Smith: Yes, I am still here, and I hope to be here for some time.

I should not be surprised, because it is no surprise how far astray the honourable gentleman goes from what is reasonable and sensible, but I am surprised that he would so display his lack of reasonableness and fair play by the kind of answer he has just given. Is he suggesting that Mr. Forrestall, the member for the electoral district in which Dartmouth is situated, is any less capable of having his name attached to some written announcement made by some other department?

Senator Olson: Yes, I said very clearly that if I had to select between those two members to deliver accurately and completely a message respecting some economic assistance to that area, I would pick the Honourable Gerald Regan every time. I said that without equivocation.

Senator Frith: Did you get the Liberals to hand it out for you when you were premier?

Senator Smith: I generally made the announcements myself.

Senator Perrault: Would it be possible for the honourable senator to ferret through his archives and produce for honourable senators copies of releases where Liberal members of his legislature made announcements on behalf of the Smith government when he was premier?

Senator Smith: I thank the honourable gentleman for reminding me of days which were somewhat more interesting than those I now spend looking at him.

PUBLIC WORKS

NEW CANADIAN EMBASSY, WASHINGTON, D.C.—AWARD OF ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Would he explain to the chamber the process by which Mr. Erickson, the architect, was named to design the Canadian embassy in Washington, D.C.?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would be pleased to take the question as notice.

A number of very competent Canadian architectural firms made submissions for the design of the embassy in Washington, D.C. I understand that Mr. Erickson's company was one of the top dozen companies.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): It was not.

Senator Perrault: In the ultimate, the government made a decision to designate one of those companies to build this important structure in Washington, D.C.

Senator Flynn: Did you make this announcement on behalf of the government?

Senator Balfour: As a supplementary question to the honourable senator, is it correct or is it not correct that Mr. Erickson was advised before the competition took place that he would be selected?

Senator Perrault: I doubt that very much, honourable senators. There have been reports in newspapers to that effect, but denials were also printed in newspapers today.

The selection process the department employed involved, in its initial stages, all architectural firms in Canada. A panel composed of officials and members of the architectural profession was established to assist the government in this endeavour.

Over 2,000 firms were contacted through their provincial associations, and over 300 firms expressed interest in being further considered for this project. The panel had a very difficult task in narrowing down the field to the 11 finalists.

Hon. Lowell Murray: No, four.

Senator Perrault: The principal criterion to make the short list of 11 was that, in the panel's view, the firm possessed the capability to carry out this project successfully. The panel reported how impressed it was with the high quality of all 11 finalists. The choice, therefore, was a very difficult one.

The panel's recommendations were taken fully into account. The government, however, also had to consider other factors such as, in Mr. Erickson's case, his longstanding contribution—

Senator Murray: To what? Tell us more.

Senator Perrault: —to Canadian architectural design and his enhancement of Canada's architectural reputation in the world.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: How big was it?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: How much was Mr. Erickson's contribution to the Liberal Party?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Would the Minister of State for Economic Development inform this chamber whether there are any Treasury Board regulations requiring Mr. Erickson or an appropriate federal authority to choose a Canadian construction company and other companies to build and outfit that great mega-project in Washington?

Senator Flynn: What a joker you are.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): The substantive part of the question I will have to take as notice since I do not know if there are any regulations.

Senator Flynn: He did not fall into the trap.

Senator Donahoe: I should like to ask a supplementary question on this topic. I do not know that minister on the other side can answer it. However, I should like to know if there is any minister on the other side who can verify for me the fact that Mr. Erickson made the statement that two years previously he had been promised that the contract would be given to him, which, in effect, meant that any competition which was held was a mistake, a delusion, or merely a deception of the people who took part in it.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is again quoting from truncated news reports.

I can only quote reports which appeared in the press this morning, which were denials by Mr. Erickson and his former partner who are quoted as having said that there was no truth to this.

Senator Flynn: The press is always wrong.

Senator Donahoe: Did Mr. Erickson deny that he was not one of the four architects who were recommended by the panel in charge as being appropriate persons to whom the contract might be awarded although he had been, in fact, one of the 11 semi-finalists and was only eliminated when the number was reduced to four?

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, in view of some of the allegations or innuendoes that have emanated from the other side, I should say that recently I took it upon myself to check how much Mr. Erickson contributed to the Liberal Party during the last two elections.

Senator Flynn: Are you speaking on behalf of the government?

Senator Godfrey: No, I am asking a question of the Leader of the Government. Is the Leader of the Government aware, as I am, that if Mr. Erickson contributed anything to the Liberal Party in 1979 or in 1980 it was under $100?

Hon. Jack Marshall: That is all they are worth.

Senator Perrault: Despite the anger of some honourable senators on this particular point, I know that all honourable senators will glow with pride when they see that structure in place in Washington.

Mr. Erickson has won a number of international awards for excellence. He was the designer of the Canadian Pavilion in Osaka. Honourable senators must realize that Mr. Erickson is one of the great architects of our nation. This is not meant in any way to criticize others in that profession.

I was asked the question: Is it not a fact that he was promised the contract two and a half years ago? Honourable senators, two and a half years ago the Clark government was in power.

Senator Flynn: Oh, pooh pooh! If that amuses the other side, they must be very naive. It is a pitiful sight.

Senator Frith: It is a pitiful question.

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Honourable senators, I do not think anyone on this side would suggest that Mr. Erickson is not qualified. We are trying to establish that this whole thing was a charade because there were 11 semi-finalists among which Mr. Erickson's firm was not included, and then four finalists, and Mr. Erickson's firm was not included among those either. That is a charade. Those firms spent thousands and thousands of dollars on that project, yet it seems that the government did not intend to award the contract to any of those firms. Why did those firms have to go through that exercise?

● (1450)

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order simply to say that I sit on this side of the house and I have not given my permission to Senator Charbonneau to speak on my behalf on the Erickson matter or any other matter.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. As far as I am aware, I am the only senator on this side who made any reference to a period of time in which Mr. Erickson was promised in advance that he would be awarded the contract.

I rise simply to say that the Leader of the Government is incorrect when he says that two and a half years ago Mr. Clark was in power. The time I mentioned was not two and a half years ago, but "about two years ago". There was no reference whatever to the additional half year by anybody but the Leader of the Government, who is attempting to justify a condition for which there is no justification.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators must understand that this advisory committee was precisely that, an advisory committee, and that ultimately the government had the right to make the decision.

The honourable senator is aware of the fact that under certain circumstances the lowest tender is not necessarily accepted by any government. In this case, the committee acted in an advisory capacity and, ultimately, the government opted to select the Erickson firm. There were 2,000 firms invited to tender on that project, and the Erickson firm was in the top group.

Senator Charbonneau: If I am correct, I believe that all the press reports mentioned a "selection committee," not an "advisory committee."

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): It was a selection committee to advise. It was never given the authority to award the contract.

Senator Donahoe: I have a supplementary question. Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether any of those who competed in the competition were advised that, when the competition was concluded, the choice would not be based on the recommendations of the committee, but on the whim of the Prime Minister?

Senator Charbonneau: Behind closed doors.

Senator Perrault: That is not correct, honourable senators. The question will be taken as notice. We want nothing but the facts to be placed before the Senate.

Hon. G. I. Smith: That is an instant conversion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are a strange one if you want the facts on that!

[Senator Donahoe.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

1981 CENSUS—REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Murray on April 29, to which I now have the answer.

The timing of the process of redistribution, which begins with the announcement of the results of the decennial census, is governed by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. By May 30, 1982, electoral boundaries commissions must be established for each province and the Northwest Territories. The commissions have a year to complete their reports, although this period may be extended to a maximum of six months. The commission's reports are then laid before the House of Commons by the Speaker and may be the subject of a debate there. Following any debate in the House of Commons, the reports are returned to the commissions, along with objections that may have arisen in the house. Shortly thereafter, the Chief Electoral Officer will prepare a draft representation order with a precise description of the new electoral district boundaries.

It is expected that the draft representation order will be ready no earlier than September 1983. This estimate presupposes that there will be no extension in the time necessary to complete any of the events outlined above. If there are extensions to any of the steps in the process, the preparation of the draft representation order will be delayed correspondingly. Pursuant to section 23 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, the Governor in Council will, by proclamation, declare the draft representation order to be in force, effective at the first dissolution of Parliament that occurs at least one year after the day on which that proclamation was issued.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The 1983 date does not necessarily follow from the schedule the minister has placed before the Senate. It is obvious that the process could be considerably accelerated if the redistribution commissions in the provinces were appointed before the date of—

Senator Perrault: May 30.

Senator Murray: May 30, yes.

Senator Perrault: Every effort will be made to speed up the process. I have given the Senate the information provided to me to date.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I raised the problem I had with this matter the other day and said then that I hoped I would obtain an opinion. In order to satisfy my concerns—and unless I am convinced otherwise before the motion is put—I want this matter to be considered by a committee of the Senate.

I am wondering whether the best thing to do, in the circumstances, would be to refer this matter back to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which studied the matter, or whether it should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, since the question I raise is really one to be dealt with by a committee, under our rules. Under our rules, I think my concern should be dealt with by the latter committee. However, if the Senate prefers that this matter be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I have no objection.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—REPORT REFERRED TO LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Then, honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs with instructions to consider the constitutionality of this bill's being introduced in the Senate and whether or not this contravenes section 53 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I listened carefully to the point raised by Senator Flynn the other day. I agree with the observations he made then, namely, that this raises a question. I do not believe that Senator Flynn is saying that it is clear whether it infringes upon that section or not. I think he is simply saying that it raises a legitimate concern.

As I said, I agreed with his comments then, and I agree with his comments today. I think it would be proper to have a separate examination of that aspect of the bill. I also agree that the appropriate committee would be the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 6, the debate on the motion of Senator Roblin:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather by appointment.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Senate reform initiated by Senator

CANADA-GERMANY TAX AGREEMENT BILL, 1982

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—MOTION FOR ADOPTION—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, May 5, the debate on the motion of Senator Hayden for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on Bill S-24, to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on income and certain other taxes.

Roblin on February 23, 1982. The motion he introduced on that occasion reads as follows:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.

In his opening remarks, Senator Roblin stated that he was speaking for himself and not on behalf of his party. I want to assure honourable senators that this is also true in my case. I am not voicing the thinking of my caucus or of my party. I am venturing out on my own, basing my remarks on the experience I gained while I was a member of the Senate committee considering Senate reform. I believe that it is my duty to share my thoughts with honourable senators.

● (1500)

There have been many debates on Senate reform recently, and from those debates there have emerged just as many different proposals for reform. It is now time to sort out the various proposals that have been made in order to distinguish clearly between the practical, implementable reform and lofty theory. That is why it is important that the subject matter of this proposal be debated thoroughly from different perspectives. It is the only way in which we might arrive at a consensus as to what kind of reform this institution should undergo.

There already is a consensus, within this chamber and outside of it, that the Senate ought not to remain as it is. However, before embarking on any proposal for Senate reform, it might be worthwhile to consider the legislative structures of Canada and compare them with the legislative structures of other countries.

We find that Canada is a country which has applied the British parliamentary system to a federal state. Australia has done likewise, but Australia has an elected Senate, as has the United States. Our Senate is an appointed one. If we look at the parliamentary systems of the democracies of the world, we discover that no two countries have exactly the same legislative institutions. It would appear that each country has developed parliamentary institutions that best reflect the character and aspirations of its people. It is a fact that parliamentary institutions are best suited when they are home grown and have evolved to meet a country's needs.

We have seen what happened in Nigeria when it gained independent status. That country adopted holus-bolus the British parliamentary system. It did not work, and Nigeria had to relinquish that system of government and adopt one which reflected more closely the experience and needs of its people. It is not difficult to discover why it did not work. England has 700 years of parliamentary tradition. Such a system cannot be transplanted overnight to another country without the cultural base and traditions which make it operative. Similarly, importing the Australian system of an elected second chamber into Canada, as proposed by Senator Roblin, could well have a disruptive effect on our parliamentary institutions because it is not a natural evolution of our parliamentary system.

[Senator Bosa.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I hesitate to interrupt my honourable friend because I do not want to spoil the flow of his speech, but I am not recommending the adoption of the Australian model for the Senate of Canada. That was not part of my statement at all.

Senator Bosa: My understanding was that the honourable senator made reference to the elected Senate of Australia, and that he was proposing an elected Senate of Canada. I apologize to Senator Roblin if I misunderstood his remarks.

Senator Roblin: What I did was point out some of the drawbacks of the Australian system which I thought would not be suitable for Canada.

Senator Bosa: If Senator Roblin did not propose that, there are many others who are using the Australian example in order to promote a similar system in Canada.

If I may continue, it was the Government of British Columbia that proposed a West German type of upper house in Canada which is known as the Bundesrat. The membership of the Bundesrat in West Germany is made up of provincial representatives headed by provincial cabinet ministers. The provinces or the landers, as they are referred to in the Federal West German Constitution, are organized in an entirely different way, and a Bundesrat type of upper house could not be adopted in Canada. If adopted in Canada it would become, as Senator Forsey pointed out at the time of the debate in 1978, a "house of obstruction." In discussing parliamentary reform of the upper house, it is well to anticipate the impact that it will have on the rest of the parliamentary system; otherwise it is like changing the course of a major river or the flooding of a major valley without taking into account the impact that such a change will have on the environment.

Let us look at what the purpose of the Senate is and at what the main areas of criticism of this institution are. The Fathers of Confederation envisioned a Senate as a chamber where regional interests would be articulated, where legislation would be refined, and where minorities would be protected. The reference to minorities at that time was to linguistic minorities—English and French—but not ethnic minorities, as the expression has come to mean in the more recent past.

The Senate has performed very well in the refinement of legislation, which is the most important function of the Senate at the present time. Any proposal to reform the Senate must take this fact into consideration. Refining legislation requires experience which can only be gained through some form of continuity in dealing with various forms of legislative proposals. The Senate went beyond its original mandate in the recent past by undertaking the task of investigating important public issues. Recent examples of such issues are problems such as poverty, unemployment, inflation, aging, land use, science policy, Indian affairs, trade relations with the United States and so forth. The Senate standing committees, in addition to doing other very important work, have also introduced an innovative approach in the pre-study of bills.

The perception remains that the Senate does not speak for the regions. Let me share with you for a moment my personal experience as a senator from Ontario. I have been a member of this chamber for over five years, and during that time there has never been a meeting of the Ontario senators where regional issues have been discussed. There is no Senate Ontario caucus, nor is there a mechanism for interfacing with the Province of Ontario. Neither members of the government nor members of the opposition have ever been in touch with me to ask for my assistance in order to advance the interests of the province. Any intervention that I have ever made in the Senate on a regional interest has been on an ad hoc basis and personally inspired, as opposed to a collective approach by Ontario senators. It may be that senators from other regions have consultations with their respective colleagues and their legislature, although, from private conversations, I doubt very much that that is the case.

So we must ask ourselves: Does the Senate fulfil its role? Based on my personal experience, the answer must be a qualified one at best, because the belief that the Senate does not speak for the regions is, in my experience, a valid one. Other areas of criticism directed at the Senate are the absolute veto power and the manner in which its membership is selected. The appointment method is considered to be undemocratic. This is further aggravated by the mistaken notion that many of the appointments to the Senate are made from a roster of defeated politicians, party fund raisers and cabinet ministers who have outlived their usefulness in cabinet. Such a notion implies that anyone in those categories is not fit to serve. In fact, we have only to look around this chamber to appreciate how unfair that notion is.

Senator Roblin's motion reads, in part, that "responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment." I am sure it will be. This institution would regain its credibility in the public mind, and I fully support any reform that will enhance the prestige and credibility of the upper house. It is my opinion that an elected Senate would be highly regarded by Canadians as a whole. It is also my belief that an elected Senate would want definite powers and clout. The power and clout now reside in the other place, and any reform along this line would depend entirely on how much power the government and the House of Commons are willing to relinquish.

How independent would an elected Senate be? It would seem to be unrealistic to assume non-involvement of national political parties in Senate elections. The likely result would be that Senate races in any one region would duplicate the results in House of Commons constituencies and elected senators would have to conform to party platforms and caucus discipline. The elected senators would feel precisely the same pressures to dampen expressions of regional dissent as members of Parliament do now through cabinet solidarity and the pressures of political party discipline.

• (1510)

If we had an elected Senate, a question that would certainly be asked would be: Who speaks for Canada—the House of Commons or the Senate? Even if the demarcation lines of power were clearly defined, do we really think that we could speak on behalf of the regions and overshadow the premiers?

The provincial conferences that commenced in the 1880's have evolved into full-fledged debating and decision-making forums in the last 25 years. Federal-provincial conferences have come to dominate the most important area of concern that the Fathers of Confederation had assigned to the Senate. The premiers play a most prominent role at these conferences. It is unrealistic to believe that the premiers would relinquish that role to an elected Senate. In addition, most definitely there would be great resistance to an elected Senate by the other place and the provincial legislatures. In fact, I do not believe anyone wants an elected Senate at present, other than those who theorize that an elected chamber would strengthen the institution in the eyes of the public.

I started out as an advocate of an elected Senate and on one occasion shortly after my appointment, I spoke about it in this chamber. In retrospect, I can say that I was motivated by the belief that an elected Senate would carry out its mandate more credibly. As I have gained more insight into the workings of Parliament, I have become sincerely convinced that a modified, reformed Senate would complement our parliamentary institution more effectively. An elected Senate is not a practical evolution of the institution in our system of government at this time.

This feeling is shared by many experts on constitutional reform. Professor P. D. Weiler, in his article entitled "Confederation Discontents and Constitutional Reform," made the following observation:

The legislative role of the Senate as presently constituted has proved to be invaluable in the overall government context. Any reform proposal which would create a second chamber which did not have this function would leave a large hole in the legislative process. For these reasons it is important that there be some continuity in the membership of the Senate because it is only through experience that these legislative tasks can be carried out with maximum efficiency.

Professor Weiler does not assert that the Senate acts as a guardian of the interests of the provinces or territories. But that does not mean that a second chamber differently constituted could not be given powers that would directly affect the provinces. For example, there are numerous agreements between the central government and the provinces covering a whole range of topics which are rarely debated in this chamber. The implementation and control of these agreements is not under the direct supervision of any one body.

It would seem that the best forum for in-depth analysis of the agreements may well be a reformed Senate. The reforms that could be instituted swiftly to put the Senate on a new path of involvement would be to change the tenure of office. The present retirement age of senators is 75 years, apart from the dwindling number who were appointed for life. The provision for a retirement age of 75 should be changed to a fixed term of perhaps 10 years, with the option of reappointment for further five-year terms. This recommendation is contained in Senator Lamontagne's report entitled "Certain Aspects of the Canadian Constitution". In order to retain the expertise and experience in the Senate, this transition should take place by attrition.

The method of selection by appointment has fallen into disrepute, but judges are appointed by governments and the courts are respected and held in high esteem by society. The consultative method employed in appointing judges should be used for the appointment of senators. A consultative method of appointment between the central and provincial governments could be broadened to emphasize that this may result in a less politically partisan Senate and a Senate which the provinces, because of their input in the appointing process, may feel more comfortable consulting on regional issues.

If the Senate is to remain the chamber of sober second thought, then the absolute veto should be relinquished and replaced by a suspensive veto. The Senate has a tremendous amount of power over legislation at the present time—that is, the power to defeat legislation. However, its lack of legitimacy because of its selection method makes it almost impossible for the Senate to exercise this power. A change to a suspensive veto would allow the Senate to take a more active part in the criticism of legislation, to the point of delaying approval in order either to give the House of Commons time to reflect on its proposals or to allow time for public opinion to crystallize around the proposals.

I believe that the institution of these changes, which have been advocated by constitutional experts both within this institution of Parliament and in the academic field, would give the Senate a new image, and it would enable senators to carry out more effectively the important work that is expected of them.

I believe also that Canadians are basically small "c" conservatives. It is my perception that they are reluctant to institute radical changes in their parliamentary institutions. I believe they would prefer and would support a moderate approach to the reform of the Senate such as the one I have proposed.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege, I must first congratulate Senator Bosa for participating in the debate and giving us his views on Senate reform. He is a regular participant in Ontario caucus meetings each Wednesday morning, and he knows that not only members of the House of Commons but also senators attend those Ontario caucus meetings, as do senators from other provinces in their caucuses. This happens to be a tradition in the Liberal Party. I am sure the honourable senator would not want to leave the impression that senators do not take part in regional or provincial caucuses of the Liberal Party where provincial matters are discussed.

[Senator Bosa.]

Senator Bosa: I believe the honourable senator has made reference to something to which I did not allude. I said there has never been a meeting of Ontario senators where matters affecting the province of Ontario have been discussed. When we attend a caucus meeting each Wednesday, we discuss matters that relate to our region or area, but they are discussed from a different perspective because members of the other place are present at those meetings and, consequently, we are not presenting a Senate perspective.

Senator Haidasz: Would the honourable senator please elaborate on his idea as to how to give an elected Senate adequate representation from all sectors of the Canadian population, including minority ethnic groups?

Senator Bosa: There must be a misconception, because I did not advocate an elected Senate. I will certainly lend my support to having the minorities represented in the Senate; otherwise I myself would have to pack and leave.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

STATUTE LAW (MILITARY AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES) AMENDMENT ACT, 1980

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 29 the debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: They Served—We Care, tabled in the Senate on October 20, 1981.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I draw attention to the fact that if the Honourable Senator Bonnell speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, in closing the debate on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled They Served—We Care, I would again like to thank the committee members for their cooperation in preparing this report, as well as the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Royal Canadian Legion, Mr. H. C. Chadderton, Secretary-General of the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada, Mr. George Giguère, National President of the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association, Mr. E. H. Slater, Director of the Service Bureau of the Research Council of Veterans Associations in Canada, and others who appeared before the committee and gave us of their time and wisdom.

● (1520)

I would also like to thank the Honourable J. Gilles Lamontagne, who was Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs, and the Honourable Bennett Campbell, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, for their assistance and co-operation.

As many of you know, we made seven recommendations for the benefit of war veterans and their spouses, and already several have been carried out by the department. Probably the most important is our recommendation No. 1, which proposed that "the proportionate pension to the spouses and dependants of deceased veterans who were in receipt of a disability pension of 47 per cent or less be paid immediately instead of being phased in over a six-and-a-half-year period as in the Statute Law (Military and Civilian War Pensions, Compensation and Allowances) Amendment Act 1980." This was carried out by the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Honourable J. Gilles Lamontagne, in July 1981 by means of Bill C-82.

Recommendation No. 4 proposed "that all necessary steps be taken immediately to eliminate the unacceptable delays in processing pension applications and in pension adjudications which have accumulated since 1970." As a result of this recommendation, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Honourable Bennett Campbell, appointed Mr. A. D. McCracken to analyze the over-all pension process and to find improvements. Mr. McCracken's final report to the minister is now in and a number of his preliminary suggestions have already been adopted, together with other organizational changes, resulting in improved performances.

During our last meeting, the Honourable Bennett Campbell informed us that on February 28, 1981 the number of applications pending stood at 3,174; one year later the number had dropped by 805 to 2,369, despite a marked increase in new applications during the first few months of 1982.

According to the minister's statement to our committee, the situation is becoming brighter, with more improvements still to come, and he is hoping for a further reduced backlog in the months ahead. Also, since our report the War Veterans Allowance Board has broadened its opinion to include the former members of Her Majesty's Canadian Forces who were on duty and were transported in ships or aircraft between Canada, Newfoundland, Bermuda or the West Indies during the Second World War, proceeded beyond territorial waters and were outside the western hemisphere. Therefore, they are considered to have served in a theatre of actual war and are eligible to apply for War Veterans Allowance. As a result, a substantial number of new War Veterans Allowance recipients are now receiving benefits.

Honourable senators, let me close by saying that the present Minister of Veterans Affairs made the following statement on our report:

It was a thoughtful report, indeed. I share your overall aim—that much can still be accomplished to improve benefits and programs for veterans.

I don't want veterans to be regarded as just senior citizens. They have earned the right to be considered as a special and honoured group. As your committee so rightly stated, "They Served—We Care".

Honourable senators, although many of our recommendations have been carried out, we will be watching with interest future amendments to legislation concerning veterans and their spouses.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, this report is considered as having been debated.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE RESPECTING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF POSITION OF DEPUTY SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting the establishment of the position of Deputy Speaker of the Senate which was tabled on Thursday, May 6.

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I realize full well that it is unusual for one who is only seconding a motion to speak on it at this stage, but I feel that the nature of this matter is such that I am impelled to say a word.

I am seconding Senator Goldenberg's motion. Am I out of order?

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, I believe the procedure requires His Honour the Speaker to put the question. I will then make some remarks, followed by Senator Donahoe.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Goldenberg, seconded by the Honourable Senator Donahoe, that this report be now adopted.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, as you are all aware, the report of the committee was printed as an appendix to the Proceedings of the Senate of last Thursday, May 6. On the assumption that not every senator has had the opportunity of reading it carefully, I will take the liberty of outlining its principal recommendations as briefly as I can.

Honourable senators will recall that on February 24 the Senate authorized the committee to examine and report upon the establishment of the position of Deputy Speaker of the Senate, including the need for such a position, the recommended procedures therefor, and the compensation to be paid to the incumbent.

The committee heard the views of the Speaker, who is very interested in this matter, and we understood his embarrassment, as he put it to us, arising from the fact that being fourth in the Order of Precedence he is frequently called upon to represent the Government of Canada on special occasions and must ask a senator to replace him on short notice. We appreciate his evidence.

The committee decided to proceed first to consider what authority the Senate has to appoint a Deputy Speaker. We know that there is a Deputy Speaker in the House of Commons, but there are fundamental differences in the procedures under the British North America Act regarding the speakership of the House of Commons and that of the Senate, respectively. For example, section 44 of the British North America Act provides for the election of a Speaker of the House of Commons, while section 47 provides for the election of a member to act as Speaker in his absence. Section 34 of the British North America Act provides for the appointment of the Speaker of the Senate by the Governor General, rather than his or her election, but it does not provide for absence of the Speaker of the Senate.

Another difference becomes apparent when we compare the legislation which deals with the absence of the Speaker of the House of Commons with that dealing with the absence of the Speaker of the Senate. The act respecting the Speaker of the House of Commons establishes the position of Deputy Speaker, and provides for a replacement during both avoidable and unavoidable absences. It provides, in effect, for a permanent replacement for the Speaker.

● (1530)

The Speaker of the Senate Act provides the Senate with no more than the ability to fill the Chair during the temporary absence of the Speaker. We can conclude, on the basis of both the British North America Act and the Speaker of the Senate Act, that only a temporary occupation of the Chair during the absence of the Speaker is contemplated.

The committee concluded, on the basis of the evidence and of our study of the analysis of the law which was made for us, that the establishment of the position of Deputy Speaker, with remuneration from public funds, cannot be effected simply by an amendment to the Rules of the Senate. It requires legislation. The committee decided not to recommend legislation. The committee did not feel that legislation providing for a Deputy Speaker of the Senate would be wise, at this time in any event.

The committee felt, however, having heard the Speaker's case, that the problem can be met in another way. Under section 3 of the Speaker of the Senate Act, the Senate has authority, when informed by the Clerk of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker, to choose any senator to preside during such absence. We came to the conclusion that, if the Senate can choose any senator to preside during the absence of the Speaker, it can then choose the same senator each time. If it can choose the same senator each time, then at the beginning or during the course of a session, as a matter of convenience, the Senate can exercise the right and make its choice known in advance of being informed of the Speaker's unavoidable absence. In other words, it then becomes a matter of internal policy whether the Senate chooses a senator for this purpose for each session or whether it chooses the same senator each time he or she is required to replace the Speaker.

We point out in our report that the Senate could make its choice at the beginning of each session. It could make its choice by way of a motion to that effect, and the senator named in such a motion would then regularly replace the Speaker on a pro tempore basis. He would then be in the same position as the Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons when its Speaker is unavoidably absent. The difference would be that the senator chosen in advance to be Speaker pro tempore would not have the title of Deputy Speaker, nor would he or she be entitled to remuneration.

[Senator Goldenberg.]

There is no question but that if we recommended remuneration, that step would require legislation. The salaries of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons are set out in legislation, in the Senate and House of Commons Act. Remuneration for the Deputy Speaker pro tempore would require legislation which, as I have said, the committee cannot recommend. Financial legislation would have to be introduced in the House of Commons; we could not introduce it in the Senate.

I might briefly point out that I had the good fortune to be a lecturer in political science some years ago, so I had to acquaint myself with the constitutions of various countries. I reminded myself that, under the Constitution of the United States of America, the Vice-President of the United States is the President of the Senate. That Constitution provides further, in section 3, that the Senate shall choose their other officers and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President of the United States. For example, whenever the Vice-President has to act as President of the United States, the President pro tempore replaces him in the Senate.

As a result of our examination of the situation, the committee makes two recommendations:

(1) That for each session there be a senator to preside as "Speaker pro tempore," such senator to be chosen by the Senate through the adoption of a motion with effect as follows:

"Whenever the Senate during the course of the present session is informed by the Clerk at the Table of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker—

whoever is chosen,

—if present, shall preside as Speaker pro tempore during such absence."

As a consequential amendment, we recommend that rule 10 of the Rules of the Senate be amended by the addition of a reference to the Speaker pro tempore.

These are the two recommendations of the committee. I draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that the second recommendation, if adopted, would, as I have said, involve a consequential amendment to rule 10 of the Rules of the Senate by the addition of a reference to the Speaker pro tempore. In view of this, the Senate may wish to adopt the report subject to this amendment being referred for formal approval to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I was so eager to put my point of view forward that perhaps I spoke a little prematurely. If so, I apologize. I will be brief in my remarks.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Before you begin, I wonder whether I might ask Senator Goldenberg a question. I see from the report that it is said that the Senate would not have the power, without legislation, to appoint a Deputy Speaker with remuneration. Has the committee considered the question of the appointment of a Speaker pro tempore, without remuneration, who shall be called the Deputy Speaker? It seems to me that if the Speaker pro tempore is not to receive additional remuneration, the least we could do would be to give him the title, even if he is not actually Deputy Speaker. Would we call him that if that is within our power? Has that legal question been considered by the committee?

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, the committee did consider that question. It was suggested but, on the basis of an examination of previous debates on this matter and of the Constitution and relevant laws, it was decided that we could not appoint a Deputy Speaker. The Speaker of the Senate is not elected; he is appointed by the Governor General. There then arises the question: Could we appoint a Deputy Speaker? We thought the best solution would be a Speaker pro tempore.

If honourable senators will permit me, I might point out that, in the United States, the President pro tempore normally is a very important senior senator. I can remember when Senator Humphrey was Vice-President of the United States. After running for president against President Nixon and being defeated, he went back to the Senate and was immediately elected President pro tempore. I think I have answered your question, Senator Godfrey.

• (1540)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I ask another question before my colleague proceeds? Could the chairman of the committee tell me whether the President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States is a permanent appointment?

Senator Goldenberg: He is elected and remains in office until he is replaced. The position is provided for in the Constitution of the United States, whereas our Constitution makes no provision for a temporary replacement for the Speaker of the Senate, although it does so in the case of the House of Commons.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, to begin again, I was the seconder of the motion which comes from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, of which I am Vice-Chairman and Senator Goldenberg is Chairman.

I would like to explain that I was asked by Senator Goldenberg if I would consent to allow my name to be used as the seconder of the motion. I said, "Most decidedly yes—on one condition, that when the committee sat and when the discussion took place I could make a statement and take a position before the committee." Subject to that, I was prepared to support the motion as presented. My condition was that upon seconding the motion I would explain to the members of the Senate my position with respect to the entire matter.

In the beginning, I was opposed to the appointment of a Deputy Speaker of the Senate. I felt that it was a matter of a frill and an unnecessary, expensive gesture which would bring the Senate into further—if "further" is the right word—disrepute among the people of Canada. I felt that it was neither the season nor the time for us in this house to be adding anything to the superstructure of the management of the house, and I said so in so many words.

On the other hand, I attended the meetings of the committee. I believe there was one meeting I was unable to attend, but I did attend several meetings at which this matter was discussed. At one of those meetings, His Honour gave his reasons why he had an opposing view to mine. I wish to say that they were compelling reasons. He advanced reasons which were applicable to the position of Speaker of the Senate. They were personal and logical, and they convinced me that there was a situation in the Senate which could be improved by the appointment of some person to perform the function of Speaker in cases where it was appropriate and proper for the Speaker not to be present. In other words, when protocol demanded that the Speaker represent Canada and he did so, the responsibility should not be placed upon his shoulders. This responsibility became, for him, a matter of personal embarrassment, because he had to solicit senators to carry out his functions while he was absent. He pointed out that it put him in the position of asking senators, on a personal basis, to substitute for him while he was performing his duty, a very necessary duty about which some would say, by virtue of the travel and entertaining involved, "He is only going on a junket, a holiday, and he is the one who benefits."

I do not question that the Speaker of this body benefits by representing this country, and I sincerely believe, as he does, that he is of great benefit to the country and should be supported in this matter. If the situation is such that it puts His Honour in a position of personal embarrassment, then, if we have it within our power, we should remove that personal embarrassment. So I reversed my stand and became one of those who was agreeable to the idea that there should be a Speaker pro tempore, a Deputy Speaker, call him what you will, but some person who, on a regular basis would perform the functions of the Speaker when he is unavoidably, necessarily and appropriately absent, and accordingly I said so.

However, I made one stipulation and I wish to repeat it here. I said that if, however, the person to be selected was to be a paid or permanent official of the Senate, one to be given an honorarium, salary or remuneration for his services, I did not believe it was an appropriate gesture and I would not support such a proposition. Consequently, I seconded the motion of the committee upon the condition that I be assured by those in power or those in positions of authority that whoever performs the function of the Speaker will not be an official who is permanently appointed and permanently remunerated.

I am well aware, and it has been said in this chamber, that we have no power to fix remuneration or even to decide that there should be remuneration, but that we have it within our power to recommend that there be remuneration, though we have not done so. The chairman, in presenting the motion, said that he was not in any way recommending remuneration.

I trust that my position is abundantly clear, that nothing I may have said with respect to remuneration is to be interpreted as meaning that it would not be appropriate or proper for some kind of daily stipend, honorarium or compensation to be given to the person performing the important duties of the Speaker, provided that such payment is restricted to those times and days on which he or she is actually performing such services. In other words, I am opposed to a year-round salary or a sessional indemnity for a permanent official who may or may not be called upon to act or who, if he or she is called upon, may be called upon very infrequently and occasionally.

I am not opposed to a senator assuming the office of Deputy Speaker if that person sits in the Chair on the nomination of the Senate, because nomination by the Senate removes from the Speaker any personal suggestion of embarrassment or any difficulty that he may now experience in asking someone to perform his functions. So, I am in favour of the Senate appointing such a person, rather than the Speaker. I am also in favour of the person so elected being remunerated purely, simply and only on the basis of time actually spent in the performance of such duties.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in his remarks the chairman of the committee has suggested with regard to this motion that we might wish to withhold our vote on it, subject to its being referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders which will examine the consequential rule amendment that is part of the committee's report. I wonder if Senator Molson agrees with that. If so, I would be glad to move that it be so referred.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, Senator Goldenberg told me about this report and, in fact, showed me the wording of it. I think it would be wise to refer the matter to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, because I am not quite convinced in my own mind that rule 66 should not be involved along with rule 10. So I think that if the motion receives approval, subject to its being referred to the Rules Committee, that would give that committee all the leeway it needs to recommend amendments to any rules involved.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—REPORT REFERRED TO STANDING RULES AND ORDERS COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I suggest that we use the same formula as Senator Flynn has just used with reference to Bill S-24.

Therefore, with leave of the Senate, in amendment, I move:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders for study and report.

Motion agreed to.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES AS CAUSES OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR

REPORT OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 28, the debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled: "Child at Risk," tabled in the Senate on October 16, 1980.

[Senator Donahoe.]

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Bonnell speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, in closing the debate on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science on experiences in early childhood that may be causes of criminal behaviour, I wish to report that we have had tremendous response from coast to coast of this country, from nearly every department of government in each of the provinces, from Ministers of Education, Ministers of Health, Ministers of Social Services, Health Leagues of Canada, Children's Aid Societies, Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Pediatric Societies, the Obstetrics and Gynecology Society of Canada, and even from New Zealand, Australia, the United States, Belgium and Britain. In each and every case, we have received favourable comment on our report.

It is a report that touches the heart of a broad variety of people, not only in this country but in most countries of the world; a report which brings to light many things that were known but were never put together in one package; and a report that recommends that many changes be made by federal, provincial and municipal governments, hospitals, school boards, parents and expectant mothers. It is a report which has made a lot of people take notice, to change their way of living and to broaden their knowledge about the dangers and repercussions that follow when the unborn child has been subjected to the risk of malnutrition, drugs, alcohol, tobacco, chemicals and additives consumed by its mother. It also brings to light the dangers that may prevail at the time of birth, such as lack of oxygen or poor obstetrical procedures, over-sedation of the mother, as well as hospital practices of isolating the newborn baby from its parents and not keeping proper medical records from the time of birth.

It also brings to light, in early childhood, the lack of proper training to be a parent for many of our teenage mothers, the need for bonding and parental guidance, damage caused by such things as violence in the home, on the streets, and on television, child abuse, wife-battering and emotional deprivation.

Honourable senators, during the last year and a half I had the opportunity to speak to the Children's Aid Society of the County of Lanark, in the town of Smiths Falls, and was keynote speaker in Winnipeg on July 13, 1981 at the Canadian Congress for the Prevention of Crime. I have also participated in radio open-line programs and meetings of women's groups, welfare groups, La Leche Leagues, The Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies, Professional Women's Clubs, and others. In each case, the response has been tremendous, the interest has been sincere, and most have been impressed with the work of the Senate.

Honourable senators, in my closing remarks I would like to tell you that I have here before me hundreds of letters from all over the world concerning this report. They include letters from the Minister of Justice of Canada, the Solicitor General of Canada, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Housing and many others.

Honourable senators, if you have not already read this report, I highly recommend it to your reading.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 13, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILL

E.G. KLEIN LIMITED—FIRST READING

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc presented Bill S-26, to revive E.G. Klein Limited under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Bill read first time.

Senator Leblanc moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, May 18, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. Our illustrious whip, Senator Macdonald, did me the honour of sitting beside me yesterday. I wonder why he has left me today and returned to the other seat.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps he should see a doctor about it.

The Hon. the Speaker: He was promoted in the meantime.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He is sitting next to me now.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the view from here is better than that from the second row.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): This is an internal dispute that you will have to resolve yourselves.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORT ON COMMITTEE BUDGET TABLED

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled a report approving the supplementary budget of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-THIRD MEETING—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, May 27, 1982, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the twenty-third meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group held in Key Largo, Florida, from the 4th to the 8th of March, 1982.

Honourable senators, I have the report of the meeting in both official languages, and should like to have it printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day so that senators will have an opportunity to familiarize themselves with it and make comments on it. The meeting, as the report shows, dealt with matters of great importance to both Canada and the United States.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 4106.)

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 18, 1982, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

IMPERIAL OIL—EXPLORATION CUTBACK—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. Has the minister's department done a calculation of the number of jobs that will be forfeited by Canadians as a consequence of Imperial Oil's announced exploration cutback, over four years, of $2.4 billion?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I am not familiar with that particular announcement, honourable senators, but I can advise my honourable friend that Esso Resources and associated companies have announced, as he will know, a $600 million exploration and development program in the Beaufort Sea. There is a very interesting list of contracts involved in that.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You never reply, do you?

Senator Olson: These were contracts that were announced by the company at the same time. For example, there is a $50 million dredging contract by Beaver Dredging (Western) Limited, of Toronto, and there is an $85 million service contract for Arctic Transportation Limited, of Calgary, to provide logistic support. Allied Shipbuilders Limited of Vancouver will supply two $10 million tugs; Vancouver Shipyards will build another tug worth $9 million; and Timberland Equipment Limited, of Woodstock, Ontario, has bid successfully on a $2.4 million contract to supply four anchor handling winches and a mooring system. There is a $1 million contract for the steel caissons for the Esso's offshore wells designed by Alberty, Pullerits, Dickson and Jamieson, of Toronto; and there is a $6 million contract for the Algoma Steel Corporation, of Sault Ste. Marie, to supply 8,000 tons of steel needed for the caissons.

I believe the news is also imminent of an award of a $20 million contract to a western Canadian firm to supply the caisson drilling system.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: Stop that noise. Stop that stupid applause!

Senator Balfour: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? Is it correct that the $600 million Beaufort exploration project will in fact be financed to the extent of $400 million by the taxpayers of Canada?

Senator Olson: Well, I guess—

Senator Balfour: Yes or no?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend always likes these "yes or no" answers.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but we never get one.

● (1405)

Senator Olson: The honourable senator knows very well that a "yes or no" answer to many of these questions without explanation is not sufficient to explain the kind of information which, I am sure, my honourable friend wants. I am sure he wants the information in Hansard so that the people who read that document will know who is involved.

Senator Balfour: Will know the truth.

Senator Olson: The honourable senator also knows that the Petroleum Incentives Program provides a certain percentage of the cost of exploration which takes in the frontier areas or on the Canada lands. It may be that it amounts to $400 million, but I will have to check the matter out to make sure that it is right.

I would like the honourable senator to understand very clearly that the kind of expansion and activity going on there, along with the list of contracts that I just read out—and, by the way, that is only a preliminary list—are in keeping with the government's policies to become self-sufficient in oil and to stimulate economic activity at this time.

Senator Perrault: That's great.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Did I understand him correctly, that as the Minister of State for Economic Development he is unaware of the fact that Imperial Oil Limited has announced a cutback of $2.4 billion over four years to its exploration program? Is he unaware of that?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think it depends on the kind of figures that are used. If one uses larger figures, which are probably more useful for the honourable senator's purposes, one could apply a multi-billion dollar figure with respect to Cold Lake as well.

Senator Balfour: But were you unaware of that announcement?

Senator Olson: If it is ignorance, then it will have to be, but I am not aware of the announcement that has been made in the last few hours about a $2.4 billion reduction in the Esso Resources—

Senator Balfour: Over four years.

Senator Olson:—exploratory program. However, one could use almost any other number. When one starts to make deductions—

Senator Flynn: Come on.

Senator Olson:—from intentions, it becomes a matter that requires some examination in order to find out and make sure that one started from the right base.

Senator Flynn: Aren't you going to applaud?

Senator Perrault: That was a very intelligent observation.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question on this same matter. The statement to which reference has been made was made yesterday by a senior vice president of Imperial Oil at a meeting in Edmonton. The point that it brings to my attention is that we have a company that is cutting back its four-year development program in Canada by $2.4 billion while, at the same time, as the minister has pointed out, it has agreed to proceed with a $600 million development in the Beaufort Sea. I am sure we can all be delighted over the announcement of this development, and I do not wish to depreciate it in any way.

Of course, the items read out a few minutes ago by the minister are simply a breakdown of that $600 million. It does not represent an additional expenditure. Can the minister tell this house whether the other members of the consortium that is proceeding with this recently announced Beaufort Sea development are also undertaking that development as an alternative to developments which they had previously proposed in the established oil producing areas of the country? In other words, are the other members of the consortium cutting back on the development in conventional areas and simply diverting the capital to offshore development in the Beaufort Sea?

If that is the case, while it is nice to see the development going forward in the Beaufort Sea, to lose $2.4 billion of development in areas that are not highly subsidized by the tax-payers—because government incentives do not apply in those areas to the same extent they do in offshore development—is not a very good deal for the country in the aggregate. We are simply getting a 25 per cent investment in place of a 100 per cent investment. If the other members of the consortium are doing the same thing as Imperial Oil and diverting their development from the conventional fields to development in the frontier fields, then, and I am sure the minister will agree, it poses a rather serious problem.

Senator Olson: I shall take that part of the question as notice and refer it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to find out if they have been given any information that there are transfers from exploration and development in one area to another. I know how little I should rely on them, but I have just received a copy of the Globe and Mail press release that has as its headline, "Imperial reduces spending plans." The article contains the paragraph that I just read which my honourable friend, Senator Balfour, did not bring up. The article is very important because, among other things, it states:

● (1410)

The big Cold Lake heavy oil project and Imperial's participation in the Petalta petrochemical plant were casualties of Imperial's efforts to keep an even strain on its financial resources.

It seems to me that you could do another type of calculation in this regard knowing that, when the Cold Lake decision was made to suspend, postpone or whatever the right word is, that was a very large amount.

I am not exactly sure how much of the $13 billion was slated for the next four years, but I think it was a major portion. Therefore, if it is in aggregate a $2.4 billion reduction, including the reduction in the Cold Lake project, it could perhaps be calculated to include the Beaufort development, and it may be more than they had planned on doing when the massive Cold Lake project was also in their projections.

Senator Balfour: I should like the honourable senator to know that he has that clipping courtesy of myself since, evidently, his own staff was not keeping him informed with respect to developments taking place in western Canada.

If he is going to extract a paragraph from the clipping, would he also extract the paragraph which points out that Imperial Oil has reduced its hiring plan from 2,300 jobs to 200 jobs? In other words, 2,100 young Canadians will be without new jobs as a result of that announcement.

[Senator Manning.]

Does the minister have any comment to make with respect to that aspect of the cutback?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is doing what he accuses us of doing once in a while, and that is double-counting.

I think everyone here and everyone who heard the announcement that there was to be a postponement or delay of the large Cold Lake project would have known—and I think the figures were published at that time—that there would be a cutback in hiring as a result of that delay or postponement.

Therefore, it does not seem to me that it should be surprising that, if the number of dollars of intended investment was cut back by the Cold Lake, this amount should be contained in this article. I will check to see if the amount of hiring is not also included in that project. If that is so, it is not news today; it is a recapitulation of a number of things that Imperial has decided to do over the past several months.

Senator Flynn: Illusion.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES—MARITIME COMMAND—AMMUNITION SUPPLIES

Hon. Guy Charbonneau: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate please confirm or deny the assertion made in the press yesterday that Maritime Command has only one minute's worth of ammunition left and cannot seem to find a source of supply?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is fascinating to see the opposition ghoulishly picking its way through the cemetery of alleged "bad news." They love to go into any musky news report and to draw the worst possible conclusions.

I have not read that report—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): If you have not read it, then just say that you have not and sit down.

Senator Perrault: I do know that a brief news report sifted out of a newspaper does not necessarily constitute a condemnation of Canada's defence effort.

Senator Flynn: We did not say that. You are an insult to the intelligence of this place. Reply to the question or keep quiet.

Senator Perrault: You keep quiet.

Senator Charbonneau: I asked the minister to confirm or deny the allegations; I did not say anything else, and I did not ask him anything but to deny or confirm that this assertion is true.

● (1415)

Senator Flynn: Reply!

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice. I want to assure the honourable senator that he can sleep peacefully in his bed tonight in the almost positive knowledge that the report is grossly exaggerated.

Senator Charbonneau: If the leader knows the answer, he should have answered the question. He has told me that he will take the question as notice, but then tells me that the report is wrong. Does the Leader of the Government know the answer to the question, or is he taking the question as notice?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to act more responsibly than the Honourable Senator Charbonneau. Instead of quoting from some newspaper clipping, I will apprise myself of the facts, just as the honourable senator should have done before he asked the question.

Senator Charbonneau: I must point out to the Leader of the Government that I am not in a position to assert whether that report is right or wrong, but the Leader of the Government is. I am only asking him either to deny or to confirm that. That is a very simple question.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is aware of the fact that quoting from newspaper clippings is unparliamentary—

Senator Flynn: Oh, come on!

Senator Perrault:—and that he needs more substance than that to bring something to the attention of the Senate.

Senator Charbonneau: I must point out to the minister that I did not quote anything. I said "allegations in the press." I am simply asking him either to deny or to confirm that. That is all. I did not quote anything.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONS—ENTRENCHMENT OF BASIC RATE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My question is a follow-up to those posed by Senator Bird and by me yesterday regarding the basic rate of veterans' pensions.

It is obvious—and has been confirmed by the Minister of Veterans Affairs—that veterans' pensions have fallen off by $900 from those to which they are compared, the five lowest categories in the public service.

Yesterday, in answer to a question posed in the other place, the Minister of Veterans Affairs mentioned that a brief had been submitted to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs requesting that the basic rate of pension be entrenched in the legislation. The minister indicated that he will be prepared to consider that when he has had an opportunity to read the brief.

That same witness, Mr. Cliff Chadderton, appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, and one of the recommendations he made was that the basic rate of pension be entrenched in the legislation.

Our committee presented a report to the minister last November making the same recommendation, and yet the minister said that he will consider that after reading the brief submitted by Mr. Chadderton.

Could the Leader of the Government determine from the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he takes into consideration reports of Senate committees? He told us that we had submitted a good report and that many of the recommendations were valid. It seems to me that the minister does not take seriously what we say, because, as I said, we submitted that report some six or seven months ago.

I ask the Leader of the Government to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he did, in fact, consider the report of the Senate committee, and, if so, why does he not show us the common courtesy to reply?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the evolution of sound policies is not achieved overnight.

Senator Marshall: This has been going on for 10 or 20 years.

Senator Perrault: The Minister of Veterans Affairs wants to read all of the available material to ensure that the policy, when put in place, will serve the interests of the veterans. It is heartening to note that it will have Senator Marshall's support.

Senator Marshall: It will certainly have my support, but this recommendation was in the Woods committee report which came out in 1970, which was 12 years ago. The government has been putting that off every year since.

I am asking the Leader of the Government to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he has considered our report and whether it will be taken into consideration in conjunction with the brief.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, certainly the view of Senate committees are given great weight by this government, and always have been. The Honourable Senator Marshall is aware of the fact that no country in the world has more beneficial programs for veterans than Canada has.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Come on!

Senator Perrault: Senator Marshall supported those programs, as I recall, both in the other place and in this place. Perfection has not yet been achieved, but further improvements in veterans' programs will be made.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to pose a question to the congenial and kindly Minister of State for Economic Development.

I am sure we were all perturbed by the top of the news report last evening regarding the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. Can the honourable gentleman tell the Senate whether Canadians should be concerned about the recent decline in the value of the dollar?

• (1420)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, Canadians should be concerned about the rumours that are going around, some of them initiated by the opposition, which perhaps have an effect on the Canadian dollar.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Olson: That is a great disservice to Canada generally—

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Shame.

Senator Olson: I can elaborate on that. Some of the alleged and speculative statements attributed to the Minister of Finance—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): "Sinister" of Finance, did you say?

Senator Olson: —in Paris and Helsinki are wrong and are misinterpretations. The Minister of Finance has expressed again, as he has done many times, his concern for the problems associated with unemployment. He has said categorically, over and over again, that while he is greatly disturbed by the unemployment problems and the pressing need to reduce unemployment, "this objective cannot be achieved on a sustainable basis unless continued successful efforts are made to reduce inflation." Therefore, any speculation that the Minister of Finance is deviating from the policy thrust which he is confident is the longer term and stable solution to this problem is not correct.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. I thank the honourable gentleman for his response, and I hastily withdraw the comments I made about the "congenial and kindly minister." In the minister's response, he blamed the opposition, of course—

An Hon. Senator: And the United States.

Senator Muir: —and the United States; and God, and the Pope, God bless him. He blames everyone under the sun for his and the government's problems. We heard that over and over again in the other place. If anything went wrong, it was the weather, it was the lack of rainfall, it was the lack of this or that. It was probably the mushrooms that the Leader of the Government was eating out in British Columbia that gave him hallucinations, or it was probably something else. I know that the Minister of Finance, in the other place, is concerned about unemployment, and well he should be, particularly with regard to Quebec and the Atlantic region. We are not fortunate enough to be living in Alberta, where they have a good Conservative government which has been doing a tremendous job provincially.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): No commercials!

Senator Muir: My supplementary to the honourable gentleman, to whom I referred earlier in such a kindly way, is: Despite what the Minister of Finance has said overseas, are the minister and the government concerned, and, if so, what do they propose to do about it, apart from the nothingness that was contained in the minister's answers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): It seems to be an almost futile effort to convey to the opposition—

Hon. G. I. Smith: The fairy tales.

Senator Olson: —the objective of a sound financial and monetary policy; but we have to continue to try to do that anyway. I did not blame the opposition entirely, but it has made a contribution to the rumours—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What about your own contribution—your own; from your own mistakes?

Senator Olson: —that has an effect on the market to some extent. In my view, the opposition should be acting in a somewhat more responsible manner; but that is for them to decide. The Minister of Finance has said repeatedly, and he said it again in Helsinki at the International Monetary Fund meeting:

A return to sustainable growth and a lasting improvement to our increasingly severe unemployment problems requires perseverance with the broad strategy of reducing inflation.

● (1425)

Whether you agree with it or not, the government's policy ought to be clear. There is an element of perseverance that is needed if we are going to reduce inflation, and any subsequent problems, so that we will be in a competitive position with respect to our trading partners.

The only other comment I would like to make, honourable senators, is this. I know that Senator Muir and I, when we used to sit in the opposition in the other place, tried to blame the government for everything. I also know, however, as a practical farmer, that if weather conditions are adverse they can reduce your production and income more than anything the government may do. So, although he is trying to blame all of the difficulties on the Canadian government, I know that Senator Muir has read reports on the subject and that he is enough of a realist to be aware that there has been a very significant downturn in the economy internationally. He must also realize that Canada's participation in that international economy has suffered to some extent.

Senator Flynn: We all know that when you were in the other place you decided to switch rather than fight.

Senator Muir: I have a further supplementary, honourable senators. I am glad to see that the honourable gentleman has won the support of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who probably was at the mushrooms again. He was the only one who applauded. Would he therefore stop eating them? They give him hallucinations.

The honourable minister's response was nothing but an array of baffle-gab and gobbledegook, which meant nothing.

He was saying that if the unemployed in this country are to continue—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is this a question?

Senator Muir: Indeed, it is. Of course, it is a question.

Senator Frith: Very well. We shall wait patiently.

Senator Muir: The Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate has not held elected office, so he is not familiar with how we do things.

Senator Frith: I know how we do them here.

Senator Muir: However, if I may continue, the Minister of State for Economic Development, quoting the Minister of Finance, says we must get inflation down. I am sure we all agree on that, but in the interim period there are thousands and thousands of Canadians who are losing their homes because of inflation and their inability to keep up their mortgage payments, and thousands and thousands of Canadians, both young and old, who cannot find jobs. What are they going to do, and how long is it going to take to reduce inflation—and I take into account all the brilliance that the minister and his colleagues have at their disposal—so that we can get people back to work, get them earning money again, and thus enable them to pay their debts? How long is it going to take?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am very pleased to hear that Senator Muir—and I hope he was speaking for his colleagues also—supports the government with regard to getting inflation down.

Senator Flynn: The objective is fine, but the methods are wrong.

Senator Olson: That is an interesting comment. A lot of us would like to take short cuts in carrying out a highly responsible and sound fiscal and monetary policy. Unfortunately, in some cases there are no shortcuts available. I would like to be able to bring statistics here to indicate that Canada's very high and stubborn inflation rates are backing off significantly. Unfortunately, that is not so. As I have explained a number of times, rather than moving closer to a competitive position with our trading partners, the gap with regard to our inflation rate and other competitive factors, particularly in the case of the United States, has widened. That is indeed unfortunate.

All I can do at this point, however, is to express the hope that the inflation rate, and all of the consequences that flow from it, such as high interest rates, and the reluctance to make investments in the face of these high rates, will be resolved as soon as possible.

I want to say again that I, and my colleagues in the government, sincerely believe that unless we take the route that we are following now, of maintaining our fiscal and monetary stance in order to relieve the pressure in some of those areas and getting ourselves into a more competitive position, we are not going to see less unemployment and less of all these other difficulties, but more.

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Robert Muir: I thank the honourable gentleman for his response. Again, he has his one applauder on the other side, the Leader of the Government—Oh, he found another.

I have a supplementary question. From what the minister has just said, it would appear that he has abandoned all of the old-time monetary policies that he espoused in the other place. I believe those were the policies of a man by the name of Douglas.

An Hon. Senator: Tommy?

Senator Muir: No, it was not Tommy; he wasn't a bad guy at all.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Major Douglas.

Senator Muir: Yes, thank you, Senator Hicks; it was a gentleman by the name of Major Douglas. That is what happens when you are an academic—you have all of the degrees and you know all the answers.

For the information of the honourable minister, I do not speak on behalf of anyone else; I speak for myself. Many times in the other place I spoke against my own party and against the wishes of those who did not appreciate what I said. I still do that in this chamber, and I shall continue to do it. I do not ask permission to speak. I want to find out what can be done. I know that you have a difficult problem, but you cannot blame it on the opposition. You were elected to straighten out all of the matters in this country.

Hon. D. J. Steuart: Not us!

Senator Muir: You have all of the answers; now come up with the action.

With regard to my supplementary question, I believe it was yesterday that the Bank of Canada announced an increase in the lending rate to 15.41 from 15.16 per cent. Is the minister worried about the impact that still higher interest rates could have, and will have, upon the private sector job situation and upon economic activity in general? Is he really concerned about that impact?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not think that I can add very much to what I have said before.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Agreed!

Senator Olson: To do so would be to repeat myself for the third or fourth time. My honourable friend knows that the supplementary question that he has just asked has been answered in full. He has been told about the government's policy, over the long term, to deal adequately with that problem. I do not have anything further to add.

With regard to the preliminary to his question, I will only say that it demonstrates again the danger of someone interpreting a policy and a philosophy that he does not understand himself.

Senator Muir: I am glad that the honourable gentleman is admitting that he did not understand what he was espousing in the other place when he was voting for debt-free money, and so on. All I can say in response to his remark—of course, Senator Frith has to prompt. He should have been at Stratford so that he would prompt the actors. Does the honourable gentleman realize that, despite all of his verbosity, quite frankly I think he is “a wee bit glaiket, aye, a wee bit glaiket.” Our brilliant Hansard reporters will know what that means.

Senator Olson: I suppose that the honourable senator is entitled to his opinion.

Senator Muir: Thank you.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

PRINCE RUPERT—CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN PORT

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The other day I asked him if he could indicate to the Senate whether or not the $300 million grain port project at Prince Rupert was in jeopardy. He undertook to inform himself with respect to this matter. Is he now in a position to indicate whether this other mega-project is going down the tubes or whether it will go ahead?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I hope that you do not get any satisfaction out of that “going down the tubes” remark.

Hon. Hazen Argue (Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board): In reply to the honourable senator, I am still confident that the project will go ahead. The tenders that were submitted amounted to some $319 million, which is $59 million above the estimate of $260 million. That is causing the consortium some difficulty. My information is that the members of the consortium are trying to negotiate with the people who had offered the tenders to see whether some savings can be made, perhaps by modifying the project in a minor way. I am not sure what that means, but efforts are being made to see whether that figure can be brought down somewhat. I believe that a further decision will be taken at a later date, but the federal government is very much in support of the project.

The National Harbours Board has let a contract of $22.9 million to level the property and create a railway embankment between Ridley Island and Kaien Island, on which Prince Rupert is situated. This contract has been more than one-third completed.

With regard to the projections for the future, the grain authorities, including the elevator companies which are associated with this consortium, the Canadian Wheat Board and others, believe that this terminal is required. It will add some 3.5 million tonnes export capability to that system. I do not think that I have any more specific information than that. I reiterate that the parties are concerned with carrying on discussions and negotiations. I am hopeful that a favourable decision will be reached.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Balfour: I thank the honourable senator for his answer. To the Minister of State for Regional and Economic Development, I will say that I get no satisfaction from the prospect of mega-projects going down the tubes. I do experience a sense of anger, because I understand the reasons for some of these mega-projects going down the tubes. I am looking at one of them.

Senator Olson: That is why you are so wrong.

Senator Balfour: To the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board I will direct a supplementary question. Can he indicate whether his department has made a study of the effect on the capacity of western Canada to achieve its grain delivery targets if in fact this project does not go forward?

Senator Argue: I believe that this project is necessary in order to achieve the target of 30 million tonnes by 1985, and is certainly required to reach the target of 36 million tonnes by 1990. These additional export facilities are required. I believe it is correct to say that experts in the field have been pleasantly surprised with the increased handling that is going through the port of Vancouver. It has been running far in excess of anything they had hoped for.

Nonetheless, my judgment is that this project in Prince Rupert is necessary if we are to meet those export targets. Although this may not be the question that the honourable senator is asking of me, some people feel that those export targets are too high to be realistic in terms of physically achieving them on the farms. However, projections based on past trends would indicate that that is the way things are going.

There is a surplus of wheat in relation to demand in the world at this time, but that surplus is chiefly the result of a very large crop on the North American continent last year. I attended a session with the Canadian Wheat Board yesterday, and their projections were once again repeated to me and others at the meeting. They feel that the world demand for grain is increasing with population growth at a rate of 2 to 3 per cent per year, and that the world increase in wheat production is going up by 1 per cent next year. Therefore, they feel that the long-term trend in terms of demand, from the standpoint of a grain producer, is favourable. Currently, the demand is not as favourable as the projection would indicate; nonetheless, it is felt that the demand will be there in the future. Everyone is confident that the production is likely to be there as well. Under those circumstances, the Prince Rupert terminal is definitely required.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AIR TRANSPORT COMMAND—AVAILABILITY OF AIRCRAFT

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some time ago the Minister of National Defence stated that increasing the capacity in vehicles of Air Transport Command was one of the priorities of the department. In view of that, coupled with the fact that many major airlines on this continent are now grounding aircraft because of the woes of the air travel industry and some major airlines are even going bankrupt, as we learned this morning, and also with the fact that this would probably make available at bargain prices the means of bolstering the capacity of the Department of National Defence, will the government, specifically the Department of National Defence, give this question immediate attention?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the proposal is interesting. The question will be taken as notice.

NOVA SCOTIA

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—INELIGIBILITY OF LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, on May 11 Senator Muir asked me about the production of steel rails at Sysco and a related question with respect to unemployment insurance. I should like to reply to that today.

Briefly, in 1980-81 Canadian National was purchasing 151,000 tonnes of rail from Sysco. In 1982 CN purchased 97,000 tonnes. While 11 per cent of CN's needs in 1981-82 were purchased abroad, that is something it does only when it has to. When the two Canadian plants, Sysco and Algoma, cannot provide CN with the quantity or quality it needs, CN, in the interests of safety, must be certain that the track it buys will stand the wear and tear of every-day operation.

In 1982-83 CN will purchase 88,000 tonnes of rail, none from outside Canada. Again, CN only purchases rail outside Canada when it cannot avoid doing so.

The president of CN, I am told, met with the Premier of Nova Scotia last Friday, suggesting that, if someone wanted to pay for the storage or production of rails for 1982-83, activities could be resumed now. In other words, CN is quite willing to be accommodating.

Last June the federal government contributed 80 per cent of the $90 million, or $72 million, required for the modernization of Sysco, which is a provincial crown corporation. The practicality of moving ahead on the coke ovens aspect of the plan is now under examination.

With respect to the question on the ineligibility of laid-off employees for unemployment insurance benefits, the determination of eligibility is expected within the next two weeks and, therefore, we anticipate no delays in the normal delivery of unemployment insurance cheques, if the claims are validated. The commission is encouraging all laid-off workers to submit their claims to their unemployment insurance offices as soon as possible.

Referring again to rail production, I should say that work will begin in early August on a new order for Canadian National, and the Sydney community and workers in the primary metal industry in that locality are designated for assistance under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, commonly known as ILAP.

Hon. Robert Muir: I wish to thank the honourable minister for his response, which was quite full and comprehensive. When I was asking these questions two days ago, the honourable gentleman suggested that I was probably playing around with the truth with respect to the purchase of foreign steel and so on. In the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Saturday, May 8, the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin is reported to have said that CN is buying heavy-duty rail from Algoma Steel and from, the minister said, "foreign suppliers, although it would rather be able to buy it from Sysco, because Algoma is a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific Limited." I just wanted to correct the minister's suggestion that I was playing with the truth. There are times, as he himself reiterated today, when CN does purchase steel from foreign sources.

With respect to the related question on unemployment insurance benefits, the minister is quite correct that the president of CN met with the Premier of Nova Scotia and said that he would be very happy to see Sysco continue to produce rail. He would like to see the purchase of more rail, but, according to Maurice Leclair, the president of CN, that will not happen without government assistance. In saying that, I am looking at the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Tuesday, May 11. That is because CN is having troubles of its own, and we know that is the case.

Since in the past, as the honourable minister knows, the government of the day has stockpiled uranium and wheat, and even coal, during slack periods, would it not be possible for the minister and his colleagues to give consideration to bringing ahead the production of steel rails that will be required not only for CN but for other orders that may come on the books, in this way assisting the company by letting them stockpile?

We are grateful for the assistance the federal government has given Sysco. We are very happy about that and many of us have worked on that, Senator Graham being one of the most prominent, along with the Minister of Finance. So we are pleased about that. Nevertheless, I am asking the minister if it would not be possible to consider the fact that rails could be manufactured and stockpiled. In that way we would get the steelworkers back to work rather than have them on unemployment insurance—as they will be now—if and when everything goes all right.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that possibility, as I suspect my honourable friend knows, is under active consideration now, to the extent that, as I mentioned and he confirmed, the Premier of Nova Scotia and the president of CN have already met to discuss the situation. I have not been involved in any of the detailed discussions. However, I do know that there are more details and implications involved than Senator Muir and I have discussed. I am sure he will recognize that we cannot have a debate on the subject during Question Period. I will say, however, that I am also aware that before long there is likely to be a significant increase in the demand for steel, when the go-ahead is given for the increased rail capacity in western Canada. I am confident that that will go ahead, which will mean a significant increase in the demand for tonnage of steel rail.

Senator Muir: I wish to thank the honourable gentleman again for his response. I would further ask him if it would be possible for him, because of his prestige in the cabinet—and he does not need to smile about that, because I mean it—and the position he holds in the cabinet, to involve himself more in this particular project so that he can ascertain if that might take place. I am not debating with him; I am simply asking questions. So far he has been doing very well answering them.

With regard to the question on unemployment insurance, the minister gave a slight response to that, which I found was not quite clear, concerning those who were validated and so on. Can the minister clarify the situation with respect to whether there is any controversy as to the Unemployment Insurance Commission's adopting the attitude that a worker cannot qualify because he was on strike? In other words, will the commission say, "You cannot qualify because you were on strike. It is true enough that you were supposed to go back to work, but then there was no work for you. Therefore, you are not allowed to collect benefits."? Has the minister clarified that so that the men will simply be able to go and file their claims and then, after the appropriate waiting period, receive their benefits?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, in making my statement I did not go into that detail because I did not have that information in front of me. I did say, however, that the commission is encouraging all laid-off workers to submit their claims to the unemployment insurance offices as soon as possible. So they will have that. Obviously, as the honourable senator knows, they will not be eligible to receive the actual cheques until a certain number of days have elapsed, in any event.

My notes tell me that the Unemployment Insurance Commission is attempting to have all those applications for claims submitted to them so that when the matter is clarified there will be no further delay. It is a fact, of course, that there are certain regulations within the department regarding strikes and eligibility for benefits, but my honourable friend is aware of that. I can get an even more detailed answer, but the message I am trying to convey today is that those applications should come in from the workers, in any event, so that there will be no further delay depending on some change in the regulations that would, as the honourable senator has pointed out, validate what could be interpreted now as an invalid application.

Senator Muir: I thank the minister for his full report and it is very good. The only thing that concerns me, and I hope that the minister will go into the matter further—and I know that he has dealt with many unemployment insurance cases himself over the years—is that sometimes, because of a slight technicality, workers can wait for as long as ten weeks before they get any money. Because of the unique situation of these men and women, I hope that they will not be caught up in a delay of that kind. If the men and women get in and file their claims immediately, I hope there will not be some commission sitting on the matter for two or three months to ascertain if "John Brown" or "Bill Jones" will qualify. Will the minister investigate this matter and report back to us the next time he has an opportunity?

Senator Olson: I shall take the question as notice.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a supplementary question with regard to this subject. I understand from the original statement that the CNR had to buy rails outside Canada because Sysco was not able to meet the specifications for those rails. I wonder if the minister could ascertain the specifications required by CN that could not be met by Sydney Steel.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think I did that in a previous exchange. However, I shall obtain those specifications for the honourable senator. I do not have them with me today. I would like to underline the fact that there are significant purchases intended to be placed with Sysco Steel for rails in this and coming years.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RECOMMENDATION OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information in reply to a question asked by Senator Nurgitz on April 29. The information relates to the honourable senator's inquiries regarding the McDonald Commission report and the status of certain RCMP officers in relation to that report. The documentation, which has been provided for me by the Solicitor General, is rather lengthy and, for that reason, I propose that it be incorporated in the record of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows.)

In 1976 the Solicitor General, Mr. Fox, swore an affidavit under section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act denying production of documents to the Human Rights Commission of Quebec. The documents concerned a security investigation of two women who were employed at establishments on the site of the Olympic Games in Montreal.

The unanimous decision of the court written by Mr. Justice Chouinard upholds the authority of the Solicitor General to deny the commission access to documents whose disclosure might pose a threat to national security. According to the decision, section 41(2) is constitutional even though it could lead to abuses that cannot be controlled by the courts. Mr. Justice Chouinard concludes, however, that:

Cependant le risque que l'Exécutif applique à mauvais escient ou même de façon arbitraire une législation valablement adoptée par le Parlement n'a pas pour effet de faire perdre à celui-ci son pouvoir de légiférer.

Noting that both the federal parliament and the provincial legislatures have power to legislate and therefore the power to grant "absolute privilege", Mr. Justice Chouinard pointed out that if the court were to rule that Parliament did not have the right to grant such privilege, it would mean a denial of the supremacy of Parliament.

As honourable senators will recall, during the course of proceedings in November 1981 against present and past members of the RCMP instituted by the Attorney General of Quebec, it was necessary to swear an affidavit under section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act to withhold documents requested by defence counsel. These documents contain information the production of which would be injurious to national security or disclose confidences of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada. The documents requested were among the thousands to which the commission of inquiry into the RCMP had access.

The federal commission of inquiry headed by Mr. Justice David McDonald was given untrammelled access to all categories of government and RCMP documents. In an unprecedented move under the terms of an Order in Council passed in 1979 the commission was permitted access to cabinet and cabinet committee minutes that might bear on government knowledge of illegal activities. In its third report, the commission pronounced itself well satisfied with the terms and conditions of this access. It had access to the indexes of the minutes of the cabinet and its committees and was shown any minute that it thought was relevant to its concerns. The commission in its report noted that the Clerk of the Privy Council interpreted its right of access to cabinet and cabinet committee minutes in broad terms.

In its report published in August 1981 the commission made three principal findings:

First, certain members and former members of the RCMP had committed acts not authorized or provided for by law; which could be referred to Attorneys General, federal and provincial, for possible prosecution and to the Commissioner, RCMP for possible discipline.

Second, in order to establish the context of the acts in question, certain information should be made public notwithstanding the need to protect cabinet confidence—

Third, no superior authority for the acts could be attributed to ministers and senior officials.

The commission sought and received declassification of the relevant portions of many classified documents and it reported at length on the contents of many of them. These disclosures were unprecedented in our history and were made possible, not as a result of findings of wrongdoing, but because the government acceded to the commission's request to publish all relevant material even if the purpose was to establish that no wrongdoing occurred.

The commission took the view that it would be necessary to make a report citing misconduct if any minister or senior official participated in, knew of or failed to deal with activities of the RCMP not authorized or provided for by law. After over 300 hearings and having received evidence from numerous ministers and senior officials including the Prime Minister, the commission was unable to make any finding of misconduct against any minister, former minister, senior official, or former senior official.

The commission also took the view that it should publish as much as possible to reassure the public of the completeness of its inquiry, and that the "desirability of disclosing government misconduct or wrongdoing" or of refuting such allegations would determine whether an otherwise secret or confidential matter would be made public.

In short, the commission could not have made a fuller or more complete inquiry into the question of senior responsibility and its findings in this regard were published in full.

The government, through its judicial commission of inquiry, has done everything possible to ensure the publication on the basis of independent advice of all material relevant to questions of guilt or innocence in relation to allegedly illegal activities of the RCMP. The decision to swear a 41(2) affidavit is not easily taken and in many respects is as distasteful for the minister as it is objected to by the opposition. The government is, however, charged with the maintenance of our system of collective decision-making and with the integrity of national security and our international relations. It is the responsibility of ministers to make these difficult decisions, but in this case the customary difficulty of deciding where to draw the line has been greatly reduced as a result of the proceedings and findings of a judicial commission of inquiry.

The government had no choice but to exercise its responsibilities to protect the system of cabinet government and to ensure that international relations and national security were not jeopardized unjustifiably. The government took its responsibility and protected the documents in the only way available to it in law, namely by affidavit pursuant to section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—OCCUPATION BY ARGENTINA— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a report on the Falkland Islands situation. There have been press reports today to the effect that Canada has been approached to participate in a United Nations interim administration on the Falkland Islands.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs advises me that, since the negotiations are being held in absolute confidentiality, it is not possible to confirm this report. It can be said that Canada has not been approached by any party to play a role in a U.N. interim administration or peacekeeping body. We have, however, indicated to the U.N. Secretary General that Canada would be prepared to facilitate negotiations or consider a role for Canada in an eventual settlement, if the parties concerned so wished and if there were a useful contribution to be made.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have information relating to the Garrison Dam project. Again, it is a rather lengthy reply. However, I know that it will be of interest, particularly to those senators from Manitoba and western Canada, and I propose that the information be incorporated in the record of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

On May 7, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled invalid an injunction which had blocked further Garrison construction. Earlier, on January 29, the court had stayed the injunction pending this ruling on the Interior Department's appeal.

The court's decision formally permits further construction and confirms the release of approximately $9 million previously appropriated for Garrison.

Following the appeal court's January decision to stay the injunction which had blocked Garrison construction, U.S. Department of the Interior opened bids at the end of March for construction of the Oakes pumping plant. This plant would be built to original Garrison specifications, thus providing a capacity, if required, to irrigate land on both sides of the drainage basin divide.

At the last bilateral meeting on Garrison, February 1982, U.S. officials said that currently available funds would be used for construction of the Oakes pumping plant starting this year. Their stated intention is to use this plant to irrigate the West Oakes test area in the James River basin, thus providing not affect water flowing into Canada. The East Oakes area, in the Hudson Bay basin, is not included in the recently modified Garrison plan and therefore would not be developed under it.

At that meeting U.S. officials confirmed once again their government's commitment that it will honour its obligation under the Boundary Waters Treaty not to pollute Canadian waters.

Canadian officials, both federal and provincial, are following this issue closely. On April 20, the department, in cooperation with the Manitoba government, sent a letter to the U.S. State Department. In that letter we expressed Canada's concern and our view that any full-capacity developments corresponding to the original Garrison plan should be deferred until our countries have reached agreement on project modifications to ensure that Canadian interests are fully protected.

The Federal and Manitoba governments have agreed in principle to send a delegation of federal and provincial legislators to Washington to express Canada's concerns on the Garrison issue. The timing of such a visit is obviously an important consideration and will be contingent on developments in the U.S. Congress, in particular the upcoming debate on additional financial appropriations for Garrison.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

He said: Honourable senators, it is a pleasure for me to move second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act. This is one of those relatively rare measures which enjoys a solid amount of support from all the political parties in the country. It is a short but significant bill.

As honourable senators are aware, the bill was recently passed by the other place where it had been introduced over twelve months ago. Its basic purpose is eminently sensible, to reduce the length of federal elections by some ten days, that is, to a statutory minimum of 50 days. This would apply not only to general elections but to by-elections as they arise.

Before discussing the main features of this bill in some detail, I should like to provide a small amount of background on this measure. The idea of a shorter election period certainly is not new. Indeed, I think all the political parties have been discussing this idea for many years. Many of those present will remember that a bill to this effect, Bill C-21, was introduced during the Conservative administration and was tabled in the other place on November 5, 1979. But the principle contained in that bill and the one before was endorsed by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the other place as long ago as 1976.

Many honourable senators have contributed to the dialogue over the years and the feeling has been building that perhaps we should reassess the election period. Is it too long? Is it too expensive? Are there other reforms that may be required?

Canada has changed dramatically since the day when the election period of 60 days was first established. At that time it was felt necessary to allow 60 days in order to permit all political party leaders to travel by train from one end of Canada to the other. Indeed, they conducted campaigns in circumstances substantially less auspicious than those prevailing today, thanks to modern travel conditions.

During 1975 and 1976 the House of Commons Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections studied a report by the Chief Electoral Officer entitled "An Examination of Possible Ways of Shortening the Election Period." Some honourable senators have read this report. The Chief Electoral Officer's report evaluated various means by which elections could be made shorter, including doing so by the introduction of some form of permanent voters' list or continuous electoral roll. They have this system in Great Britain. I think the election period there is something like 21 days because of this continuous electoral roll. However, in 1975 the Chief Electoral Officer concluded that the annual cost of such a permanent registration method in Canada would be about $30 million. We would have to put in place almost a permanent civil service or permanent group of workers to maintain that continuous revision of the roll.

After several meetings with the Chief Electoral Officer the committee came to the conclusion that the high cost would not allow the introduction of a permanent voters' list at that time. Nevertheless, the committee did take up another of the options contained in the Chief Electoral Officer's report, namely, that of shortening the election period by eliminating the printing and distribution to electors of copies of the preliminary list. One committee passed a motion to that effect clearly supporting a reduction in the length of the election period.

● (1500)

Honourable senators, it is thus plain to see that the ideas in this bill have been favoured for quite a long period of time. In fact, it was a measure introduced by the previous government. For that reason, I do not expect to speak for a long time on this bill, but I feel I must provide a small amount of information about its main purposes.

Two fairly major changes in our election procedures will be brought about by the passage of Bill C-58. First, it proposes to shorten the election period from about 60 days at the present to a minimum of 50 days. Of course, at the present time, the period varies. I think that during the last election it was about 65 days, and on other occasions it has been 62 or 58 days. We generally speak in terms of the federal election period being one of 60 days' duration. We are proposing a minimum of 50 days.

Many honourable senators will recall that there was a good deal of discussion after the last two general elections about the length of our campaigns. If I recall correctly, the election campaign that led to the return of the present government in 1980 lasted about 65 days.

Many interest groups and ordinary Canadians spoke out and said that they saw no reason for such long campaigns and all the disruption that an election causes, including, I suppose, interference with television schedules and everything else. They say that public business is disrupted, and interest in the electoral process, in general, surely suffers when campaigns drag out for too long a time. There is a theory that if a politician has not made his or her case within 50 days, he or she will never make it. The government has listened to these views and, through this bill, a significant shortening of the election period will be achieved.

The second major change, which will be brought about by the passage of Bill C-58, is to discontinue the practice of sending copies of the printed preliminary list to urban electors. At first glance, that may cause some concern. Many people look forward to receiving the list of names in their particular polls.

However, in the past, the typesetting and printing of these lists have been time-consuming processes that have contributed to the length of election campaigns. Those of us who have worked in campaigns will know that to be true.

Furthermore, many people have resented the rather wide circulation of the printed lists, and especially their being posted in public places. I am sure we have all gone through the list which has been tacked on the local telephone pole. It has been argued, and quite rightly so, that this procedure represents an invasion of privacy. People were going to the list and checking their neighbour's occupation or checking to see who lives where, and so on.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Who owns what.

Senator Perrault: Yes. It has been an occupation of people in the various parties for a good length of time.

Police associations and women's groups have spoken out about the threat to individual security that such wide circulation of the list represents. However, this is not an attempt to keep the list a deep, dark secret. That list would be made available to the candidates and to the party organizations, but it would not be posted publicly on telephone poles, and the poll lists would not be mailed to each elector.

As a result of the passage of Bill C-58, in future an individually-addressed card will be sent to each person who has been enumerated. Besides confirming to the elector that his or her name is on the list, this card will provide information on the revision of the lists, the location of the poll, and the possibilities of voting before election day. It should be pointed out that this card will be sent to all electors, whether they reside in urban or rural polling divisions.

You may well ask the question: What if they do not receive a card? Through a program of public information, it will be conveyed to the electorate that, if an individual has not received his card by a certain date, then he must telephone a certain number or go to a certain office to make certain he is on the list.

Honourable senators, I should like to mention a couple of other small changes to our election practice which will be brought about by the passage of Bill C-58. From now on, the nomination day in all electoral districts will be the twenty-eighth day before polling day. Many honourable senators will know that, at present, nomination day is the twenty-first day before polling day in all districts except those listed in Schedule III to the Canada Elections Act, where it is the twenty-eighth day.

Under the election expenses rules passed in 1974, advertising can begin only on the twenty-ninth day before polling day. In a sense, the real election period begins at that point. It is in the interest of all parties to have their candidates nominated by that day and, perhaps, even now this is almost universally the case.

As a result of this change in the date for nomination in most districts, we will be able to extend the period for voting at the office of the returning officer. This very useful innovation came about as a result of the last major amendment to the Canada Elections Act passed in 1977.

As the act now reads, two weeks are allowed for voting at the office of the returning officer. With the passage of this bill, that period will be extended by a week to give three weeks in all. This is an accommodation for those who may be absent on election day, or who may be going abroad. Perhaps most of us feel that this is a most useful step and one that will allow more people, who may be away for both the election day and the advance polls, to cast their votes.

Honourable senators, at the outset of my remarks, I referred to the fact that it took more than a year for this bill to pass through all stages in the other place. Despite the fact that it is a short bill, it seemed to attract a great deal of attention from opposition members in the other place. That is by no means a matter which should be the subject of criticism. All members of Parliament want to make certain that everyone is given a fair opportunity to exercise his or her franchise.

In spite of the fact that Bill C-58 was virtually identical to the earlier Conservative bill, Bill C-21, second reading in the other place consumed well over eight hours. Some opposition members undertook a re-assessment of the bill and put forward suggestions and proposals which led to certain amendments. Their earnest concerns were expressed in the standing committee.

The government has considered some of those objections and, as a result of discussions among the parties, a happy compromise has been reached on a couple of significant amendments to the original text of Bill C-58.

Honourable senators, before I conclude my remarks, I should like to inform honourable senators what those amendments were. The first major amendment made in the standing committee was to change the minimum length of the election period from 47 days to the 50 days in the bill now before us. The government feels that, by this measure, it has accommodated some of the fears that 47 days might have been too short a period of time in some very large and remote electoral districts. Some of the northern ridings and, indeed, some of the ridings in the provinces, are very large and so can involve what may be extremely difficult travel. Therefore, there has been a three-day extension from 47 days to 50 days.

The second significant amendment to Bill C-58 as originally drafted followed upon the one I have just described. In the original text of the bill, enumeration was to begin on the thirty-fifth day before polling day and end on the thirty-second day before polling day. In other words, enumeration was to be completed in a four-day period. The criticism was advanced in the other place that this was too short a period of time. Therefore, by adding three days to the minimum election period, the time for enumeration could be lengthened correspondingly. The bill has thus been modified to provide that enumeration will begin on the thirty-eighth day before polling day, a Friday, and end on Thursday, the thirty-second day before polling day.

● (1510)

The government believes this is a significant improvement over the original bill. In fact, honourable senators, it is better than what now exists in the Canada Elections Act because, at present, enumeration has to be carried out within a six-day period.

Honourable senators, I should like to conclude by saying that I believe that this bill deserves the support of all of us. Certainly, it enjoyed substantial support in the other place. It will bring about a significant shortening of the election period, something that Canadians possibly want, and is certainly possible in our age of mass communications and rapid travel.

Furthermore, the reduction in the length of election campaigns will not mean that various parts of the election process will be carried out less thoroughly. In fact, the slightly longer enumeration period, and the new practice of sending a card to each elector, should help ensure that as many Canadians as possible are on the voters' list before election day.

This is a reasonable and sensible bill, a small reform that is long overdue, and I hope that we can pass this measure without too much delay.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF VOLUME III OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 31 debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume III—Canada's Trade Relations with the United States", tabled in the Senate on March 24, 1982.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I explained last week, I moved the adjournment of this order in my name only with a view to giving other honourable senators the opportunity to intervene or make a speech on the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I consulted the chairman of the committee and as it would appear that no other honourable senator wishes to speak to it, I think we can consider the report as having been debated.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, this report is deemed to have been debated.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 17, debate on the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces," tabled in the Senate on February 10, 1982.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I support fully the first report of the Subcommittee on National Defence of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have only one regret, and that is that that committee was not established 10 years ago. It should have been established when a lonely but very vigorous voice was heard in this chamber requesting the formation of a similar committee. I speak, of course, of the late Senator A. H. McDonald.

The late Senator A. H. McDonald is deservedly singled out in the foreword to the report, because he strove as strenuously and as passionately as he could to urge Canada to share adequately and responsibly, through the western alliance, in the protection of all those countries within the alliance and their institutions of justice and freedom, and through such adequate sharing, to help maintain world peace and stability.

If honourable senators look at page 17 of the committee's report they will see that in 1980 Canada's defence spending as a percentage of gross national product in 1980 is next to that of the lowest nation, which is Luxembourg.

I congratulate Senator Lafond, the chairman of the committee, because it was through his determination that this committee was established.

As the report states:

Canada's present defence commitments are well-enough known in their broad terms. They were carefully listed and described in the last White Paper on national defence, Defence in the 70's, published in 1971, and consist of the protection of Canada, joining in the defence of North America, participation in NATO and contributing to UN and similar peacekeeping missions.

The responsibility of carrying out these commitments, of which there are 55, rests with the Canadian Forces. Whether these specific tasks are being carried out effectively, and whether the Canadian Forces have the means to carry them out, is the subject being studied by the subcommittee.

I certainly support the first recommendation of the report, which states:

—that a new White Paper on National Defence be undertaken immediately.

As that recommendation, which is found on page 7 of the report, points out, this new white paper should:

—assess manpower and other military requirements against our commitments to collective defence and include a careful examination of the principal military threats to Canada, such as the danger that this country could be exposed to the direct effects on the Canadian population and territory of thermonuclear exchanges between the United States and the Soviet Union.

That is why I believe so strongly in this committee. I believe so strongly in this, that I am almost obsessed with it.

I emphasize that the role of the armed forces is to act as a deterrent and to maintain peace in our fragile and horrendous world situation today.

To quote from the report, "defence is to provide our security", and is consequently linked with our efforts to secure balanced and veritable disarmament.

My consuming interest in this subject—and I am sure my interest is shared by all of my colleagues in this chamber—arises from my conviction that it is our duty to preserve peace and from my abhorrence of war. I say that with some feeling, which I know is also shared by my colleagues, particularly when we think of our grandchildren and their future. In my own case, I think of a six-year-old.

Recently, I visited Maritime Command, in Halifax, and SACLANT, in Virginia, and on returning home I was greeted—and this is something I am sure all of you have experienced—with a great, warm hug and the question: "Why were you away?" I replied that I had been away "to meet the men and women who make it possible for you and me to live in peace."

● (1520)

Honourable senators, there is an obscene insanity in that the rich nations on this small, fragile planet spend $500 billion a year in order to produce more devastating and more excruciating hardware capable of exterminating not only other nations but, in fact, all life on our planet.

A few weeks ago I read a forceful and chilling new book by Johnathan Schell, called Fate of the Earth, which other honourable senators may have read. The author argues that multiple detonations of nuclear weapons would literally blow the roof off the whole of the earth, and it would blast the ozone layer, our protective filter against the ultra-violet rays of the sun.

Honourable senators, there is a horrifying competition amounting to mutual extortion between the two superpowers, who continue to develop and who have stockpiled over 50,000 nuclear devices. One of those nuclear devices has a destructive capacity well over 1 million times that of the horrendous bomb which devastated Hiroshima. Let me add that there are five countries in the world today that have a nuclear capacity and who belong to the nuclear club. In a series of articles by Jack Cahill, which appeared in the Toronto Star—a brilliant series, in my opinion, on the threat posed by nuclear arms—he pointed out that there are now 44 countries which have the capacity to detonate a nuclear device. One of those devices is reported, as I have said, to be over 1 million times more powerful than the bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

Honourable senators, most of us are able to think back to August 6, 1944, when at Hiroshima, at 8.15 in the morning, while toddlers were on their way to school and the birds were singing, there was a blinding flash and 100,000 men, women and children were vaporized, and another 100,000 casualties who were not but perhaps wished they had been. Those 100,000 human beings suffered the slow hell and convulsive agony of a lingering death from ruptured organs and radiation sickness.

Perhaps Dr. Somers, President of Physicians of Social Reform, may be right in proposing that the only defence against a nuclear holocaust is to provide people with morphine and cyanide!

Personally, I welcome the growing groundswell of public concern for arms control and eventual disarmament; but, unfortunately, such worldwide public indignation and dread of the mounting arms race will have more effect in democratic countries than it will in authoritarian countries.

E. J. Pratt, a quiet, gentle, gifted poet, a former professor of mine, who no doubt is remembered by those representatives from the maritimes, and indeed by many people throughout Canada, with great nostalgia wrote:

There was a time we knew our foes
 Could recognize their features well
 Name them before we battered blows
 So in our challenges could tell
 What the damned quarrel was about
 As with our fists we slugged it out.
 When distance intervened, the call
 Of trumpets sped the spear and arrow
 From stone and sling to musket ball
 The path was blasted to the marrow.

The horror that exists today, of a nuclear holocaust, was recognized even by those scientists who developed that first atom bomb, which was puny in comparison with the arsenal of weaponry that exists in the world today.

Robert Oppenheimer, quoting a Hindu god, said, after he had developed the atom bomb:

I am become death, the destroyer of worlds.

Dr. Fetterly, a Canadian who had worked on separating the boron needed to stabilize the bomb, said it haunted him for the rest of his life. He said:

We've got the knowledge, but we haven't got the wisdom.

I am a member of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on National Defence because I believe that the committee provides the means for helping Canada to play its role in maintaining peace. As we sit quietly in this chamber, in the security of our country, on a pleasant spring day, with tourists sightseeing outside, let me say that the military strategists know that in the event of a world conflict there are nuclear ICBMs targeted on Hamilton, Toronto, and Welland. Today there are Soviet land-based silo-launched missiles targeted on areas in the United States and Canada. We know that there are Soviet submarines, equipped with nuclear weapons, operating off the coast of Newfoundland. One of their missiles contains more explosive power than the whole of the explosive power used during World War II; and, as I say, those submarines are now operating off our coast. We also know that in the skies planes equipped with multiple missiles are circling steadily.

I thank God that the most powerful ally in the free world—namely, the United States—has shouldered the heavy and awesome task of developing an equally devastating arsenal of nuclear weaponry to deter irresponsible aggression. It is hard to imagine that any statesmen of any world power would declare war with nuclear weaponry.

But, honourable senators, Stalin has been credited with killing 60 million of his own people. I am not certain whether he would have balked at the retaliatory might of the United States. We are rightly concerned at the seesawing, precarious policy of balanced mutual nuclear deterrents. In this connection, Winston Churchill said that safety would be the sturdy child of terror and survival the twin brother of annihilation.

● (1530)

As the Prime Minister stated to the United Nations in 1978:

The broad spectrum of proposals to achieve greater world stability and the reduction of tensions ranges all the way from what is sometimes called the "declaratory approach" to the notion of general and complete disarmament. The classic example of the declaratory approach was the Kellogg-Briand pact of 1928, which renounced war and pledged peaceful means only to settle disputes amongst all the major powers.

Historians have judged that it only clouded the vision of the statesmen of the 1930s. I was a very young person in the 1930s, and remember Mussolini moving into Abyssinia. I also remember the start of the second world war. Declarations can be shadows rather than substance, unless some definite concrete action is taken with respect to them.

The other point of view that the Prime Minister expressed was that general and complete disarmament is a worthy vision, but that living in the real world as we do, we recognize that no one side will take such a perilous step unilaterally. Such disarmament will only be achieved by painstaking and serious negotiation.

Honourable senators, we are discussing, not the desirability of nuclear war but, rather, the best means of preventing it. I believe that one of the best ways in which Canada can help prevent nuclear war is by living up to its obligations, not only with regard to its contribution to the conventional forces of NATO but also with regard to the protection of its own shores.

As honourable senators know, there is a controversy with regard to the development on European soil of 572 medium range Cruise missiles. I would like to point out that this proposal originated with the Europeans, and was endorsed by NATO in 1979. My understanding with regard to their need for these missiles is that the NATO allies, including Canada, had not lived up to their commitment to defence by means of conventional weapons.

Many factors contributed to this conventional arms imbalance in NATO, not the least being a relaxation of vigilance through much of the seventies because of the sincere hopes for genuine détente resulting from the Helsinki Accords.

During the period of détente of the 1970s the Soviet navy grew from a coastal defence force into a blue-water navy, with broader missions and the capability of operating on a world-wide basis.

Perhaps I could quote from a statement of the NATO Defence Planning Committee made in May 1981:

This unrelenting build-up of Soviet military strength across the complete spectrum of capabilities encompasses the strategic, theatre, nuclear and conventional fields, all in contrast to Soviet statements advocating peace and disarmament.

Perhaps I could now revert to the report of our own National Defence Subcommittee. First, however, let me emphasize that the role of Canada's armed services is not an aggressive one. The role of Maritime Command, for example, is anti-submarine. It protects convoys and protects our shores. In no way are we seeking to get into an aggressive stance.

At page 6 of the report of the Subcommittee on National Defence, entitled "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces," we find the following:

This question of combat-readiness is crucial . . . Otherwise they have no raison d'être and are useful neither as a defence nor a deterrent.

A policy of bluff is not an alternative. It only amounts to self-delusion. In today's world, information about military forces is widely available—

To support the validity of that statement I would like to quote from a speech given by the Ambassador of the United States of Canada to the Navy League of Canada on April 17, 1982. The same remarks, I suggest, could have been made by any of our NATO allies.

The ambassador said:

NATO agreed to increase expenditures by 3 per cent in real terms each year. Now Canada has been making that commitment in the past several years, but the 3 per cent is not on a 3 per cent basis. Canada's actual expenditures for national defence in the past five years have averaged 1.8 per cent of its gross national product.

Let me interject that that is why we are on place above Luxembourg.

This compares with the United States at 5.6 per cent, now going to 7½ per cent, and Great Britain at 5.2 per cent. So you can see, in all frankness, Canada has been lagging in her efforts towards the NATO defence.

He then referred to the patrol frigate program, which everyone is waiting with enthusiasm to see completed with the purpose of updating and upgrading our naval forces.

As the ambassador said, we all know of the frigate patrol program, and that six of them might be built by 1988. But looking back to 10 years ago, there were then four new Tribal class destroyers and 16 steam-driven destroyers, which were then in mid-life. Today the 16 steam-driven destroyers should be very close to the end of their careers, which leaves just four first-rate destroyer types in the Canadian navy. With the six new patrol frigates added to the good Tribals, and projecting that over another 10 years, with no further shipbuilding we will have 10 destroyers 10 years hence. Ten years ago there were 20. This would mean that the effective Canadian fleet, without an on-going shipbuilding program, would be halved over a period of 20 years.

The ambassador also referred to the purchase of 137 CF-18 aircraft being certainly a forward step. One of the problems that is surfacing with regard to this, however, is that there has only been authorization for the purchase of two missiles for each of these 137 aircraft. They carry four missiles. Ten years ago—and many of our allies point this out to us—there were 10,000 Canadians on the ground in West Germany. Now there are 5,000.

● (1540)

Bluntly put, as a former seaman and officer in the Canadian navy—and also as a Canadian—I feel that we are doing a disservice, not only to our country but also to those fine men and women who have the arduous task of protecting Canadian citizens and protecting our free institutions. Let us think of the enormous commitment made by the members of the armed forces. I have quoted figures indicating what our navy consists of. I am sure that the commitment on the part of our forces extends to self-sacrifice, particularly when we consider the enormity of the responsibilities they must assume. The Atlantic seaboard extends some 9,843 miles; the Pacific coastline is some 4,363 miles in length. If the coastline of Hudson Bay, Hudson Straits and the Arctic Archipelago is included, the total comes to 151,000 miles. It is the longest coastline of any nation in the world.

Let us consider what we are up against at this time, should we be threatened. If I may, I will refer to a statement made by Admiral Gorshkov, who has been commander-in-chief of the Soviet navy for the past 26 years:

The flag of the Soviet Navy now flies over the oceans of the world.

Honourable senators, at one time we could state that our navy was the third largest in the world. We should ask ourselves this: Is the Soviet Union dependent—as we and almost all of our allies are in time of peace and of war—upon the sea lanes of communication for industrial, economic and military survival? No, the Soviet Union is a continental power. It derives the fuel to fire its industrial and military strength from within, unlike other nations of the world which are connected by overseas routes.

I would like to quote from the testimony of Dr. John Anderson, who appeared before the Subcommittee on National Defence. He is the Assistant Deputy Minister of National Defence. While referring to the free use of the seas for the western democracies, primarily in peacetime, he suggested to us that we think in global terms of the relatively few nations of the world which have a parliamentary democracy. Honourable senators, for the most part they are linked by sea for commerce and industrial purposes. Western Europe is, geopolitically, a small peninsula on the west side of Eurasia. Japan, Australia, New Zealand and the United States are surrounded by and are dependent on the ocean. None of the sea-trading democracies is self-sufficient; all must have free access over the seas for prosperity in peacetime and for survival in time of war.

Dr. Anderson pointed out that Canada's international sea-borne trade—Canada's stake at sea—has tripled over the past 20 years. In 1979 the value of this trade had risen to $18 billion.

Canada, along with all western allies, is critically dependent upon this sea-borne trade. Of course, I can cite the need for oil as being a primary one. There are, however, other imports that our industries are dependent upon. Non-indigenous minerals, among which are chromium and manganese, are basic needs of our industries. Without Australian alumina, for example, Canada could lose 60 per cent of its peacetime aluminum requirements. The situation is similar for many western allies. Although I could cite a few more statistics, I will refrain from doing so. I am sure that honourable senators will recognize my point: It is of enormous importance to Canada that sea communication should not be interrupted.

At this point I will raise the possibility of war. Obviously, in that event, large additional supplies and forces would have to be deployed from North America to Europe, both to our own armed forces over there and to our NATO allies. The bulk of war equipment needed for reinforcement in Europe would have to be carried by approximately 700 ships. Approximately 1.4 million men would have to be air-lifted; 1 million tonnes of equipment and 4.5 million tonnes of ammunition would have to be moved across the Atlantic.

Honourable senators, I have tried to emphasize that one of the principal means by which we can avoid the horror of a nuclear holocaust is through the support of our armed forces in their contribution, along with that of our allies, to act as deterrents. I suggest to you that, when you consider the magnitude of such a problem, the responsibilities we are placing upon our armed forces are grave indeed. When we go down to meet with SACLANT in Virginia and refer to ourselves as a subcommittee, it seems to me that it can be taken from that reference that the Senate does not give sufficient importance to this matter of the defence of our country and efforts towards the maintenance of peace. I, for one, strongly recommend that we consider some way to show that we in the Senate agree with the deterrence of aggression and the maintenance of peace. One means of doing this is by increasing the stature of our subcommittee to that of a full committee. Although Senator Lafond has taken on an onerous role in his function as chairman of the committee, I do not think that he or Senator van Roggen would object to this suggestion.

Honourable senators, I could go on and on about the state of the Canadian navy. Our subcommittee will proceed to study the equipment needs of the navy. For my own part, as I focus my attention on the navy, I feel that we should be extraordinarily proud of the dedication and the high level of morale of our armed services. They are carrying out their duties under very tough, rigorous circumstances.

Two weeks ago we went on board a submarine. I might mention in passing that the Prime Minister also visited the same submarine last week. I do not know how many of you have been on a submarine, but I can say that the crew is crammed into it as if they were sardines. If they are out for a three-week period, the policy in connection with water conservation is such that they must limit themselves in the use of water for showers and other purposes. In other words, they are denied amenities which we take for granted. The space allocated to them is more confined than that available to any person in any other vocation, whether in the public or the private sector.

● (1550)

About 20 years ago I was invited by Eric Morse to go on a canoe trip up north. I couldn't go because I was about to get married, but I would have liked to go.

An Hon. Senator: First things first!

Senator Thompson: Yes, first things first; and I have never regretted it. I say that publicly as well as privately.

There are one or two points I want to make about that canoe trip. When he invited me, Eric Morse told me that it was necessary to have some proficiency in handling a canoe, which I had not. He said it was necessary to be a little selective in choosing people to go on such a trip. Of course, you recall that Eric Morse has written about canoe travels and about the history of the early voyageurs and so on. He said to me, "I am going to take you out on the Ottawa River and test you." He added, "You know, if you become frightened on white water you might take the notion to jump out of the canoe, thus upsetting the whole thing, which would be a terrible calamity for all of us."

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Eric Morse took his wife paddling on their honeymoon.

Senator Thompson: Perhaps that is what I should have done, and maybe if someone had promoted that idea at my marriage I would have followed the suggestion. However, I will not go into personal details. The fact is that I did not go on the canoe trip and I regretted it, because one of those on the trip was the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau. We know he is a master canoeist. I am sure if I had gone on the trip and had started to jump out of the canoe when we were in white water, Mr. Trudeau would have given me a judo punch, or something like that, to settle me down, and we would then have talked about it on shore.

I make this point about the canoe trip because the men who are at sea, and the men in the armed forces generally, find themselves in rather trying circumstances and very often in danger. The kind of discipline they will accept and the reasons for that discipline raise the question as to whether under our new Charter of Rights there would be an obligation for a lawyer to be present when a charge was being laid. That would be just a little difficult.

It has occurred to me that somewhere in the public service offices, where I am sure they sit with their green plants and their expensive rugs to show their prestige, someone voiced the suggestion: "The armed services needn't think they will have an exclusion with respect to the charter". Well, the British have recognized that for the armed services there should be some form of exclusion, and I hope that Canada will do the same, giving recognition to the tremendous job these people do.

When we visited the Canadian Forces bases in the maritimes recently, we had a chance to see just how resourceful they are in using their initiative to develop their teaching and training facilities. Not being up to date, because of lack of money, they have to be resourceful and use initiative.

Among the things we observed at sea, for example, was a group of very skilled seamen lowering a seven-ton sonar device into the swell of waters—a highly technical job far surpassing anything I had to do as a simple seaman on a minesweeper. These are highly professional and skilled people I am referring to. Think of the frustration they must endure when they receive from far-off Ottawa what they call an “establishment list” in which the department in Ottawa dictates to them the specific number for specific positions they will have on their base.

Of course, that is because the department is constrained by budget considerations, and we appreciate that limitation to a certain extent. But for the navy to operate efficiently and fairly it must have more men. As it is now, some sailors are being sent out to sea almost continuously. In many cases these are married men who, like anybody else, want to be ashore as much as possible, but they have to go to sea because there is a lack of sufficient numbers of personnel in particular capacities. So they are constantly at sea. We have been told by Admiral

Fulton, among others, “We hope that the recommendation in your report for 1,000 more men will come through to help us.”

Honourable senators, I will close my remarks with this observation. If it is true that at times we do not receive the recognition that we should for our committee work, nevertheless I have found on many occasions, in flying between Ottawa and Toronto, that if I sit next to a man in the armed services and tell him that I am a member of the Subcommittee on National Defence, it is almost embarrassing to see the enthusiasm and gratitude he expresses, because there is finally a group of us on the Hill who are looking at, and who appreciate, the extraordinarily dedicated and vital work the armed services are doing for us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in case some other senator should wish to intervene in this debate, or in case the chairman himself should wish to close it, I move the adjournment of the debate, and I will be happy to yield to any senator who wishes to intervene.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 18, at 8 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-THIRD MEETING, KEY LARGO, FLORIDA

MARCH 4-8, 1982

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

Delegations from the Canadian Parliament and the United States Congress met in Key Largo, Florida for the 23rd annual meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. Delegates were divided into three Committees for the discussions.

Committee I: Trade and Economic Questions

Committee II: Energy Questions

Committee III: Environment and Multilateral Questions

At the conclusion of Committee discussions the Group met in plenary session to review the highlights of each Committee's proceedings.

The list of delegates is as follows:

The United States DelegationThe Senate

Hon. Ted Stevens, Co-Chairman (Rep. Alaska)
 Hon. Edward Zorinsky, Vice Chairman (Dem. Nebraska)
 Hon. Mark Andrews (Rep. North Dakota)
 Hon. Joe Biden (Dem. Delaware)
 Hon. Slade Gorton (Rep. Washington)
 Hon. Mack Mattingly (Rep. Georgia)
 Hon. James McClure (Rep. Alaska)

The House of Representatives

Hon. Dante B. Fascell, Co-Chairman (Dem. Florida)
 Hon. Michael Barnes (Dem. Maryland)
 Hon. Edward Boland (Dem. Massachusetts)
 Hon. Dennis Eckart (Dem. Ohio)
 Hon. Bill Frenzel (Rep. Minnesota)
 Hon. Sam Gibbons (Dem. Florida)
 Hon. Lee Hamilton (Dem. Indiana)
 Hon. Frank Horton (Rep. New York)
 Hon. John LaFalce (Dem. New York)
 Hon. David Martin (Rep. New York)
 Hon. Donald Mitchell (Rep. New York)
 Hon. James Oberstar (Dem. Minnesota)
 Hon. James Scheuer (Dem. New York)
 Hon. Olympia Snowe (Rep. Maine)
 Hon. Larry Winn (Rep. Kansas)
 Hon. Clement Zablocki (Dem. Wisconsin)

The Canadian DelegationThe Senate

Hon. Henry D. Hicks, Co-Chairman (Lib. Nova Scotia)
 Hon. Martial Asselin, P.C. (P.C. Quebec)
 Hon. William Doody (P.C. Newfoundland)

Hon. Paul Lafond (Lib. Quebec)
 Hon. Renaude Lapointe, P.C. (Lib. Quebec)
 Hon. Charles McElman (Lib. New Brunswick)
 Hon. Duff Roblin, P.C. (P.C. Manitoba)
 Hon. George van Roggen (Lib. British Columbia)

The House of Commons:

Mr. Ian Watson, M.P., Co-Chairman (Lib. Quebec)
 Hon. Walter Baker, P.C., M.P. (P.C. Ontario)

COMMITTEE I—TRADE AND ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

AGENDA

1. International trade and investment questions:
 - a) Problems of interest rates and unemployment in Canada and the United States (in the context of the international economic situation).
 - b) International auto trade (including the impact of Japanese competition and Canada's duty remission program with Volkswagen)
 - c) Grain marketing
2. Bilateral trade and investment issues:
 - a) — the impact on trade and investment of Canada's NEP
 - FIRA
 - procurement
 - the tax treaty
 - cross border data flows and satellite communications
 - b) Specific border trade issues: fish, potatoes, trucking, lumber, pharmaceutical patents

- c) The U.S. 'reciprocity in trade' principle
3. The GATT ministerial meeting.

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSIONS

Problems of interest rates and unemployment in Canada and the United States in terms of the international economic situation

The discussion on this topic centred mainly on the U.S. Administration's budget, focussing on the magnitude of the deficit, U.S. monetary policy, the impact of interest rates on growth and employment, the attitudes of Congress and the likely outcome of the budget's progress through Congress.

The subject was introduced by a Democratic Congressman who noted the very considerable scepticism in Congress that the Reagan budget would have the desired effect, that is, that tax reductions and displacement of various federal entitlement programs would result in a reduced national deficit. Instead, he said, Congress' view was that the deficit would continue to grow and interest rates would continue to rise. These high rates meant that the key automotive and housing industrial sectors would continue to stagnate. The Federal Reserve faced a real dilemma as to whether or not to expand the money supply. The outlook was one of increasing pessimism, he concluded, with no predictions for economic growth in the near future.

The Canadian spokesman responded that Canada faced a similar economic outlook although it was experiencing its recession somewhat later and it was "very deep." Housing and other industrial sectors showed no strength. The official government forecast for economic growth of 2 percent was already out of date and private forecasts were for flat or negative growth. He commented that the Canadian government's budget with its increase in taxes contrasted vividly with the Reagan budget's tax reductions. Recently, Canada had had a problem with capital outflows ($15½ billion last year as opposed to an average annual outflow of $2½ billion during the 1970s) which put pressure on the Canadian dollar. Surges in the outflow also put pressure on interest rates. In addition, although Canada attempted to isolate itself to a certain extent, Canadian interest rates were very dependent on U.S. monetary policy.

A Republican Senator observed that the Administration's tax reduction program required a three-year commitment to make its full, positive impact felt on employment and inflation. In any case, U.S. inflation was down to 8 percent, although admittedly unemployment had risen, as had interest rates. He pointed out that 25 percent of the budget was allocated to defence, and 53 percent to entitlement payments. The budget deficit was currently projected at $93 billion but it could be $135 billion by 1983.

Commenting further on the deficit and the high burden of the carrying costs of this debt, this participant outlined a new concept which could result in a more stable monetary environment and lower interest rates. What was involved would be a change in the frequency of recourse to the money markets for borrowing. If there were a stretching in the maturity of the debt and a pulling together of market sources to finance the ongoing deficit, the present instability could be overcome.

A Democratic Senator strongly disagreed with his colleague's approach. As inflation went down, unemployment went up, he argued. If necessary, interest rates should be allowed to rise. The important thing was to reduce unemployment and, as workers returned, the deficit would decline dramatically. In any case, the only reason U.S. inflation was down at present, he countered, was because fuel and food costs were down. A Democrat from the House questioned the approach that deficit spending would lead to a sound economy. He said the cost of carrying it was too high, that it should be reduced and that he would not vote for a $100 billion deficit.

The comment was made by a Canadian delegate that the current U.S. economic program could be said to fit into the classical 'Keynesian' mould; increased expenditures to a 'captive' industry (the defence industry) and a cutting of taxes designed to stimulate demand, both of which were resulting in a huge deficit. Canada had gone the 'keynesian' route from 1974 to 1980, but had now decided the deficit had to be reduced. But the extreme volatility of interest rates was a major Canadian concern at present, he added.

Discussing how to reduce the deficit, a Congressman outlined a Democratic plan for which it was hoped to achieve a consensus; namely, the reduction in defence spending, a freeze on entitlement payments, a reduction in the proposed tax cuts and an ad hoc agreement with the Federal Reserve Board for a 'looser' monetary policy which would lower interest rates.

A Canadian Senator commented that the ability of the U.S. defence industry to spend its allotted funding efficiently in the Administration's time-frame was being seriously questioned by U.S. business leaders. He inquired what effect the Administration's proposal for a minimum corporate tax might have. The U.S. side replied that this idea was being looked at by Congressional Committees but it was not likely to involve anything major in new revenues—perhaps somewhere between $2 to $5 billion and not the $30 billion which was talked about.

In support of more stringent measures to turn the situation around, a U.S. Senator referred to a recent poll indicating the public was prepared for further 'belt-tightening.' Several American delegates said they were against the cost-of-living indexing of social security payments. It was suggested that indexing could be lower than the rate of inflation. A Republican Congressman observed that while it might be possible to limit indexing, it would not likely be possible to do away with it.

U.S. participants agreed that the progress of the budget through Congress was going to be drawn out and difficult. Several expressed the opinion that the estimated deficit of $100 billion was optimistic; that it could reach as high as $150 billion. A Republican Senator expected that Congress and the President would be unable to agree on how to reach a lower deficit and a vote on the increase in the debt ceiling would be impossible by April as had been hoped. A Democratic Senator interjected that the Democrats would rebel at any raising of the debt ceiling. The Republican Senator continued that the debt ceiling bill could have a major impact on U.S. policy. He predicted the government might have to close down by mid-April, forcing the President to make adjustments.

*The summary for Committee I follows the order of topics discussed. FIRA was discussed under several headings, but mainly under "reciprocity".

A Republican Congressman said that assuming the most 'rosy scenario' of agreement on defence spending cuts, increased taxes, etc., it would still be difficult to pare the budget deficit down substantially. Parenthetically, he noted that the U.S. deficit had not set any records—both France and Germany had exceeded it proportionally. In the end, he predicted, the most likely resolution of the issue in Congress would be an agreement by the President to defer his proposed tax reductions until 1983.

International auto trade

The auto trade discussion focussed on the lack of competitiveness of North American automotive producers relative to the Japanese, the problem of off-shore sourcing and the question of domestic content, Canada's duty remission scheme with Volkswagen, labour costs in the North American and Japanese industry, and the long-range prospects for the North American industry.

Introducing the subject, U.S. legislators described the remarkable efficiency and productivity achieved by Japanese producers. Assembly lines were manned by robots needing no overtime or vacation pay; the cheerful and committed attitude of the Japanese workers contrasted vividly with the attitude of the American auto worker; capital needs in Japan appeared to be easily satisfied; deliveries of components were prompt, necessitating surprisingly small, low-cost inventories; engineering and management skills were impressive and a co-operative and harmonious relationship existed between government and industry. As a result, competing Japanese products such as light trucks could come into the U.S. market with a 25 per cent price advantage. Labour costs were also a factor in the pricing of North American cars out of the market. In the U.S., the average auto or steel worker's wage package was $22 an hour, whereas in Japan it amounted to $11 to $12 an hour.

A Canadian delegate spoke of a 26 per cent rise in imports into the combined markets in 1981 and the resulting unemployment—which has reached 275,000 in the two countries. He underlined the extreme importance of the automotive industry to the Canadian economy as a whole and especially to Ontario where 1 in every 6 jobs depended on it. In Canada, imported cars, mainly Japanese, now represented 28 per cent of the domestic market. Honda, Toyota and Mazda were the leading competitors, increasing their sales by 35 per cent, 45 per cent and 87 per cent respectively during 1981. The Canadian government was currently discussing restraints with the Japanese, he said.

Raising the question of increased domestic content in North American cars, U.S. participants said it was being urged in the United States, in response to a growing sourcing of parts in Mexico and other off-shore countries. A Canadian spokesman commented that similar pressure for content legislation was coming from the UAW and the parts manufacturers in Canada. He mentioned the Ottinger bill, recently introduced in the U.S. Congress, proposing a gradual increase in the domestic content ratio for motor vehicles up to a level of 90 per cent domestic content for each year after 1984. Several U.S. delegates voiced their strong disapproval of the prospect of such legislation. One Congressman called it "a real problem", "a pernicious trap" and described the Australian situation where domestic content rules had resulted in high costs for Japanese and U.S. cars and 'Australian' cars which were no good.

Several Canadian spokesmen disagreed with this strong rejection of content rules. Canada was a major world car market; why should not some percentage of the manufacturing be done here, it was asked. The political pressures were already great and would become enormous if it seemed that not only parts production but even assembly plants would be moving out of North America. Another Canadian predicted that both countries would, in the end, have to implement domestic content rules.

This in turn led to strong expressions of disagreement by a number of delegates, from both sides who favoured a more open trading policy. These 'free traders' stressed that the economy could be crippled by content rules, that employment in this industry was bound to shrink in any case due to robotics, that it would be no solution to prop up standard or low technology industries. Instead, emphasis should be placed on the industries of the future—the high technology industries—as the Japanese were doing. They themselves were moving ahead by quantum leaps and would soon be shifting their auto production to lower cost countries while concentrating Japan's efforts in strong, new 'high tech' areas. Only Europe and North America were bent on preserving "this old industry." A Congressman added that there was a real prospect that in 10 years there would no longer be an auto industry in North America.

There was a brief exchange on the auto pact itself which now accounted for over $20 billion cross-border trade. Several Canadian members referred to the deficit which Canada ran on the parts trade which gave rise to strong political pressures in some areas. But a Canadian Senator commented that the pact had not been designed to ensure a perfect balance in trade and had been meant to rationalize production, achieve increased efficiencies and increased employment. In fact, Canada's share of employment had risen.

U.S. participants raised the question of Canada's duty remission arrangement with Volkswagen. Was not this scheme which reduces the market for North American vehicles a violation of the auto pact, it was asked? Canadian delegates responded by explaining the problem for Canada—if VW established production in the United States, it was unlikely to establish in Canada. The remission scheme (which provides for a 85 per cent ratio of Canadian Value Added to sales in Canada) was to ensure Canada had some share of the production. Canada's position was that since VW is not assembling cars in Canada, the arrangement falls outside the pact. Moreover, the arrangement was of benefit to the United States since Volkswagens produced in the United States had duty-free access into Canada and the new VW plant in Michigan was only viable if it has free access to the Canadian market. The question was posed as to whether such an arrangement would arise with Japan and a Congressman commented that the Canadian remission plan was a worry because it could be seen as a precedent and could spread. A Canadian member said if Japanese established production in the United States there would be enormous pressure in Canada to do something and the auto pact would be distorted.

In discussing how the industry could improve its competitiveness, a Congressman said the major way was to cut back wages. While the recent Ford contract looked like a breakthrough, there was no cutback on wages. A Canadian spokesman pointed out that the Canadian UAW whose contract comes up for negotiation in September, have rejected even the concessions made by their American counterparts. They say their labour costs are $5 lower because of the exchange rate and they have lower fringe benefits. However, a second Canadian member considered that this stance could be rhetorical and that eventually Canada would see a similar trend. American delegates predicted that the Ford example of restraint would extend into other areas because of the market situation; job security was now the most important issue. A Congressman noted that companies stock up "to the hilt" before entering negotiations.

A theme emphasized by several speakers during the discussions—the importance of co-operation between Canada and the United States in this policy area—was amplified by the concluding speaker, a Congressman, who suggested that the lesson to take away was when the U.S. government made a deal on supply of parts, Canada should be brought in to ensure it received an appropriate share.

Transborder data flows and satellite communications

Discussions of this topic revealed that for the U.S. side, transborder data flows were of prime importance, whereas for Canada the more important issue was that of satellite communications.

Introducing the subject, a Congressman said that the United States was concerned by the "trade-inhibiting actions" being taken by Canada and the European Community in respect to transborder data flows. The United States was devoted to the principle of "free flow" of data and was in fact constitutionally powerless to restrict it except in cases involving national security. Moreover, the United States had deregulated satellite communications, permitting an "open skies" competition between licensed carriers.

Regrettably, Canada was taking protectionist action in this area, another Congressman added. In addition to its earlier restrictions on broadcasting—still a sore point in the United States—there were now restrictions on the storage and processing of data under the Bank Act and FIRA was restricting applications for U.S. investment by this industry. Moreover, Canada had voted against the U.S. position at a recent international meeting in Brazil. The U.S. industry was becoming upset and it had the muscle to press Congress to retaliate in related fields. In any case, at present there was a flurry of proposed legislation in Congress couched in terms of reciprocity for determining access to the U.S. market. The Danforth reciprocity bill, for example, would give much more power to the President to react against foreign barriers to trade and investment. Another bill even gave Congress the right to file a complaint. Undoubtedly, this could become a very explosive bilateral issue, this Congressman concluded.

In response, the Canadian spokesman noted that the Canadian government had not yet formulated its policy on transborder data flows and satellite communications, and currently had two task forces studying the issues. Politically in Canada, the transborder data flow was not yet a significant issue. The provisions of the Bank Act, which were an exceptional case, had been enacted to ensure the bank inspectors could carry out their duties of inspecting data, in view of the fact that the legislation had at the same time provided for the entrance into Canadian banking of foreign banks. In pointing to the implications for national sovereignty, this participant said that 80 per cent of cross-border data flows are now in the hands of multinationals. If there were no access to this 80 per cent, it could render a sovereign nation powerless. Moreover, there would be serious implications in respect to loss of employment and economic activity.

Satellite communications, this delegate continued, was a much 'hotter' issue in Canada than transborder data flows. There were two aspects to this question—T.V. broadcasting and telecommunications. The 1972 bilateral agreement, restricting extensions across the border, has been violated by both sides. U.S. cable T.V. companies were taking CBC programs from satellite and in Canada there was widespread use of illegal 'dishes' receiving U.S. satellite T.V. signals. This was in addition to the 40 to 50 percent of programming on Canadian T.V. which was already of U.S. origin. This member said that in his own constituency there were more illegal 'dishes' than anywhere else in Canada. They were becoming quite inexpensive and they were rendering the Canadian regulatory system totally outmoded. Moreover, there were internal differences within Canada as to the validity of restrictions on their use. It was this broadcasting aspect of satellites which could lead to bilateral clashes, he predicted. U.S. satellites could bring free, to Canadians, programs which had already been purchased on an exclusive rights basis by Canadian broadcasters for their own programming.

In respect to cross-border telecommunications, the natural competitive advantage lies with the United States, explained this participant. The 'footprint' area, which could be covered by U.S. satellites, encompasses 95 percent of the Canadian market whereas the Canadian 'footprint' could cover only 60 to 70 percent of the U.S. market. This was because Canada's regulated Telesat system was required by regulation to cover the remote and sparsely populated northland as well as the populated areas along the border. However, Telesat would be able to sell channels to the United States to service its Alaskan market, he added. But it was clear that the unregulated expansion of U.S. satellite systems into Canada would provide such serious competition as to undermine the viability of the Canadian carrier. This delegate suggested that the solution might be to agree on an equitable access to each others' markets.

A U.S. participant commented that "trade in services" would be on the agenda of the GATT Ministerial meeting later this year. He acknowledged that the United States currently was in an advantageous position in this field, but said that clearly international ground rules were necessary. He urged that governments be encouraged to sit down and discuss the problems which this fast-moving technology was creating. The Canadian spokesman added that although the OECD had developed some rules for international co-operation in data flows, Canada had not signed because it had not been satisfied it knew all the problems involved.

Reciprocity in trade

The reciprocity theme, touched on during the earlier exchange on transborder data flows, was discussed more fully. It quickly became evident that FIRA and certain aspects of the NEP were prime targets of the proposed reciprocity legislation as far as Canada was concerned. As a result, the agenda topic on FIRA was dealt with mainly under this item, with the American side spelling out their complaints in considerable detail. FIRA was also raised during discussions on several other topics and, with the reciprocity issue, was aired during the plenary session.

A U.S. Senator introduced this subject, referring to the many bills presently in Congress and warning of the danger that 'the reciprocity theory' could gain wide credence in the United States. A particular sore point with Canada he said was the NEP and the megaproject purchasing board which was discouraging purchases from foreign firms by "taking them off the eligible list."

In addition to the Danforth bill and the hearings before Chairman Gibbons' Trade Subcommittee, a Congressman pointed to the reciprocity bill of Senator Heinz, which he described as protectionist, designed not to open up markets abroad but to close the U.S. market. It had two aspects: trade and investment. With respect to trade, the main objective was clearly Japan he said, but with respect to investment, Canada's FIRA was a central target. The perception in the United States was that if the U.S. market was going to be a relatively open market, its trading partners should have more or less the same.

A Canadian Senator urged that the United States not try to catch Canada in a net which it was throwing at Japan. As far as FIRA was concerned, Canada was only taking tentative steps which would seem more understandable to Americans if 50 percent of their manufacturing were foreign-owned. Moreover, FIRA's approvals ran at over 90 per cent of applications. He considered it unwise for problems to be attacked on a tit-for-tat, sector-by-sector basis but rather that they should be approached on a broad basis as at the GATT. Mr. Brock, the U.S. Trade Representative, himself recently rejected sectoral reciprocity in favour of a broader approach, he noted. The United States should look at the trade and investment figures involved with Canada, compare them to those with Japan and the relative benefit it derived from Canada as a trade and investment partner. It should also reflect on the flurry of political activity stirred up in Congress when Canadians had tried to buy a single company in the United States such as Conoco, Texas Gulf or Hobart.

Another Canadian delegate said Canadians found it difficult to understand the U.S. concern with FIRA. In recent trucking applications, for example, out of 25 applications, 19 were allowed. A Congressman responded that the FIRA approvals in trucking were all for specialized trucking and not for general trucking where there had been numerous rejections. Further, he said, a troubling aspect of FIRA was that its decisions were discretionary; there were no open rules; it was a sort of "Star Chamber" decision with no appeal. Several Canadian members agreed that the process of the decision-making needed to be opened up so that companies would not be inhibited, so they would know the rules and know why they were rejected. It was noted that the Progressive Conservative government had been moving to open it up by publishing an explanation of what was meant by "significant benefit".

This led to a considerable discussion of the procedure used by FIRA in processing applications with one Congressman describing it as "awful", even though he acknowledged Canada's right to be concerned by the level of foreign investment. He himself had received many calls from businessmen complaining of "un-Canadian treatment", and saying their calls and mail to FIRA were not answered. A Canadian participant was concerned that if FIRA were opened up and the decisions made public, confidential trade secrets could be disclosed to the companies' disadvantage. In any case, he said FIRA only makes recommendations to Cabinet. But a Canadian Senator suggested that the rules and tests to be applied could be stated publicly without any need to publish the applicants' confidential information. Of course, if there were an appeal, this aspect could present a problem. But clearly some modification was necessary. Another Congressman reiterated that FIRA needed to be more transparent.

An American delegate explained that the United States was taking Canada to the GATT on FIRA because Canada was not giving foreign firms 'equal treatment', that there was a requirement for a minimum percent of local content and that FIRA itself constituted a bad precedent which could serve as a model for developing countries. A U.S. Senator said he objected to FIRA's requirements designed to bolster procurement in Canada, to gain export commitments and to reduce the establishment of purely distribution outlets. In response, a Canadian participant said that through the Megaprojects Purchasing Board, FIRA was attempting to broaden the viewpoint of companies in Canada and give Canadian suppliers a fair opportunity for the business. Statistics had indicated the purchasing patterns of subsidiaries were linked closely with the parent firms in the United States. Canada had more than a $20 billion deficit in end products with the United States in 1981 and the impact on unemployment was enormous. A Canadian Senator explained that some of FIRA's rules were to prevent "truncated" firms in Canada.

Other Canadian delegates stated that Canada continues to welcome and need foreign investment but not at any price. High foreign investment levels had become an important political problem in Canada with the NDP gaining 20 per cent of the vote. One member warned that if the United States "reciprocated" too much it could result in a welling-up of economic nationalism and an anti-American election platform in Canada.

Yet another Canadian explained that Canada did not expect foreign investors to export if their products were not internationally competitive or to buy in Canada if Canadian suppliers were not competitive. But a Congressman replied that although the commitment which the foreign firm made to 'buy Canadian' was made voluntarily it became legally enforceable when it was agreed to by Cabinet Committee and that was why the issue had to go to GATT.

Grain marketing

Problems of the United States' agricultural sector were raised by a U.S. Senator who mentioned the recent U.S. embargo to Poland, the European Community's subsidization of its agricultural sector and the fact that Canada continues to subsidize transportation of grain. He said the U.S. taxpayer strongly resisted loan guarantees, but the family farm was suffering badly.

A Canadian Senator replied that the United States had its own grain transportation subsidy in the Mississippi Canal system. Each side had to manage its own domestic economy separately. But on the grain export market it was important to find a joint approach. The cost of production of grain should be the target price but Canada was not even getting that. International prices are related to Chicago. There was a wide community of interest between Canada and the United States in trying to improve export marketing arrangements. He referred to the previous meetings of legislators from both sides which had led each side to try to establish a legislative committee. On the Canadian side, unfortunately, there was no progress to report; nor had the meeting of the four major exporting nations, the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina, yet taken place. The American Senator inquired about Canada's five-year grain agreement with the U.S.S.R. The Canadian spokesman remarked that Canada did not agree with the recent U.S. embargo position and in respect to Poland, Canada would ship 1 1/2 million tons of grain. There was a huge credit, however, and it was recognized that payment would be difficult.

A Congressman suggested that the European Community's trade-distorting subsidies for agriculture might be tackled at the next GATT Ministerial meeting in its search for new agricultural rules.

Tax treaty

The problems related to the delay in ratification of the bilateral tax treaty were briefly reviewed by a Canadian Senator and a Congressman. The main problem involved the treatment of capital gains, said the Senator, and this needed to be ironed out within the United States. The provisions of the treaty must be made compatible with the Foreign Investment in U.S. Real Property Tax Act (FIRPTA), explained an American delegate, and subsequently a protocol to the original treaty was required.

Potatoes

A lively exchange took place on the issue of transborder potato trade. A Maine Congresswoman described the 'crisis situation' in the Maine potato industry with surplus stocks, severe price depressions and a reduction in the potato acreage. Canadian potato exports to U.S. east coast markets had increased by 75 per cent in the past four years. The contributing factors included: the agreement by the United States at the GATT MTNs to phase out the tariff rate quota by 1987, with the agreement that both countries retain only a straight tariff of .35 cents per pound; the problem of Canadian seed potatoes being sold as table potatoes in the U.S. market; the exchange rate differential which put Maine producers at a 21 per cent disadvantage; and the federal and provincial government subsidies for Canadian potato growers. (She commented that there were 39 government programs in P.E.I.). This had resulted in unfair competition and the U.S. International Trade Commission had been asked to investigate and would report by July. The situation in Maine was explosive, she said, with danger of a border blockade.

A Canadian Senator countered that the MTNs will now assure the Canadian exporter of reciprocal treatment, whereas previously it had been restricted by U.S. quotas and higher tariffs. This delegate agreed that some Canadian seed potatoes were being sold in the United States as table potatoes. He emphasized the exceptionally high quality of the Canadian product due to strict control standards, and he noted that Canadian potatoes were selling at a premium to Maine potatoes on the Boston market. This participant asserted that Maine's imposition of costly inspection requirements, amounting to $200 a unit at the border just at the height of the Canadian potato export season, had seriously distorted the market. The U.S. federal authorities had obtained a temporary injunction against the State of Maine for this action and a permanent injunction hearing was in the offing.

He reminded the U.S. side that in the total bilateral trade in potatoes, U.S. exports to Canada exceeded Canadian exports to the United States.

Potatoes from Idaho flood the Canadian market in the West, another Canadian Senator added. Potatoes were in fact one of Canada's few significant agricultural exports, but it was still a net importer of potatoes. The only way to look at this problem was in the context of total agricultural trade and here there was an enormous balance in favour of the United States.

The delegate from Maine responded that the State of Maine was considering passing legislation in respect to the bagging of potatoes and imposing inspection requirements without a fee, measures which would be restrictive to imports. A Senator from Idaho mentioned he had seen bags labelled 'Idaho' coming from Canada. Reference was made by a Congressman that Section 332 of the Tariff Act can provide relief for complaints in respect to subsidies although they are often difficult to prove.

Trucking

It was clear from the presentations of U.S. delegates that the trucking issue was closely linked to the question of FIRA and "reciprocity". The U.S. point of view, as set forth by a Congressman, was that in the recently deregulated U.S. markets, Canadian truckers were gaining the advantage with the right to operate single-line traffic into the United States from Canada, whereas U.S. carriers with loads destined for Canada had to transfer to Canadian carriers at the border. There was a problem in that in Canada, the provinces had jurisdiction in this area. But more particularly, FIRA was turning down U.S. applications or not acting on them, "letting them spin on".

In 1981, he continued, the U.S. Secretary of Commerce had written a letter to Mr. Gray making the points that there had been a closing of the door; that FIRA was requiring U.S. applicant firms "to bank only in Canadian banks, to use Canadian advertising agencies and accountants, and to reduce its equity share, etc."; and that applications had to be made to specific provinces for interprovincial transport. A bill had been introduced in the House by Representative Albosta directing the U.S. regulatory authority, the Interstate Commerce Commission not to issue licenses to foreign carriers until it determined whether foreign governments were discriminating against U.S. truckers. To this extent a degree of regulation would be reintroduced in the United States.

A Canadian Senator stated that the great majority of applications by the U.S. trucking industry in Canada have been successful. As far as the operating grants were concerned, Canadian and U.S. applications were treated exactly the same with no discrimination he said. In the case of the Yellow Freight Company's application, the main opponents were other U.S. firms which were already operating in Canada and did not want competition. About 90 to 95 per cent of trucks hauling to the Atlantic provinces from the United States are American. As far as FIRA was concerned, this delegate noted that FIRA's powers had been circumscribed by the 1981 budget announcement.

A Canadian member stated that not only FIRA's decision-making process needed to be modified, but that Canada should review the criteria by which it assessed an application. He listed the criteria: new employment, increased investment, export commitment, additional resource processing; purchasing from Canadian suppliers if competitive; Canadian equity participation; R&D and technology increase and overall efficiency. Another Canadian delegate said that as far as trucking was concerned, FIRA's two main concerns were to try to ensure competition and the creation of new jobs.

In response to an American Senator's question that even when the provinces had approved a trucking firm's application, FIRA would block it, members of the Canadian side emphasized that these were two quite separate aspects. Most Canadian delegates said no discrimination was practiced by provincial boards but one Canadian participant said there might be some discrimination in his province in this area.

A Congressman observed in concluding that there had been considerable apprehension in the United States over the 1980 trucking deregulation measures. But costs had come down, shipping to isolated communities had not seemed to be impaired, although losses had been incurred by some large shippers.

Snowplows

The subject of snowplows, although not on the agenda, was raised briefly by a U.S. Congressman who said snowplow producers in his district were complaining of "unfair" competition and even "dumping" from Canadian firms selling in the U.S. market. The U.S. firms considered the Canadian government was subsidizing the snowplow exports in a variety of ways. A Canadian member said he would look into the matter.

Lumber

A U.S. spokesman said that the U.S. softwood lumber industry, particularly in the Pacific Northwest, was in a seriously depressed state due to increased levels of Canadian imports. These cheaper imports were made possible by the artificially low stumpage paid by the Canadian producers and there were charges of unfair competition by the U.S. producers. Congress had directed the U.S. International Trade Commission (ITC) to investigate the situation under the Tariff Act and relief action was possible.

The Canadian spokesman responded that the Canadian industry with exports of $2.5 billion to the United States and total exports of over $12 billion was very concerned by the ITC investigation and the accusation of dumping. There was a completely different system in Canada, he explained. Approximately 95 per cent of timber harvested came from publicly owned lands; the B.C. stumpage rate system was flexible, based on current market rate conditions, rising and falling accordingly. Under the U.S. system, companies bid for cutting rights on federal timber under very competitive bidding. This could result in high rates which remain applicable three years hence when the timber is cut, even if the market has fallen. In his view, the problems of the higher costs of U.S. producers were due to the U.S. systems of stumpage and royalties. In addition the Canadian industry benefited from cheaper shipping by rail whereas the U.S. industry was hampered by more expensive shipping under the Jones Act. Canadian exporters also had had a considerable exchange rate advantage, he added.

A U.S. Senator agreed that the two stumpage systems were not comparable and that the three-year high cost contract aspect could be a negative factor at present for U.S. producers. But, he continued, while the U.S. protects the value of stumpage, Canada protects jobs. The only reason the unemployment rate in a lumber county in his district had dropped to 20 percent from 30 percent was because the lumber workers had all left. The Canadian spokesman countered that in prime lumber areas in B.C., the unemployment rate was as high as 25 percent.

A Canadian Senator said that at present while there was a current downturn in the U.S. housing market, the U.S. industry could meet much of its own needs, but when there was a upturn, Canadian supplies would again be important and the U.S. would want to ensure that they could rely on Canadian supplies. He recalled earlier protectionist attempts to erect a non-tariff barrier in the form of a marking requirement for Canadian lumber which had gone through Congress and was only stopped by the President. Canada had not changed its stumpage system, he concluded, and suggested that perhaps the U.S. rules were not flexible enough to cope with a recessionary market.

One U.S. Congressman said he hoped the ITC finding would be negative and a colleague agreed that he did not want to see the government subsidizing U.S. housing costs. There was a short exchange on upgrading of forest products. A Canadian delegate said that Canada no longer sold unprocessed round logs to any country and he was surprised the United States still did.

Pharmaceutical Patents

An American Congressman raised briefly the question of Canada's patent legislation which, in respect to pharmaceutical patents, results in the compulsory licensing of drug patents at a 4 per cent royalty rate. He pointed out that the drug industry viewed the compulsory licensing as an invasion of property rights and the royalty rate as unfairly low. Moreover, such a policy has had a serious detrimental effect on the amount of research work being done. At the very least he urged that Canada should raise the royalty rate.

A Canadian spokesman replied that he understood the U.S. viewpoint. He himself disagreed with the 1969 Patent Act amendment in question. It had resulted in the loss not only of drug-related research but also of investment by drug companies in Canada. Consequently jobs had been lost as well. Moreover, he was doubtful that the provisions had resulted in lower drug prices for the Canadian consumer. Raising the royalty rate was not necessarily the answer to the problem, he said, although flexible rates to ensure adequate compensation had been used in the United Kingdom, but Canada should try to provide an environment which would encourage increased investment and increased R & D in this sector. The main point to tackle was the protection of R & D and whether or not a patent should be compulsorily granted in the first place. The section in the Canadian Patent Act is currently under revision, he said.

Fish

A Canadian Senator pointed out that traditionally the United States had been Canada's largest market. Since the 200 mile limit had been instituted, the United States had become a major competitor. A new U.S. policy had linked the allocations of potential fish stocks to access to markets for processed fish products. In 1981 these surplus fish stock allocations amounted to 338,000 metric tons, and provided the American industry with a leverage which puts Canada at a considerable disadvantage in international fish marketing.

There were two main specific areas of dispute at present off the east coast, this delegate continued: the Gulf of Maine boundary dispute and the conflict over conservation and management of Georges Bank. In the latter case, Canada was greatly concerned that the new U.S. proposals for scallop and ground fish management will lead to depletion of the stocks off Georges Bank. The plans do not provide adequately for conservation. The protection of the species was at stake and it required a bilateral agreement urgently. Another Canadian emphasized that already the Georges Bank scallop stocks had diminished almost to a point of no return because of the totally free hand of U.S. fishermen.

An American Congressman considered that appropriate conservation measures ought to be decided by other than those who were economically involved. A Canadian participant pointed out that the bilateral interim arrangements concluded on the west coast to manage salmon interceptions were working fairly well and perhaps could serve as a model for the east coast fisheries' problems. However, a U.S. Senator stated that troll-caught chinook salmon on runs between the Fraser River and the State of Washington were so extensive as to make it difficult to increase the stocks.

This Senator also raised the question of the issue of the Dixon Entrance boundary dispute with its implications for salmon trawlers in the area. It was suggested by other delegates that eventually, after the Gulf of Maine arbitration by the International Court of Justice, the other disputed water boundaries would have to go to the Court as well.

It was gratifying, a Canadian delegate concluded, that an international agreement had been reached at long last with respect to Atlantic salmon. This could prove a model for the west coast.

NEP

Canada's National Energy Program (NEP) was discussed more fully in Committee II, the energy committee, but U.S. delegates on Committee I aired their complaints concerning the overall thrust of the NEP, its trade and investment implications as well as the Canada Lands 'back in' provisions.

An American spokesman said that the United States perceived the NEP as giving Canada an unfair advantage in the energy sector which could extend to all other trade areas. What industry would be next to be so protected, it was asked? In his view such protectionism was not a good policy "since nothing could replace the market place as an allocator of resources." Moreover, the program had resulted in increases in oil and gas exploration activity in the United States instead of Canada, which in the perspective of North America energy developments was a negative development.

A Canadian Senator remarked that as far as the impact on trade flows was concerned, the NEP program had had a negligible impact on gas exports to the U.S.; they were affected by current market conditions. As for the impact on investment, while the Canadianization program had meant a heavy outflow of capital, much of this was borrowed on the New York market; moreover, some recent outflows not associated with the NEP, such as the purchase of CIP by Canadians had had more impact momentarily on the exchange rate.

A Congressman remarked that as the economic situation has deteriorated, Canadian economic nationalism had increased sharply, until it looked to him like Canada had joined the 'third world', acting like 'a banana republic'. It was an uneasy picture, he said. In respect to the NEP 'back in' provisions involving retention by the Crown of 25 per cent interest, Canada had taken on the 'big boys' of the oil companies who carry a lot of weight in the Senate and the House. There should be compensation of the companies, over-compensation if necessary.

A Canadian member stated that the 'back-in' provision was a very controversial issue even in Canada, particularly since it was retroactively applied after the fact and there was a spectre that such an approach could be applied to other industries. He noted, however, that it applied to domestic as well as foreign producers. He pointed out that Canada had a real problem in the energy sector with respect to the extremely high level of foreign ownership and the level should be reduced—but “by encouragement not by a heavy stick”. In respect to other aspects of the NEP, there was a growing recognition in Canada that the costs of the present policy involving heavy capital outflows were high. A $15½ billion outflow in 1981 compared to an average $2½ billion in earlier years had put pressure on interest rates with resulting high unemployment. Finally, this participant urged that the United States recognize there were different points of view in Canada in respect to the NEP.

Another Canadian participant elaborated on the high level of foreign ownership in Canada's energy sector which had decreased from over 70 per cent in the past two years as a result of the government's policy. He asked whether Americans would have tolerated such a level. In order to bring it down, the alternatives open to Canada were either expropriation (which was rejected) or an incentives program which, under the present policy, is provided by both the federal and Alberta governments to all operating companies both Canadian and foreign-owned. In addition to these incentive programs, there was an encouragement to increase Canadian participation which would generate larger incentives.

In respect to the ‘back-in’ for the Canada Lands involving retention by the government of a 25 per cent interest, he explained that the Canadian allocation system had long differed from the U.S. auction system. In Canada no payment had been required for exploration permits but permit holders had been required to surrender 50 per cent of the acreage when their exploratory activity led to production. In respect to incentives in Canada Lands, the system where as much as 90 per cent of incentives for exploratory activity was paid for by the taxpayers had been changed. Henceforth, 25 per cent of the exploratory costs will be paid by the government.

In respect to the trade impact of the sourcing provisions, this delegate continued, it was a question of the viability of the Canadian economy. The GATT MTNs would result in bilateral free trade in a substantial range of industrial products with the resulting risk of relocation of production in the United States in order to achieve the lowest possible unit labour costs. Facing this prospect, as well as U.S. non-tariff barriers such as Buy American preferences, only the government had strong enough levers to deal with the problem.

A U.S. Senator commented that the program was hurting Canada more than the United States; there was going to be a capital shortage for needed energy facilities; U.S. development was benefiting from its departure from Canada; Canada could face large capital outflows which could lead to capital outflow restrictions and there was concern that investment in Canada would henceforth work less efficiently. This participant said that the ‘back-in’ was being viewed as “expropriation without compensation” and urged Canada to review the level of compensation even if it did not change the policy. The United States, he added, had made a mistake with its windfall profits tax.

Canadian members drew attention to the Canadian political scene with its significant economic nationalist opinion. Public opinion undoubtedly supported Petrocan, American delegates were told. One member observed that as far as the ‘back-in’ was concerned, there was controversy even within the Liberal party. It was important that the United States express its concerns and that they be heard in Canada.

Still in the energy and trade context, a U.S. Senator raised what he termed “Canada's aggressive promotional attempts” to market the CANDU reactor. In the past six months Canada appeared to be relaxing its safeguard restrictions for developing countries and he asked if Canada were “hiding behind the NPT shield” for commercial reasons. A Canadian member replied that Canada's safeguards have been very stringent in the past and overall the requirements were still “relatively tough”. At present, Canada was dealing with Egypt and was at a competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis the French, the Germans and the Swiss.

U.S. Caribbean Basin initiative

An American member noted in passing that part of the President's initiative in the Caribbean Basin would be to create a free trade zone in this area, a one-way free trade zone whereby U.S. and other investment would be encouraged to go into this area to produce manufactured goods which would be allowed free entry into the U.S. market. He said the House Ways and Means Committee was holding hearings on the implications of this plan shortly and if Canada considered it would be negatively affected, it should make representations.

Canadian delegates responded that Canada already had a very significant aid program in the area amounting to $500 million for five years. Canada had long granted the Commonwealth countries of the Caribbean a preferential access which was now absorbed into the General Preferential Tariff for developing countries. Under this plan all products enter Canada duty free except for a quota on cotton textiles.

Procurement

A Canadian participant raised the question of U.S. government procurement rules including the recent amendment removing an earlier exemption for Canadian specialty metals under the Defence Production Sharing Arrangement (DPSA). Canada was concerned that this agreement, which was designed to maintain a rough balance of bilateral trade, would grow increasingly in the U.S. favour. This year it would be about $250 million dollars ‘out of whack’. The measures appeared to be a violation of the arrangement.

Congressional participants responded that such measures have a tendency to fly through the legislative process without being noticed when riders are tacked on at the last moment. Any amendments that are not objected to get through. There are now a majority of the states which have been persuaded to adopt Buy American rules, applying them to purchases such as those under the Surface Transportation Assistance Act and the highway legislation. Probably it was necessary to go back to the GATT to solve procurement problems.

The GATT Ministerial Talks

In the face of the current recession and the widespread recourse to protectionist measures, the U.S. side emphasized that the September GATT ministerial meeting could be the most important one since the war. The major trading nations were hoping that GATT could help relieve the pressures on the national governments. The agenda was critical and a Congressman paid tribute to the Canadian Chairman of the GATT Agenda Committee, Mr. D. S. McPhail. He and the Canadian government had been most co-operative, said this delegate, in ensuring that there would be a review of the implementation of commitments made at the MTNs; that 'unfinished business' such as safeguards and countervails would be dealt with and that new issues such as ways to modify the EC's Common Agricultural Policy and rules for trade in investment and services would be addressed. He reminded delegates that it was because of differences over trade in investment and services that the United States was challenging FIRA at the GATT.

In reply a Canadian delegate acknowledged the importance of the meeting and noted that Mr. Brock had recently emphasized that there should be multilateral rules for the emerging area of trade in invisibles before major problems arose.

COMMITTEE II—ENERGY QUESTIONS

AGENDA

1. Canada's NEP objectives
2. Alaska gas pipeline financing
3. Alternate fuels, including U.S. plans for coal conversion
4. Gas supply and price
5. Oil supply and price
6. Export of Electricity
7. Strategic petroleum reserve.

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSIONS

During past years, energy questions have been a centre of intense argument and it has been difficult to cover the agenda of Committee II. The situation at the 1982 meeting of the Committee was rather different. The National Energy Policy, which past experience had suggested would produce challenging and extended questioning by American participants did not. As a result the Committee completed its discussions in two sessions and members were free on Saturday morning to attend meetings of the other two Committees. In Committee I, which had the trade aspects of the Canadian National Energy Policy on its agenda on the Saturday morning the American delegates commented strongly on the NEP and there was also some reference to it during the plenary session.

Canada's NEP Objectives

A Canadian delegate introduced discussion in Committee II of the NEP. As background, he noted that Canada was self-sufficient in all energy sources other than oil, that in the past the oil revenue received by the federal government compared badly with that received by the provincial governments, that the price of oil in Canada which had remained significantly below world levels, had to go up, and that the energy sector featured an unacceptably high degree of foreign ownership (about three-quarters).

The NEP had three principal features:

- (a) an effort to achieve oil self-reliance by 1990. This was to be pursued by encouraging conservation and oil substitution and by offering incentives for new oil production;

- (b) a new fiscal arrangement, to be achieved through agreements with the provinces, which significantly increased the federal share of revenue;
- (c) a variety of programs to encourage Canadianization of the industry, including incentives which varied according to the percentage of foreign ownership, support of the growth of the national oil company, Petro Canada, and encouraging farm-ins and partnership between foreign and Canadian principals.

An American participant asked how the government judged the success of the policy and what had been the reaction of foreign firms. The Canadian spokesman noted that conservation programs seemed to be working, although price rises were also a factor in the market decline in consumption. Foreign firms seemed to be adapting. He observed that the government had deliberately rejected a system of penalties for foreign ownership in favour of a system of variable incentives, starting at 25 per cent for all companies and going up to 80 per cent for Canadian owned companies drilling in the northern lands.

At this stage, one Canadian participant from an opposition party jumped into the discussion to present a very different picture of the results of the NEP. He noted that in 1981 Canadian oil reserves had declined for the eleventh year in a row and that in spite of significant declines in consumption, Canada still had to import about one-quarter of the oil it consumed. The industry in his view was in disarray with over 2500 Canadian experts leaving the country to look for work elsewhere, hundreds of oil drilling and service rigs moving across the U.S. border, and major projects at Cold Lake and Fort McMurray in serious trouble. Canada, he concluded, had violated the spirit of international agreements and the government was expropriating 25 per cent of the holdings of oil companies in all the promising frontier areas.

Confronted by dispute among Canadians over the NEP, U.S. participants seemed to back off for fear of being seen as taking sides. A single U.S. speaker noted that Canada had to solve its own problems. However, he warned that some of Canada's decisions adversely affected U.S. interests. The focus of the controversy on the Mineral Leasing Act has shifted in Congress to a constitutional issue of whether the Administration is entitled to withhold documents from Congress and also whether the decision required under the Act correctly applies to oil as well as to mineral leases. He noted in conclusion that Congressman Dingell, Chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, remains very upset about the NEP, and particularly at the linkage he perceives with the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Alaska Gas Pipeline Financing

The U.S. side led off on this item, describing in familiar terms why the waiver package had been needed.

A suit had been brought by a group of Senators challenging the rule-making powers of Congress, but it was expected that the suit would be rejected. It was noted that under the authority for pre-billing, in the United States only holders of debt were to be entitled to pre-bill, whereas in Canada owners of debt and equity were both to be able to pre-bill. This preferred treatment of Canada had been exploited by Ralph Nader and other critics of the waiver package.

A U.S. participant stressed that an important factor in securing the Administration's approval of the waiver package and in gaining its passage through Congress was the feeling that a commitment had been made to Canada. One of the problems was that at this time gas was so plentiful in the United States that opponents of the pipeline could argue that Alaskan gas was not needed.

There was some discussion of the price of Alaskan gas and the effect on the blended price of gas to consumers should Alaskan gas become available. If the gas were to be decontrolled, the average price would rise and this would make it more difficult to absorb the higher priced Alaskan gas. However, a U.S. participant noted that the President had decided against proposing that gas be deregulated this year.

The U.S. participants exchanged views and eventually accepted that the net price of Alaskan gas might actually fall as the years passed, and amortization costs of the pipeline itself were gradually paid off. The result would be a declining cost curve for Alaskan gas, whereas under eventual deregulation the cost curve of gas in the Lower 48 would rise. The actual cost of Alaskan gas delivered into the transmission systems of the Lower 48 was estimated at $4.89 per thousand cubic feet in 1980 dollars.

In 1980, for the first time since the 1960s, gas reserves in the United States increased. For the first time since 1955, there had been an increase in drilling. Ultimately Alaskan gas would be delivered to 48 of the 50 U.S. states, only Vermont and Hawaii being excluded, and would represent in all a 10 per cent increase in the volume of available gas in the United States.

Questions were raised on the Canadian side as to whether the pipeline would be built. They wondered if the combination of high interest rates and a declining price for oil would make it difficult to raise the $30 billion required. A Senator from Alaska responded that he was optimistic, having spoken in recent weeks to the producers who had claimed they would find the necessary funds. He added that he did not expect a government guarantee or government funds.

The same Senator noted that the European gas pipeline from the U.S.S.R. would compete for some of the funds. He thought it shortsighted of the Europeans to render themselves so dependent on the Soviet Union. He even suggested in this event that the United States would be justified in withdrawing its military forces from Europe. A Canadian participant entered this discussion by suggesting that it would be advantageous to Western Europeans to participate in developing northern Canadian gas, noting that Melville Island was closer to Wilhelmshaven than to Halifax. This was an idea which several Americans found very attractive.

Alternative Fuels

U.S. participants outlined the ambitious goals which Congress had set in 1980 for synthetic oil production—500,000 barrels per day by 1985 and 2,000,000 barrels per day by 1990. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation was established and given some special help—the capacity to offer loan guarantees to help an entrepreneur who needed finance and an obligation on the defence forces to buy a portion of any production to assure a market. The U.S. government was even prepared to accept joint ventures. But the response of the Corporation had been disappointing. Only 5 permits had been issued out of 200 applications and another 8 were under review.

Speakers on both sides observed that the principal problem was a lack of confidence by the private sector that synthetic fuels are viable. Coal conversion was very costly and Bechtel estimated that it would cost $60 to $70 a barrel to produce oil from oil shales. There was a further problem in that immense quantities of water were needed, which was already in short supply in the West. Water was also needed for coal gasification. Canada has had successful experience in producing oil from the tar sands but the product was among the most expensive oil in the world. The current cost of a tar sands plant capable of producing 140,000 barrels per day was $14 billion, which meant a capital cost of $100,000 a barrel.

Canadian participants drew attention to the amount of nuclear energy being generated in some parts of Canada. By the end of the century 50 per cent of the electrical power used in Ontario would be generated from nuclear energy. American speakers noted that the resistance of the environmental lobby in the United States virtually ruled out this approach.

The preferred route in the United States is to turn again to coal, which exists in abundance. Synthetic fuel production can be achieved without environmental damage, but the high cost and the shortage of water realistically made this an unlikely avenue. The result has been the emphasis on converting oil fired electrical plants to coal. Unfortunately Eastern U.S. coal was high in sulphur (7 per cent); Western coal, with only 1 per cent sulphur content was too remote to be transported economically to the power plants of the East.

This point led to a discussion of the acid rain issue. Canadians pointed out what most of the U.S. participants already knew, that politically the issue had a much higher profile in Canada than in the United States. Only in New England and in New York state was there a comparable level of public concern about acid rain. American speakers insisted that it was critical that Canada apply high standards domestically if it wished to be taken seriously in the United States. One U.S. participant warned that having the active support of the Sierra Club and other similar organizations could be politically counter-productive with this Administration. Another U.S. participant commented favourably on the report of the Canadian Parliamentary Task Force on Acid Rain which had been distributed at the meeting, noting that it had no parallel in the U.S. Congress.

Another difference in attitude between the two countries was the public response to gasohol. Some plants had started up two years ago in the United States, but public interest had declined and it was increasingly hard to find gasohol at the pump. In Canada a plant had been opened very recently and public demand had been strong.

Gas Supply and Price

The four items remaining on the agenda were dealt with briefly, in part because much of the material had been covered in passing in earlier discussion.

A Canadian participant said that Canada would like to sell more gas to the United States. In 1981, the United States had only taken up 57 per cent of the volume of gas which Canada had agreed to export. Canada normally priced gas under the Duncan-Lalonde agreement at the oil substitution price. However, for a year and half there had been no price increase since markets in the United States had been weak.

A special problem which Canada faced was the very strict test which the National Energy Board was directed to apply to determine current deliverability. A shut-in well with no history of sales could not be included in the calculation. Another Canadian participant observed that the government may relax this regulation.

An American participant asked for information on prospects for delivering gas from the Arctic. It was noted that reservations expressed by the Inuit people and by Greenland were likely to slow down that development. This led an American participant to suggest that Alaskan gas delivered via the Alaska gas pipeline was likely to prevail in the end over foreign gas because Alaskan gas could be promised for a twenty year period and guaranteed as to future price.

Oil Supply and Price

Discussion on this item was limited to providing information to U.S. participants on the Hibernia field. It was noted that the crude was of high quality and, by a conservative estimate, amounted to 5 million barrels, about half the size of the Prudhoe Bay field. By the end of the decade the field could be producing 200,000 barrels a day. However, as conventional fields in Western Canada were declining at the rate of about 100,000 barrels a day a year, it was probable that Hibernia production would replace existing domestic production and not reduce the level of Canadian dependency on imported oil.

Export of Electricity

Canada has been and remains a large net exporter of electricity to the United States. It was recognized by participants from both countries that this trade was mutually beneficial.

A Canadian spokesman observed that a problem existed on the Canadian side because of jurisdictional disputes between provinces, referring to Quebec's objections to the transmission of Newfoundland power over its territory. It was noted that the same problem existed on the U.S. side of the border. The Mandan proposal to export electricity from Manitoba to Nebraska had floundered because South Dakota had objected on environmental grounds to the transmission lines necessary to carry the power to Nebraska.

A U. S. participant who had attended previous meetings and who had in the past argued that Canadian electricity should be exported at the cost of production told the meeting that he had come to accept as reasonable that Canadian electricity should be priced at the substitution cost of alternative fuels in the areas of the United States in which it was being sold.

Strategic Petroleum Reserve

It was generally agreed that with the price of oil and the demand for it falling, interest in creating a U. S. financed strategic petroleum reserve was declining. Such interest as there was in the United States was focussed rather on using exhausted wells in Texas and Louisiana as reservoirs. Nevertheless, one U. S. participant observed that in his view a time of falling prices was an ideal time to stockpile.

Another U.S. participant suggested that as the price of imported oil fell, the United States should occupy the margin with an import tax. This might make it more difficult for OPEC to raise prices in future.

COMMITTEE II—ENVIRONMENT AND MULTILATERAL QUESTIONS

After a round table introduction, the Committee decided that it would deal first with bilateral environmental questions and then move on to the multilateral issues placed before it. At the request of the U.S. side, three items were added to the agenda: the Dixon entrance boundary dispute; U.S.-Canada salmon talks; and the Stikine River. The agenda was approved as follows:

AGENDA

A. Bilateral environmental issues

1. Acid rain
2. Eastport
3. Garrison Dam project
4. Flathead
5. Skagit
6. Toxic waste disposal
7. Niagara River/Great Lakes clean-up
8. Dixon Entrance boundary dispute
9. U.S.-Canada salmon talks
10. Stikine River

B. Multilateral questions

1. Law of the Sea
2. Central America
3. Middle East
4. Poland
5. Nuclear strategy and defence issues
6. North-South issues

SUMMARY OF DISCUSSIONS

Acid Rain

The Canadian spokesperson began by asserting that acid rain was not a pollution problem like any other, the effects of which could be cleaned up later. The process, he said, was irreversible. "Once lakes go acidic you can't get them back. It's not the old environmental routine of stopping throwing stuff in the river so it can clean itself up." The addition of lime to the over-acidic water as a corrective, while it might work in a lab, was not effective in the real world because the chemistry of the water and the biota in the lakes, were permanently altered.

The speaker said that the extent of damage was enormous. For example, 48,000 lakes in Ontario had suffered damage and a minimum of seventeen thousand in Quebec, based upon an incomplete survey, while seven salmon rivers in New Brunswick were now dead. All of the damage and potential for damage had not been assessed because it was only since 1978 or 1979 that Canadians had become fully aware of the problem, even though Canada had received warnings as early as 1971 from Scandinavian nations at the Stockholm Conference on the Environment. It now appeared that one-quarter to one-third of Canada would be "ravaged."

The source of the damage to Canada, the spokesperson went on, was probably 50 percent Canadian and 50 percent U.S. He said the figure of 70 percent from U.S. sources should be viewed with some scepticism. While it might well apply in Ontario, nation-wide U.S. sources would not account for more than half the problem. "We are not trying to make you (the U.S.) out to be the villain of the piece. We know our emissions are hammering hell out of the north-eastern U.S. We don't come to you with clean hands. It's a mutual problem." He said that the "bottom line" was that what was lost to acid rain could not be restored and that there was not much time to act.

Another member of the Canadian delegation thought important "in the interest of accuracy" to note that the effects of acid shock in rivers were not irreversible. The spokesperson agreed, noting that some recovery from damages was also possible in lakes where flushing took place.

A United States delegate asked, "What do we do? Could we set up something like the IJC to have jurisdiction?" A member of the House of Representatives responded that he had introduced legislation calling for an International Water Quality Commission and there were some prospects that the House Foreign Affairs Committee would hold hearings on the legislation this year.

The Canadian spokesperson said that while the Congressman's bill was of interest, it should be noted that the two countries had established an ad hoc joint committee to determine control strategies. Its job was to determine mutually agreed targets and dates for the reduction of offending emissions, after which it would be the responsibility of each nation to determine how it would meet those targets. The model for the approach was the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

A Canadian delegate referred to the letter of intent agreed to by both governments and the "search for a treaty." When the U.S. side responded that the treaty route seemed unduly lengthy, given the urgency of the problem, the Canadian delegate noted that Parliament had passed interim legislation permitting the government "to go after Canadian offenders on the basis of complaints from the United States." Canada would like to see some reciprocity here.

At this point, a U.S. Congressman said he thought it important that the Canadian side be given some sense of the politics now affecting U.S. reactions. The House Environment Committee was now considering amendments to the Clean Air Act and he and Congressman Waxman had put forward legislation calling for aggressive action on acid rain. However, Congressman Dingell, the chairman of the whole committee, who represents a Detroit constituency, "becomes enraged at anything that will increase auto industry costs." Dingell was normally a liberal but not on these matters. He and associates have substituted legislation which makes no provision to reduce acid rain. Dingell was extremely tough and had even eliminated a sub-committee which was pursuing directions with which he did not agree. It was possible through amendments from the floor to attempt to restore provision for the control of acid rain, but he was not optimistic about their prospects.

Democratic leaders, he explained, are facing an election at a time when the possibility of depression confronted Ohio and Michigan. No help could be expected from them. In his view, ironically, the hope seemed to lie in the Republican-controlled Senate. Chairman Stafford was from Vermont and Senator Chaffee from Rhode Island. Senator Stafford had submitted a bill which established a reasonable set of sulphur dioxide controls—"broad brush, it would require a reduction in emissions of 10 million tons over a ten-year period." The matter would have to be settled in conference committee and the Senate position might carry.

A Senator intervened at this point to say that the Congressman was too optimistic about the Senate. He did not believe the Senate could produce 51 votes on anything to which the Administration was opposed. Another Senator claimed that on this issue party lines were "not only blurred, but also non-existent." The Senate Environment Committee was heavily weighted with Westerners. The acid rain "sending" states were under-represented. Thus, the sympathy for controls to be found in that Committee may not reflect attitudes in the whole Senate.

U.S. participants noted that there was "an unholy alliance" between labour and big business. Concern about the economy has become so overriding that even those sympathetic to the cause of controlling acid rain will vote against concrete measures. One was "worried about the survival of the Clean Air Act at all." The major chemical companies had begun to lobby; Dupont publishing articles disputing the scientific basis for concern about acid rain. Power companies in the Upper Mid-west were saying that acid rain should be referred to as "sulphur enrichment."

A Canadian Member of Parliament who represents one of the hardest hit areas in Canada, the Muskoka region, was invited to comment. He said that acid rain was a world-wide problem and that Canada "sure is not lily white," certainly not in Ontario. He said he lived next to the "world's single largest polluter", INCO, with the world's tallest smokestack. There had recently been a six-month strike at INCO during which time there had been no stack emissions. The results were carefully monitored. There was no reduction in acid rain in the Muskoka region. The local source was the United States. INCO was exporting its pollutants to Eastern Ontario and Quebec.

In response, a U.S. Representative said he was concerned that, in contrast to the situation in Canada, he could not get straight answers from the U.S. scientific community. A Committee on which he served had just appropriated $18 million for a five-year study. The scientific community seemed to be demanding more time for study and seemed unwilling to lend credibility to the cause.

A Canadian member suggested that the major problem was the economics of acid rain. If the consequences were seen to be bad enough, the money could be found. He referred to Japan where pollution from all sources had begun to have demonstrably adverse effects upon public health, with the result that action had been taken to produce devices capable of eliminating 97 percent of sulphur dioxide emissions from stacks. The U.S. side interjected that if acid rain could be demonstrated to have an adverse impact on health, there would be a powerful argument for action.

The Canadian speaker went on to say that in Japan the economics of pollution control had been favourable. There was a ready market for sulphur within 200 miles of its source of production and cheap water transportation to move it to the consumer. In North America, the economics were not the same. There was neither a substantial market nor cheap transportation for the sulphur recovered from scrubbers.

Continuing, he said there has been excellent media attention to the issue in Canada. The need was to produce similar focus in the United States. Could not wildlife and fishing associations be persuaded to lobby? The U.S. side replied that, on a scale of zero to one hundred, if Canadian awareness of the issue was ninety-seven, the corresponding figure in the U.S. would be two or three. The Adirondack's economy had been "devastated by acid rain" but had attracted little national attention because it was not a major factor in the total U.S. economy. Industry in the U.S. was still arguing that no cause and effect relationship had been proved. Their reaction was similar to the response of the tobacco industry to claims that smoking causes cancer. Advocates of action were being asked if $10 billion of expenditures would produce $10 billion in benefits and they can't demonstrate a direct pay-back.

On the other hand, the speaker went on, the Administration, which was generally unsympathetic to research, had approved in the previous year an increase of 25 percent in the NOAA funds dedicated to acid rain research. (At the same time, the energy research budget had been reduced by 75 percent.) Moreover, the National Academy of Science has identified acid rain as a problem. A Canadian noted with approval: "Your National Academy of Science does not equivocate at all. Its report of two months ago is very clear." This Canadian participant addressed charges of conspiracy sometimes levelled against the Canadian government which he labelled "the (James) Freidman theory of acid rain." The theory was that Canadian concern for acid rain was a political ploy adopted by the Trudeau government to distract Canadians from real internal problems. This was nonsense. He asked his U.S. colleagues to remember that it was a Conservative administration which first took action on the question.

He went on to note that thirty years ago fruit farmers in Washington state had received compensation for damages engendered by air-borne pollutants from Canada. Agreement was reached through a process of binding arbitration. He claimed this was a good precedent based upon "fine old common law principles" governing conduct in one's own house. Concluding, he warned that the consequences of U.S. inaction for Canadian-American relations could be "appalling." There are already pressures on Canadian politicians from their constituents to begin drawing linkages.

A Congressman, who identified himself as one of three from Ohio who supported the Clean Air Act, said he wanted the Canadian side to know that millions were being spent in private laboratories to discredit National Academy of Science and Canadian scientists. They would attempt to delay any action until 1986. Ohio, he said, had a Governor who claimed the recession had been caused by environmentalists. Labour was arguing that any action would cost jobs and 6,000 had been lost in his district last week alone. The U.A.W. which led the fight for clean air was now on the other side. The U.S. electric companies were launching a major publicity campaign to rebut claims of damage from acid rain centred on a slick, half-hour prime-time T.V. program which would appear on every network over the next ten months. Clearly, the argument was going to be that the economy was so bad that the U.S. could no longer afford the luxury of environmental concerns. It would also be argued that Canadian demands for action on acid rain stemmed from a desire to "get back at the U.S." for high interest rates and other aggravations. The results could be "very nasty" because U.S. citizens were going to be drawing different conclusions than Canadians as a consequence of the public relations campaign.

Another Congressman commented that he had heard a lot about the situation in the U.S., but had not seen much evidence of action on the Canadian side. When the issue was raised, the Canadian authorities pleaded poverty. What is Canada doing? An Ontario M.P. responded that the second largest polluter in Canada was Ontario Hydro. The announced plans for Nanticoke generating station on Lake Erie to sell power to the U.S. had produced a "blow-up" in Parliament. One hundred and fifty Members and Senators had signed a petition to Ontario Hydro saying "stop." Ontario Hydro would reduce emissions in accordance with Ontario law, but only two scrubbers of six required were in place. He added that the 10 percent reduction in the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency budget was a worry.

A Senator from the U.S. side asked for sixty seconds "to reduce the gloom." He said that "an incredible amount of support for environmental protection still exists in the U.S." He claimed that the President had badly miscalculated in this area and that Democrats would use it against him in the coming elections. The basis for the Democratic attack on the Republicans, he went on, would be not only the environment but also foreign policy. The President "wants to get Canada and Mexico on side," yet relations have seldom been worse. It would be wrong to draw the conclusion, however, that this was a time to threaten the United States. "We're looking for a fight even if we end up losers." The speaker said he was suggesting, rather, that Canada subtly seek to tie together the prospects of greater support in the international arena with greater co-operation on bilateral issues. "Is our lack of decision on acid rain damaging the prospects of Canadian support in the Carribean basin?"

The United States, he predicted, "will come roaring back (economically) in three to four years." The short term prospects were bad, but with the comeback there would be a chance for progress. If the two countries could avoid confrontation and threats in the short term, by 1985 they would "be able to move forward together". He suggested that in the interim Canada place its bilateral concerns in the context of overall U.S. foreign relations. The President really meant what he said about improved relations with Canada and Mexico. Canada should use that real desire as the only effective counter to what would be a huge "anti-effort" on the part of U.S. industry.

Eastport

Consideration of the Eastport refinery issue was opened by the U.S. side. Pittston, the U.S. company desiring to build the refinery, had been granted an air emissions permit in 1977 which was grandfathered in 1979. In 1981, a water quality permit had been granted. Both decisions were now subject to court action. In addition, a referendum held last autumn in Eastport had rejected an option to purchase agreement between Pittston and the Eastport council. Pittston claimed the results turned upon the up-front cash offered rather than upon principle.

Canada had offered the alternative of off-shore off loading, but this has been rejected by the company because of the costs involved. Canada had subsequently unilaterally imposed a 5,000-ton limit on passage. The U.S. speaker argued that, in spite of the validity of Canadian concerns, it was unwise of Canada to act unilaterally. First, the situation did not require such action as legal obstacles have tied Pittston up for the foreseeable future and the oil market was off, making the economics of the project chancier. Second, the U.S. Government disputed Canadian claims to Head Harbour Passage.

In response, the Canadian side claimed that the new Canadian regulations under the Canada Shipping Act did not contest the right of innocent passage. They did not restrict passage, only the size of the vessels. Five thousand people fish the Bay of Fundy, and many more are employed in the associated fish processing plants. Tourism was also an important employer. Passage was extremely risky, especially in ice conditions, so a disaster could be anticipated. Given this situation, "there is just no way politically that a Canadian government can allow it to happen."

The Canadian speaker asked if it were correct that the Maine environmental protection agency had granted permits conditional upon Canadian agreement. The U.S. spokesperson acknowledged that this was the case, but repeated that the U.S. was "terribly concerned about the restrictive regulations." The Canadian spokesperson replied that the Canadian action had been prompted by "recent adverse court decisions." Another Canadian noted that, after Judge Nyson's ruling was "upheld by the U.S. administration," Canada became very nervous. Moreover, the Canadian Coast Guard study of the hazards had never been challenged.

The U.S. spokesperson expressed agreement about the dangers of pollution, noting that Eastport was the least attractive of 38 sites examined from that point of view. Even though Eastport was an economically deprived area, local opinion was divided over the desirability of the project. Further, with 57 conditions to meet and eight or nine suits and appeals to overcome, the approval procedure could go on indefinitely.

The Canadian side asked how serious the U.S. challenge to Canadian ownership claims would be. The U.S. side replied that the United States believed Head Harbour Passage to be international waters. The Administration would not challenge Canadian ownership claims until Pittston had overcome the legal obstacles.

A Canadian pointed out that the Canadian regulations did not constitute a direct challenge since there was another access route to Eastport and because the regulations did not restrict passage but only limited the size of vessel.

This provoked a U.S. participant to interject with some acerbity that Canada's action would permit 5,000 ton "rust-buckets" to ply those dangerous waters but not new tankers constructed in conformity with the Jones Act, "the safest vessels in the world." Head Harbour Passage was no worse than Valdez on the West Coast and there had been no accidents there. The Canadian side responded that Canada would stop the passage of "rust-buckets" with other provisions of the Canada Shipping Act.

Niagara River/Great Lakes Clean-up, Toxic Waste disposal

Discussion was opened by the Canadian side whose spokesperson began by noting that in the case of the Niagara River only one percent of the pollution was sourced in Canada, even though two-thirds of the 400,000 people dependent upon the river for their drinking water resided in Canada. Noting the success of the Lake Erie clean-up, the lake has come back even though Ohio was still discharging 25 per cent of its urban where the effluents into it, he suggested the Niagara River problem was capable of solution. He claimed that regulations were not being enforced and that polluters "are breaking U.S. law with impunity." The result was "a lot of angry people on both sides of the border." No new technology was required.

The Canadian speaker drew a comparison with the outcome of the South Cayuga project in Ontario. The Ontario government had been trying to find a safe location for a modern chemical dump site. In determining its choice, it had waived its own environmental review process. Local citizen protests had forced the government to halt its plans. Even though it would have been the most modern and best safeguarded facility of its type in North America, it had been rejected because of the dangers inherent in the process.

The U.S. spokesperson, who had had direct experience of the Love Canal, said he shared the concerns of the Canadian side and many of the implied conclusions of the Canadian argument. He had accused the E.P.A. of "incompetence and inertia" under its previous leadership and the current leadership had simply compounded the incompetence. He was especially critical of the Administration's suspension of regulations governing land-filling of liquid hazardous wastes. However, the new Administration has been very responsible and effective in their actions vis-à-vis the Niagara (which he attributed to the impact of a Mike Wallace report on "Sixty Minutes").

The E.P.A. has created a group to study the question. It has worked closely with Canada and was now ready to report. The current head of the E.P.A. had been a member of this group.

She hoped to use the Niagara situation to produce the beginnings of a rapprochement with Canada and was bending over backward to produce action acceptable to Canada. She had already agreed to meet six of eight Canadian concerns and was about to agree to the other two. She was looking forward to a joint news conference shortly to announce a clean-up campaign. The Canadian spokesperson replied by saying that the U.S. speaker's information was most welcome.

Discussion next focussed on the amount of toxic dioxins going into the river. The U.S. speaker commented that the report to which he referred was going to state that the drinking water was safe, despite what was going into the river, because it was treated. The Canadian side expressed worries about long-term health hazards and asked what would happen if a treatment system were to break down.

The U.S. side responded that the E.P.A. and New York State would tighten up pre-treatment enforcement, including dumping regulations and would prosecute. He added that he had recently been successful in obtaining $4 million to upgrade the Niagara Falls, New York, treatment plant, although he was unsure about its ultimate effect. He then emphasized that elected people had a duty to avoid exacerbating public concern, saying that the public must be re-assured that the drinking water was safe but that should not become an excuse for inaction. This, he noted, was a difficult line to tread but giving credibility to alarmist concerns should be avoided.

A Canadian, referring back to the fate of the Ontario government's dump-site, expressed puzzlement about what to do in the face of community opposition. The facilities are needed but everyone says "don't put it here". A Congressman added the problem of the synergistic reaction of chemicals, the spontaneous creation of new chemicals, to the list of concerns.

Canada-U.S. Salmon Talks

A U.S. Senator opened the discussion saying that he wished to talk about the forthcoming Craig decision (dealing with native fishing rights in the U.S.) upon the salmon interception problem. The earlier Bolt decision on the same matter had now been expanded to apply in Alaskan waters. That meant that commercial fishermen could not begin their operations until the Indians had taken enough upstream to meet their needs. He anticipated that the Craig decision would bar the interception of any Columbia River salmon to U.S. fishermen. In the past there had been a sort of balance struck on restrictions which applied to Canadian and U.S. salmon fishermen but these U.S. decisions could create a real imbalance. He went on to express the fear that the imbalance would in turn produce pressures upon U.S. politicians to require Canadians to adhere to the bans imposed by the U.S. courts.

A Canadian participant noted that Canada was now facing the problem of removing some people from the salmon fishing industry because there were too many boats and too few fish. The Alaskan authorities were very concerned about the diminishing stocks of Chinook and Coho salmon and had got that message through to the Canadian government. However, the concern just raised seemed to be new. He asked if the Canadian government had been made aware.

Another U.S. speaker said that he thought that the court decision in question had not yet been rendered. He went on to express the belief that the earlier Bolt decision had disrupted the possibility of dealing with the management of salmon stocks in a rational way. Nonetheless, talks with Canada had been constructive although slow.

The U.S. spokesperson returned to the Craig decision to warn that it may go so far that the fish and game authorities would be unable to enforce it. Even now 60 per cent of what was left for the Indians was not getting to them because of illegal interceptions. His purpose in raising the issue was to give warning of the potential implications of the court decision.

The Canadian side asked if he was warning that the decision he anticipated would add another layer of complication to the current situation and thus worsen it. The reply was "yes". The U.S. spokesperson went on to say that much of the Alaskan fishing industry was almost dead because of the overfishing of stocks passing through areas fished by Canada.

A Canadian noted that the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs had allowed band by-laws directed towards conservation to become nationally enforceable. He anticipated that this would ultimately diminish federal control and produce problems analogous to those being experienced in the U.S. as a result of the Bolt decision. He concluded by saying the message the Canadians were getting from the discussion was that Canada must tighten its control of the fishery or the U.S. would "loosen up". The U.S. side agreed that it would be impossible to have Alaskans cut back their catch only to see Canadians increase theirs.

Dixon Entrance Boundary Dispute, Stikine River

The U.S. spokesperson began the discussion by briefly outlining the rival claims of Canada and the United States to coastal waters following the settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute in 1903. In essence, Canada claimed that the settlement applied to coastal waters as well as to the land boundaries. The United States disagreed. The result was that ownership of Dixon Entrance as well as other waters was in dispute. This situation has obvious implications for the management of the fishery.

The U.S. speaker said that the overlap in the two countries' fishing laws and attempts to enforce them, especially as they apply to the halibut, salmon (Pink, Chum and Coho) and crab fisheries, had resulted in great tension, threats and shooting incidents. British Columbia was attempting to enforce the Canadian boundary interpretation. The U.S. Coast Guard was doing the same to Canadian fishermen. A U.S. Coast Guard cutter has been stationed in the area to keep fighting fishermen apart. He said that had Canada sent a government vessel as well, "we might have had a war".

Similar frustrations were being produced by the situation on the Stikine and Tarcoo River systems. The State of Alaska managed the fisheries off the escarpment of the rivers but the salmon spawn in Canada and there was now a large Canadian commercial fishery on the other side. In this kind of situation management of the Chinook and King salmon runs was impossible.

The Senator said he was raising the issues because he did not know what to do about them. He asked for the Canadian delegation's advice and assistance. He added that there are also issues in dispute in the Beaufort Sea. He said that he would like to see Canada and the United States pursue a Western boundary settlement "even if our East Coast friends can't agree".

The Canadian side replied that the Maine boundary waters decision when rendered might provide some principles which could be applied to the West Coast dispute.

The Canadian co-chairman gave an undertaking to raise the issue with the Canadian ministers concerned.

Flathead

The Flathead item on the agenda was called, but there being "no real excitement" on the part of the U.S. side, it was decided not to pursue discussions.

Skagit River

The Canadian side opened the discussion with its spokesperson summarizing the issue briefly. An agreement had allowed the U.S. to construct a dam across the river to supply power to Seattle. Seattle now wished to have the dam raised so as to permit greater power production. Raising the dam would result in the ruining of a unique Canadian beauty spot, offering trout fishing and other recreation—all vanishing commodities on the lower mainland of B.C. The settlement reached on the original dam resulted in a mere $34,000 in compensation being paid by Seattle. The 1942 order allowing the dam was subject to IJC approval of the terms of compensation. Such approval, he said, was never received.

There was unanimous political opposition to the project in Canada. The way out was to resolve the dispute by negotiating a power transfer. To date, there has been no agreement despite talks and he, as a result, "has some doubts about the good faith of Seattle Light and Power". He noted that the IJC has said that it would "resolve" the issue by April 2 but he did not know how. In concluding he said that he found it to be "profoundly unsettling that an order, issued in 1942, and which had to take into account none of the concerns which are now routine in such matters, might be the basis of a settlement".

In reply, a U.S. participant agreed that 1942 might be a long time ago, but the compensation agreement had been reached in 1967. Seattle had the right, twice agreed to, to dam water in Canada. There were environmental consequences but they were essentially the same as for any dam, and less than for coal-fired generators discussed earlier. The Canadian spokesperson replied that he did not believe there is a "tittle of evidence" that the IJC has approved the compensation agreement. If it were just Canadians complaining it could perhaps be seen as a purely Canadian concern, but U.S. citizens are opposed to the project as well.

The U.S. side responded by wondering how Canada could muster such indignation after its action in Head Harbour. The United States has legal ground upon which to base its actions, the agreements of 1942 and 1967. In the case of Head Harbour, Canada has acted unilaterally and without regard for the economic consequences to Maine. The dispute could be settled if B.C. would supply power at the same cost. Canada seemed unwilling to live up to the agreement and to supply alternate power at comparable costs. Unless Canada came up with an acceptable compromise, the dam would probably be built and Canada would have to live with it.

Law of the Sea

A Canadian delegate introduced the subject. By 1979 a large measure of agreement seemed to have been reached and Canadians were disappointed when the Reagan Administration indicated its intention to open all points for reconsideration. Canada has welcomed the recent U.S. decision to come back to the table and to drop the reconsideration of all but the arrangements for sea-bed mining. He expressed the strong hope that the U.S. would not go the route of a series of mini sea-bed mining agreements although there seemed to be the possibility of such an agreement in the offing. He reminded the U.S. delegation that Canada, Japan and Belgium have the capability to pursue a similar course although they are unlikely to do so for "a variety of reasons". He said he hoped there would be no mini sea-bed treaty before Geneva.

The spokesperson then went on to present his own views of the likely Canadian reaction to the four points which the U.S. seemed likely to press most strongly in its search for revisions. The first sticking point for the United States seemed to be a dissatisfaction with the international bureaucratic arrangements. Here Canada might be willing to compromise but the arrangements were so complex because of the number of nations involved it would be difficult. Second, he saw little difficulty in persuading Canada to agree that the U.S. should have a "more effective decision-making role" than one vote on the council. Third, on the question of the automatic transfer of technology to the international agency, Canada had some sympathy for the United States and might go along with some modification. For example, a simple time delay before making new technology public might work because in fact there has been very little success in keeping commercially applicable technological advances secret for long. Fourth, regarding cutting in liberation movements such as the PLO on the financial benefits, Canada was unlikely to support such a move.

In concluding, he said that Canada believed agreement on the Law of the Sea to be extremely important and wanted the treaty signed. Even though some progress has been made without the actual treaty, for example, the virtual acceptance of a two-hundred mile economic zone, the Canadian spokesperson expressed the hope that the full treaty would be signed before the end of 1982. He believed that if the U.S. maintained some flexibility, it should be possible.

In response, a U.S. participant said he thought the Canadian speaker was correct in his assessment of the prospects for the United States reaching an accommodation. He said that he had discussed the matter frequently and unofficially with a knowledgeable person in the Administration who had expressed the belief that the U.S. would take what it could get and sign.

A Democratic Congressman said that he had been encouraged by the Canadian assessment of the likely Canadian stand and the prospect of some support for U.S. positions. Ten years of talks had permitted other nations to catch up with the considerable U.S. lead in sea-bed technology. Sea-bed mining would permit the U.S. to become self-sufficient in minerals, such as manganese, copper and nickel. The very notion that the United States should share with CPEC (Copper) nations, such as Zambia and Zaire, its ocean bottom technology was "ridiculous". Any Law of the Sea Treaty would be closely examined by Congress. He was encouraged by the possibility of Canadian support because without change the United States would "go it alone".

A Canadian participant intervened to say that Canada would manifest the kind of accommodating attitude the first Canadian speaker had held out only in order to draw the United States into the agreement. Some kind of régime must be put in place before the seabed is exploited "or a can of worms will be opened that we can never close". The world did not need new areas of instability. He suggested that if the mandatory sharing of technology were removed from the treaty, financial sharing required would not represent a big cost to the United States.

A U.S. Senator observed that he found the discussion to this point to be "encouraging" but warned about being sanguine about Senate ratification even if the Administration signed. He referred to the International Seabed authority as a "floating pagoda". He said that the group of seventy-seven would be enabled to "not only take our money and our technology" but also "to tell us when and under what circumstances we could expand." National security was involved and the seabed minerals held the key to U.S. security. He asked why it was necessary to create a new form of government in order to have revenue sharing. The U.S. would pay into a fund; he saw no need for international legislative jurisdiction. The Seabed Authority was the international bureaucrats' way of ensuring they would still have jobs when the negotiations were over.

The Canadian side asked who, in the absence of the Seabed Authority, would be the arbitrator if the United States and Germany or Japan got into a dispute. The U.S. side replied that the Truman Doctrine had worked for the world whether the world liked it or not. A dispute mechanism could be set up with utilization of it on the basis of payment into the fund. A Canadian participant stated that Canada would not back away from the need for an International Seabed Authority. In the absence of rules, who could prevent a spate of law suits around the world resulting in grievous damage to U.S. commercial properties? A U.S. delegate replied that U.S. legislation would take care of the latter problem by specifying that the U.S. government would assume responsibility for any such risks encountered by investors.

A Canadian speaker went on to raise a question concerning drilling rigs. It was his understanding that legislation before the Congress would provide that only U.S. citizens could raise complaints about the safety of a rig. If this were the case, Canada might well have to decide that U.S. rigs would not be allowed to operate in Canadian waters. "What is the situation?"

The U.S. side replied that the legislation in question proposed the well-known bare boats concept. However, the legislation might well be side-tracked in the Senate as a result of the recent accident. So as not to appear retaliatory, a Congressman added that there was similar legislation before the House, but no pressure for action. Both Senators and Congressmen said the legislation had nothing to do with the accident but was an attempt to amend the Jones Act.

The Canadian who had raised the issue asked for the rationale for an amendment discriminating against non-U.S. citizens who would be barred from suing the owners. A U.S. delegate asked why rigs should be treated any differently than a drilling vessel. It was a well-established practice that a U.S. citizen could sue the owner of a bare boat charter but that foreigners could not.

After this brief side excursion, a Congressman drew the discussion back to the Law of the Sea saying, in answer to previously raised Canadian concerns, that U.S. national legislation would ensure that U.S. companies engaged in seabed mining would properly observe environmental concerns and that U.S. agencies would enforce the legislation.

A U.S. Senator ventured the opinion that voting rights were the critical issue. It was impossible to have 150 equal partners, but if adjustments were made and the U.S. Administration was willing to sign the revised treaty, he thought the Senator would accept it.

A Congressman asked if some other possible regulatory mechanism was possible. Why not the World Court with an expediting procedure, for example, he asked. He acknowledged the need for a mechanism to permit international review of environmental compliance, but the present treaty arrangements did not fill the bill.

A U.S. Senator interjected: "Let me tell you where I'm coming from". The U.S. was the umbrella for the free world. It needs manganese to make its steel. At the moment 98 percent of that manganese was imported. "Why", he asked, "would anyone in the free world want us to have to ask permission of the Warsaw Pact before we go about getting the minerals we need to make ourselves more secure and to continue to protect the free world?"

A Canadian concluded this item with an expression of hope that the United States would not isolate itself from the rest of the free world at Geneva.

The Garrison Dam Project

The subject was introduced by a U.S. participant. He reported that the court of appeal had lifted the injunction against proceeding with construction. There would be $14 million more in this year's budget for the project. All work underway would drain back into the Missouri basin in keeping with the undertaking to Canada.

The Garrison dam should upgrade the water in North Dakota; the water being diverted into the project was the best water in North America aside from that in the Canadian Rockies. Canadian fisheries experts had been invited to come and carry out an inspection last year. Three points have to be made, he continued. First, North Dakota needs water. Second, there is nothing wrong with the water being used. Third, the U.S. wants to reassure Canada.

Addressing the issue of biota transfer, the U.S. spokesperson said that it has been going on for millenia between the two watersheds "each time a duck takes off". He said: "We do not intend to foul our own nest". The water would pass through the three main cities of North Dakota. The Red River was now polluted because of low stream flow and the project would improve this situation.

In response, the Canadian spokesperson said Canada has nothing against those parts of the project which keep the waters in the Missouri basin. Canada was guided by the Boundary Waters Treaty which does not permit transfer between two basins without consent. He said Canadians are worried about the possible impact of rough fish upon the valuable commercial fishery in Manitoba. He was skeptical that current engineering could offer guarantees that such a transfer would not take place and referred to the new IJC report in support of his contention.

The U.S. spokesperson noted that there were already carp in the Red. Shad had not moved North. With reference to the IJC report, he noted that the scientific report was much different than the summary report which had been prepared by politicians.

Another Canadian member said he was "very disturbed" about the U.S. side claim that the integrity of the IJC report was questionable. The two nations depend implicitly upon the accuracy and objectivity of the IJC. Confusion results from the conflicting statements.

A Congressman offered the observation that Garrison is "the last of the dust bowl babies" and that it should be re-evaluated. It was going to affect 12 wildlife refuges and 70,000 acres. It would cost $1 billion. While the U.S. needed new crop lands, the Garrison dam would inundate some already in production. The paybacks would be $19 million in irrigation and $800 million in power. The project's viability was thus largely dependent upon power paybacks. He said he was very concerned about the wetlands impact.

The U.S. spokesperson responded by saying that the Congressman's group advocated no irrigation and direct supply to cities. That approach, he said, would worsen the problem of biota transfer. Moreover, in a drought, the wetlands would dry up. What Garrison would replace them with would be artificial to be sure, but would guarantee 180,000 acres of wetlands for waterfowl even in a drought.

Central America

The situation in Central America was the subject of an extended discussion, with the U.S. side leading off.

In both Costa Rica and Honduras, the spokesman said, the Administration was attempting to bolster the governments with increased aid. Each would receive $75 million additional this year. Honduras would also receive new military aid and the United States would attempt to support and strengthen the efforts of the IMF in Costa Rica. Nicaragua was a difficult problem for the United States, since its régime was perceived as moving towards totalitarianism. The Administration asserted that the revolution in El Salvador was being controlled from Nicaragua and that the Sandanistas were providing increasing amounts of aid and weapons to the left in El Salvador.

For El Salvador, the spokesperson continued, the hope of the Administration was that the election would enhance international support for the centre and increasingly isolate the extreme right and the extreme left. El Salvador would receive an additional $200 million in military aid and, would in addition, be the recipient of the largest amount of aid under the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

The Administration was finding it increasingly hard to support the government of Guatemala, "the most repressive régime in the world". A special envoy sent to persuade the régime to mend its ways had met with no success. The Administration would supply $250,000 in military aid this year as a tiny carrot with the message: "More respect for human rights and more U.S. aid will be forthcoming". The March 7 presidential elections might hold out some promise for improvement; at least, he said, "the Reagan Administration is on its knees praying this will happen". Guatemala was seen as being much more important strategically, especially to Mexico, than was El Salvador.

A Canadian participant commented that Central America had not occupied a large part of Canadian consciousness until the last year and a half or two years. This raising of consciousness had been largely due to the efforts of the churches, which tended to support the Franco-Mexican position on El Salvador.

The Canadian government had been temporizing, but tended to have a different perception of what was appropriate than did the United States. Canada had always had a different position on Cuba and Canadians believed that if the United States had been more sympathetic to the Castros and the Sandanistas there would have been less likelihood of their turning towards doctrinaire and totalitarian Marxist-Leninism. He suggested that the United States should become more supportive of reform in Central America if reform were not to be carried out by guerrillas. This speaker mentioned in passing that recommendations contained in a recent House of Commons committee report had probably helped to dissuade the government from sending official observers to the elections in El Salvador.

Canada was continuing to provide aid to Nicaragua although if it ever became clear that Nicaragua "intended to go the totalitarian route" aid would probably cease. Canada opposed outside military assistance to Central America and would be very much opposed to any kind of direct military intervention, he concluded.

A U.S. participant commented that many of the problems in Latin America could be traced to the "benign indifference" of Americans although too often they had acted as "the ugly big brother" and had intervened militarily in the area in the past. The legacy was mingled fear and respect. The Alliance for Progress had been the best attempt to alter the situation. However, the United States was impatient and seemed to lack the fortitude and tolerance to pursue such initiatives through to a successful conclusion, said this speaker. The Alliance for Progress had "two prongs":

1. The creation of a situation in which all Latin American nations would have constitutional means of changing governments; and

2. The provision of support for those régimes moving toward democracy.

The approach generally was that as a country developed democratic institutions, the United States would provide further assistance towards the realization of the country's economic aspirations. This delegate said that he was supporting the present Administration in its "newly awakened and belated awareness" that aid must be provided before problems become crises. One of the biggest mistakes the U.S. had made was the covert intervention against Allende who had been elected.

A Canadian member said that traditionally the Canadian position had been to support reform whether or not Canada agreed with the particular form it might take. Canada was highly supportive of the Caribbean Basin Initiative. In response to a question about Canadian reaction to a U.S. blockade of arms from outside sources one Canadian suggested that Canada would be likely to object but another Canadian said that Canada had no official position. It supplies no arms to El Salvador and is saying quietly to Cuba and the United States that they should not do so. However, he continued if the guerrillas are being supplied with arms, Canada could hardly deny the government the right to receive arms.

A U.S. speaker observed that the United States had been inattentive to developments in the area and mainly unsuccessful in its actions so far. But there was now a real problem. In the next four to five weeks the United States could find itself in the position of having been the only country in the world to have supported elections in El Salvador. Duarte may come out of them weakened and the "madman D'Aubisson would be very difficult to work with as Prime Minister". It was probably he who had Bishop Romero killed. All the U.S.' allies said that negotiations are the route to follow. The United States was alone. The NATO allies have never rushed into the breach to support the United States and in this case "you've all told us we're wrong". Moreover the United States had begun to have its own doubts.

U.S. allies including Canada should tell the President that they are willing to get involved if the United States pursues negotiations, he said. Both the left and the right will be shooting people going to the polls. "Give us a way of saying that the elections aren't going to work and that we are going to sit down with our hemispheric friends and France and try to work out a solution". Money alone won't work nor are there other simple solutions.

There was now a small but well-organized and armed element of the left in El Salvador which was undemocratic and would accept nothing other than a military solution that leaves them in power. They must be dealt with as well as the right. The current U.S. policy, which was well-intentioned "is going to hell in a handcart". The Administration had thought it was supporting a well-intentioned, stable, pluralistic régime but now it seems that troops will have to be sent in, an action no one wants but which appeared inevitable unless the United States received some help from its friends.

Apart from El Salvador, this delegate continued, Guatemala was about to fall apart. As chaos expands, Americans were sure to be attacked and killed and that would provide the United States with an excuse to use arms. The U.S., Mexico and Canada must go beyond saying only "let's negotiate" and must decide how to contain or eliminate the far left as a factor. The modern weapons in use by guerrillas in the area came chiefly from U.S. left-overs in Vietnam and the Soviets may not be directly involved. This speaker wondered if the Cubans and Nicaraguans were to be blockaded to prevent them from introducing more weapons into the area, whether the French would be also, since the French were selling sophisticated weapons to Nicaragua.

When a Canadian noted that Canada was officially supporting the elections although it would not send observers, U.S. speakers replied that such was true but the support was not enthusiastic.

An earlier U.S. speaker said the House had urged President Reagan to support negotiations. Mexico had offered its good offices to achieve a reconciliation between the United States and Nicaragua and for new initiatives in El Salvador. This might be the way out. While the Administration had not yet formulated its response he thought the Portillo initiative was interesting because it did not necessarily endorse the political legitimacy of the left. It simply offered the facilities of Mexico to bring about an accommodation. Portillo was saying that Cuba would be prepared to participate if Mexico leads. Would Canada endorse such an approach, it was asked? Another delegate added that it might help if Prime Minister Trudeau supported Portillo's idea.

Another U.S. delegate noted that Secretary Haig had neither embraced nor actively opposed the initiative. Portillo's motivation was almost certainly that of trying to climb off the limb on which he had placed himself with the Franco-Mexican initiative which had been poorly received in Latin America. In contrast, the more recent initiative had been very well received.

A Canadian delegate said that she found it difficult to believe, given recent history, that the United States could accept Portillo's initiative if it were to involve Cuba. The U.S. side replied that the United States was becoming more cautious and increasingly doubtful about the effect of the elections and was casting about for something else that might work.

A U.S. Senator asked, rhetorically, how many more Cubans the United States could afford in Latin America and the Caribbean. Mexico was "scared to death". Southern Mexico was already involved and the line had to be drawn somewhere. He believed that Cuba was stage-managing the unrest throughout the area and that its most immediate targets were St. Lucia and El Salvador. The United States had troops in Europe to keep out the Soviets, why not then a U.S. military umbrella for Latin America he asked. While he did not support the use of troops, he did not rule it out.

A Congressman submitted that Canada, the United States and Mexico had a deep common interest in stopping a Communist take-over in Latin America and the Caribbean and they must stop being apologetic about it. It was not the U.S.' fault that the only alternative to the extreme left seemed to be the extreme right. The United States had attempted to attach "democratic strings" to its aid and when that had not worked, it had plowed billions into the area anyway. There have been "prodigious" increases in "productivity, health and literacy" as a result but the fact remained that the United States could not export its democratic institutions.

Having just returned from El Salvador, another Congressman offered the view that the United States stood in danger of making a dual mistake:

1. believing that a quick military knockout blow is possible; and
2. supporting elections which won't work.

Latin America had great confidence in Canada and the possibility of its playing a constructive role. There seemed to be more faith in Canada than in the O.A.S.. More involvement by Canada was again urged subsequently by another U.S. delegate.

Turning to earlier remarks by a U.S. Senator, the U.S. speaker continued that there was great difference between U.S. troops in Europe supporting democracies and U.S. troops in Latin America supporting repressive régimes. The violations of human rights in El Salvador were "horrendous" and he personally had caught the military in the cover-up of a massacre in San Antonio Aboté. The bodies had all been shot in the back of the head, there had been no firefight. Although he had lived in Haiti during "Papa Doc's" régime, it had been tame compared with El Salvador. He could recount horrifying stories of the shooting and burning of children on the grounds that they were "the seeds of revolution". Duarte was not in control, he said; Garcia was.

The people of El Salvador had no faith in the elections. One third of the population were under guerrilla control and would not vote, one quarter of the population had left the country and could not vote. The army was threatening prison or worse for those who did not vote. What was needed was the establishment of peace before elections were held. Portillo's offer must be accepted and an international force to interdict the arms flow established.

Another Congressman said that the present Administration had inherited the problem and that its response was not much different than the response would have been from any other Administration. He noted that few speakers had made any mention of Communism whose spread was inimical to U.S. interests. Was the United States paranoid in fearing the establishment of a string of Communist governments in Latin America? He pointed to South-East Asia as a possible parallel in this respect as well as in the area of human rights. Recalling the attacks made upon the South Vietnamese régime for its violations of human rights, he pointed out that what was now happening in Vietnam and Cambodia was far worse. Did Canadians believe his type of concern to be important?

In response, the Canadian spokesperson said that Canada certainly did not wish to see the establishment of Communist domination of the area and the issue was how could it best be prevented. The fear in Canada was that current U.S. policies would produce that undesirable result. The United States he said, cannot leave those "evil, repressive, inhuman régimes in place". It could prop them up or change them, but if the United States was not the agent of change, the Communists would be. Like other speakers he supported the Portillo initiative but concluded that if the only alternative to Communism were U.S. intervention, then intervention should be on the side of change.

One Canadian member said that Canada "has borne no responsibility for the course of world affairs since Korea" and that he was sick and tired of Canadians carping and criticizing the United States. As a country Canada had not pulled its weight and had, indeed, run away from its responsibilities. He did not want Communists in Latin America and would advocate three changes in Canadian foreign policy in the area:

1. "no more arm's length";
2. a more activist stance including earlier involvement in multilateral efforts in Latin America; and
3. more substantial support for the United States.

However, another Canadian delegate pointed out that Canada was not a military nation, that the government could not take a more aggressive military posture because they would not be supported by Canadians. Canada had earned its international respect through its participation in peace-keeping operations and while the reputation might or might not be deserved, Canada could not contemplate an orthodox military role. This delegate asked why, if the United States were convinced the U.S.S.R. was at the bottom of all these troubles, it did not go after them economically where they were vulnerable rather than through a series of "nickle and dime wars".

A U.S. Senator enumerated a number of areas of agreement on this problem area. No one wanted the Marxist left to win (and all the left is not Marxist); no one wanted the régimes currently in place; no one wanted Soviet proxy states in the area although there was disagreement about whether there was a difference between a Communist and a proxy state. Improvements in human rights alone would not accomplish what was desired. No one wanted military intervention. It was not sufficient to merely criticize from inside or outside the United States. The United States could be as enlightened as possible in its policies but there would still be a need for intervention and it must be multilateral. Arms supplies must be interdicted but such would not be credible if carried out by the United States alone. Finally, the free world and the Northern Hemisphere must get together urgently and do something more than cutting off U.S. arms supplies and deciding to send money. Risks had to be taken.

In summing up, a U.S. participant said that there have been "gross and grotesque" atrocities in El Salvador. Duarte was responsible for them only in the sense that he could not stop them but one should not be blinded from the atrocities of the left. Castro was now a popular hero but his régime began with a bloodbath. Positive results would not flow from negotiations with dedicated Marxists and this participant spoke against the idea of Prime Minister Trudeau endorsing the Portillo initiative, an action which would undermine the electoral process. Rather, Portillo's offer should be seen as a fall back position. He urged delegates to remember that the United States had been terribly disillusioned by the Sandinistas who had set aside all their promises of democracy. There would be no free elections for five years, there was no free press, there was no rule of law in the taking of property and there was no respect for human rights.

Middle East

A U.S. delegate introduced the topic of the Middle East, commenting that the United States had been pursuing a "two-track policy". The first which had been "pretty much a flop" was to develop a strategic consensus in the area; the AWACS sale to Saudi Arabia was a part of this approach. The second had been the pursuit of peace issues and the extension of negotiations based on the Camp David accords. Now that the United States was bearing down more heavily on Israel and Egypt, more attention must be devoted to land rights, water rights and Palestinian rule in East Jerusalem. Talks would continue even though there was some worldwide dissatisfaction with the Camp David approach since "it is the only game in town".

The Canadian spokesperson said while Canada supported the Camp David approach, some re-thinking was going on which could result in a more comprehensive approach to a solution along the lines of the European model. A Palestinian settlement was needed and the Austrian model might be useful. He noted with approval that the U.S. approach now seemed to be more even-handed.

The U.S. spokesperson commented that the United States was "terribly anxious" about South Lebanon where there could be an outbreak of violence at any moment. It was uncertain whether Ambassador Habib's mission could prevent such an outbreak through diplomacy. No solution seemed possible in the short term. Aside from Lebanon, a bright spot was the movement towards a successful conclusion of the first aspect of the peace treaty. The Israelis seemed firm about completing their withdrawal from the eastern portion of the Sinai despite some internal problems and the multilateral force was about ready to move in. The question was what Egypt would do when it had the Sinai. President Murbarak had more of a tilt towards the Arabs than had Sadat. In response to a Canadian question, this participant said that Assad seemed likely to retain control in Syria and that there would seem to be little likelihood of any immediate change in Iraq.

Poland

Introducing the discussion of the Polish situation, a Canadian spokesperson said that it should be assessed within the larger context of Eastern Europe. In terms of a diminution of oppression, it was the Canadian view that the Helsinki Accords had resulted in some positive moves. But Poland, pre-Solidarity, had been one of the countries least affected by the Accords and this, coupled with an ineffectual regime, might have helped to produce a situation in which a Solidarity could appear. Solidarity's tactic of continually pressing the limits had been very impressive and for a time seemed destined to produce a miracle but the dream collapsed because Solidarity could not produce economic solutions as well as political reforms. The opportunity had now been lost although some beneficial residual effects might remain.

This participant observed that the Canadian reaction to the imposition of military rule had been that while it was to be deplored, it was to be preferred to direct Soviet intervention with the likelihood of great loss of life. Canada had, nonetheless, urged the early lifting of military rule, the release of detainees and the restoration of reforms gained. To demonstrate its disapproval of continued military rule, Canada had introduced some minor economic sanctions although it has not cut off food aid.

A Conservative Member of Parliament commented, that the official opposition in Canada disagreed with the policy of the Canadian government in this instance. The opposition wanted much stronger sanctions. Poland owed Canada $750 million in grain purchase credits up to the end of last year and that was likely to reach $1¼ billion by the end of this year. Future purchases should be put on a cash basis. If that were to mean starvation for the Poles, then the remedy would be outright aid. Canada had given Poland higher fishing quotas within its 200 mile zone and the quid pro quo was to have been the Polish purchase of $8 million of Canadian finished products. This had not taken place and the Polish fishing rights should be cancelled, he said. Nor would the official opposition allow Canadian companies to bid on the sour-gas pipeline in the U.S.S.R. But another Canadian delegate disagreed that the solution was to let the Poles starve. Sanctions had not proved effective in the case of Afghanistan. Canada had introduced sanctions against Poland only so as not to leave the United States out on a limb.

The U.S. spokesperson said that unlike Canada, the U.S. government had seen a direct linkage between the Soviet Union and the actions of the Polish Government. One of the great concerns of the U.S. Government was the increasing dependence of the Western European economy upon trade links with Eastern Europe, particularly the gas pipeline between the U.S.S.R. and West Germany.

Another worry was that the recent bank loan default of Poland may be "repeated and replicated in other areas". Further, the continued repression in Poland disturbed the United States and since Polish action "depends upon Soviet accession" the United States considered it must "exact a price". Hence the sanctions.

A U.S. Senator commented that NATO stood in jeopardy of splitting apart and that Canada was naive in its view of what was at stake, its future perhaps depending on its ability to engender a common stand about what is to be done about the Polish debt and other issues. The Soviets, he asserted, had been involved and they would not allow Solidarity to stage a come-back. With thirty-eight divisions ready to move into Poland, they might not have actually given the orders but they had been nonetheless, directly involved.

Unless the United States in conjunction with Germany and the rest of NATO came up with some agreed responses for new situations, such as loan defaults, then there could be real trouble this participant continued. U.S. actions recently had contributed to placing NATO in disarray. For example, conflicting U.S. Administration statements about nuclear strategy had helped to produce the European peace movement and the course of pursuing only a one track policy of weapons upgrading, of what was to have been a two track policy of being prepared to upgrade theatre nuclear weapons while vigorously pursuing arms limitations talks, had been unsettling. Further, the United States had not discussed burden-sharing if Poland should go bankrupt, which event, would produce 38 per cent unemployment in West Germany alone.

A U.S. Senator said that the people of the United States were becoming increasingly frustrated by the apparent lack of willingness of its allies to co-operate in any meaningful way with U.S. efforts to contain the U.S.S.R. and to share in an equitable fashion the burdens of Western defence. As a result there was a growing sentiment in favour of the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Europe.

Nuclear Strategy and Defence Issues

A Canadian Senator opened discussion on nuclear strategy and defence issues saying that while Canada had participated from the beginning in the development of atomic weapons, it had taken a decision in 1945 not to acquire nuclear arms for itself. It had, for a brief period in the 1960's, possessed a number of nuclear weapons systems all of which have not been discarded except the warheads for missiles carried by Voodoo interceptors. These had been retained since the aircraft would be ineffective without them but as the new CF-18, which has no such need, comes into service they will be abandoned completely. However, Canada did not dispute the need for strategic and theatre nuclear weapons within the Western Alliance. Tactical nuclear weapons were not construed by Canada as being defensive. While Canada would accept none on its territory it neither encouraged nor discouraged its allies in this regard.

But Canada was firmly committed to participation in NATO and NORAD and was by no means as pessimistic about the future of NATO as was one of the earlier speakers.

The alliance might require some modification and it might experience some shocks, but it had survived others such as the withdrawal of France from the integrated military command. Canada's presence in Europe had more political than military value, helping to legitimize the U.S. presence by ensuring that the United States was not the only North American nation there.

This delegation deplored the way Canada had allowed its armed forces to become run down but said there were now signs that the trend was being reversed. A recent Senate sub-committee report which concluded that Canada had been "delinquent" in matters of defence and had urged increased resources for Canada's NATO commitments had received extraordinary attention. Among continuing Canadian priorities, he said, were the encouragement of SALT and MBFR talks, the search for the means to eliminate chemical weapons, the furtherance of nuclear non-proliferation and the eventual balanced reduction of conventional weapons.

With respect to the bilateral Defence Production Sharing Agreement, this spokesman said that recent major Canadian purchases such as the Orion and the CF-18 had produced an unfavourable balance for Canada of some $200 million. This deficit should not be allowed to increase to unmanageable proportions. Canada was also concerned about recent Congressional action such as the Bayh Amendment which would require all defence R & D to be conducted in the United States, and the Berry Amendment which prohibited procurement from foreign sources of such military requirements as food, clothing and specialty metals. These were not helpful in maintaining a balance. Further, Canada had been concerned about the cost implications for its CF-18 program if the U.S. purchases of the F/A-18 were reduced. Though now somewhat reassured in that regard, Canada had begun to be concerned about the future availability of parts for the Aurora (Orion). The United States should pay attention to the impact upon its allies of its own current decisions. U.S. delegates declared themselves to be encouraged by Canada's support for greater military readiness. A U.S. speaker said that on the matter of nuclear arms his own view was that the rate of arms build-up must be reduced and that the best hope for such accomplishment was the pursuit of SALT. Another Congressman noted that in 21 of the 23 categories of arms the United States lagged behind the U.S.S.R. so that, although the arms race was a "horrible waste", the United States could not stop until they do. But a Canadian delegate pointed out that a House Committee had recently heard a senior Soviet official, Mr. Georgi Arbatov, who had employed the same sort of argument in defence of the Soviet arms build-up.

Plenary

For Committee I, two delegates, a Canadian M.P. and a U.S. Senator, reviewed the discussions which had taken place on trade and economic issues. The Canadian delegate reported that the most important areas of friction had been the NEP and FIRA. The general tone had been to emphasize the need to resist pressures for further protection in keeping with the objectives of the upcoming GATT ministerial meetings. The U.S. side had clearly indicated that trade in investment and services should be set in the GATT framework.

The U.S. Senator gave a strong personal emphasis to his disagreement with the NEP, aspects of which he said distorted trade flows and was a direct violation of the GATT. These and unfair Canadian trade practices in the agricultural sector, in respect to poultry, eggs, and grains showed a lack of trade reciprocity. The U.S. frustration with Canada and other trading partners would become evident during the upcoming Danforth hearings on reciprocity, he warned.

A Canadian participant rejected the charge of unfair practices by Canada in respect to agricultural trade. He cited U.S. trade diverting practices in agriculture, such as higher U.S. tariffs on Canadian potatoes and corn and quotas on Canadian beef. But bilateral agricultural trade was fair, he concluded. The American co-chairman agreed that there was "far less sinning in the North American market than any other."

Committee II also had two rapporteurs, a Canadian M.P. and a U.S. Senator who summarized the discussions of the bilateral energy topics in considerable detail. An American Congressman said he thought it important to observe that the absence of U.S. comment on the NEP in Committee II did not reflect the state of concern in the U.S. Congress about this Canadian policy.

The Canadian co-chairman, in introducing Committee III's presentation to the plenary, asserted that the discussions in committee had been the best he had experienced in three years. He said that the discussions on acid rain, Central America and the Law of the Sea had been especially "illuminating" and, for that reason, two of them, acid rain and Central America, had been selected by the Committee for additional discussion in plenary.

The Canadian side then opened discussion on acid rain with the spokesperson noting that American members of the committee were "so sympathetic that Canadians gained the impression they may have been speaking to the converted". He said it was worthy of note that four Canadian members of the committee representing the three national political parties had been members of the House of Commons sub-committee on acid rain which had produced a unanimous report. That, he said, was but one of many possible concrete illustrations of the fact that in Canada there exists absolute political unanimity on the need for immediate action. "Those who want to delay, slow down or put off action have no political home to go to". He said that discussions in committee had revealed that the same circumstances did not exist in the United States. He went on to summarize the discussion in committee and concluded by saying that the Canadian side had been encouraged by the knowledge, sympathy and understanding displayed by their American colleagues.

Central American issues were introduced by a U.S. delegate. The rapporteur said that while discussion in committee had touched on all of Central America, its main focus had been El Salvador and he provided a succinct summary of the discussion.

The report provoked some discussion from the floor. A Canadian M.P. intervened to argue that the U.S. faces a fundamental dilemma in Central America. He said that the U.S. feels it must intervene in order to avoid the prospect of the establishment of Marxist régimes but if the intervention went no further than propping up "inhuman" repressive régimes it would be self-defeating. If the course of intervention is chosen there could be "no half-way measures", the U.S. would have to go "all the way" and replace current repressive régimes with moderate democratic governments.

A U.S. Senator said that it was important for Canadians to understand that there were some important inter-relationships among the range of multilateral questions discussed in Committee III, ranging from Poland to Latin America to the modernizing of nuclear forces.

He said that the current U.S. perception of itself, in the words of a song, is "You and me against the world" and that the "you and me referred to two Americans." The belief in the United States is that it has for too long been carrying the rest of the world. Some are even saying from this base "let's pull out of Europe."

The Senator said he was not arguing whether the feeling was right or wrong, but simply stating that it was something that his countrymen felt and that it thus had to be faced. The belief is that in the Caribbean the United States will "be left holding the bag" and that the same will be true in the Persian Gulf where the nation "with the least interest is bearing the greatest expense." These are, he said, deeply held views which cut across geographic and political lines. There is a tendency towards a new isolationism—"the rest of the world be damned." All of this is the product of a period a re-assessment of a profundity which the rest of the world has not yet understood.

Further economic troubles are complicating the process. The United States is a nation which feels itself to be put upon, it is looking for understanding and proofs of friendship. In these circumstances, Canadians would probably be well advised to soft-pedal differences and to focus upon the linkages which Americans are currently drawing among all major issues, he said.

If Canada wants action on acid rain, for example, scientific proof of damage isn't going to be the clincher. But a willingness to co-operate in developing a multilateral approach to El Salvador, or a unified NATO approach to sanctions against Poland might produce a higher likelihood of U.S. accommodations in, for example, economic areas. "We are looking for friends and will reward the friends we find."

In response, a Canadian said that he had been startled by the foregoing. He said that he saw the essential message as being that the United States wanted Canadian help and support internationally. He said that if that was what was desired, the objective was not being furthered when prominent

United States figures speak against the legitimate expression of nationalist feelings in Canada. Such action could only intensify such feelings which are very strong and diminish prospects for co-operation. "Be careful how you react to Canadian nationalism."

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 18, 1982

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

YOUNG OFFENDERS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-61, respecting young offenders and to repeal the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

PETRO-CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, May 20, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA— REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Florence B. Bird, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, presented the following report:

Tuesday, May 18, 1982

The Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science to which was referred Bill S-25, intituled: "An Act respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 11, 1982, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Long title: Strike out the long title and substitute the following:

"An Act to amend the Act of incorporation of the association known as "The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada" ";

2. In the French version, wherever the words "section des femmes auxiliaires" appear, substitute the words "section auxiliaire des femmes";

3. In the French version, wherever the words "direction provinciale des femmes auxiliaires" appear, substitute the words "direction provinciale des sections auxiliaires des femmes".

Respectfully submitted,

FLORENCE B. BIRD
Deputy Chairman

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, since the bill is being reported with amendments, I take it that, unless leave is granted, it will not be taken into consideration this evening. If we wish to deal with this report tonight, we should hear it read fully. If not, perhaps we can dispense with the reading of the amendments and honourable senators will have a chance to read the proposed amendments in due course and before consideration of the report.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have no objection to dispensing with the reading of the amendments, but we might as well have an opportunity to look at the report as it appears in today's Hansard.

Senator Frith: Perhaps I could ask Senator Bird whether she intends to move consideration of the report at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Bird: Yes, I intend to move consideration of the report at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: In that case, honourable senators, we might dispense with the reading of the amendments.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: How long is the report? Will it take longer to dispense with the reading of it than it will to read it?

Senator Frith: By the time we have finished dealing with your objection, Senator Godfrey, it may well take longer.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bird, seconded by the Honourable Senator Guay, P.C., that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt that motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY HANDBOOK

FELICITATIONS TO AUTHOR—DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES
REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, moved:

That the Senate extends its congratulations to John Bejermi, an employee of Parliament, who has authored a new and unique book to commemorate the Constitutional Parliament of 1982 entitled: "Canadian Parliamentary Handbook", published by Borealis Press Limited (Ottawa), which contains the biographies and photographs of all parliamentarians; and

That the Senate requests the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration to consider the matter of providing each member of the Senate and Administration with a copy of the said book.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BANK OF CANADA

INTERVENTIONS IN SUPPORT OF CURRENCY

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I must first confess that I do not understand the operations of the Bank of Canada as they affect the Canadian dollar.

Some Hon. Senators: You are not alone.

Senator Croll: I am totally confused by the answers I have received as a result of inquiries.

According to recent announcements, the Bank of Canada has spent something like $2 billion to support the Canadian dollar. Notwithstanding this action, the dollar continues to decline. In this regard I have several short questions.

How much money has the Bank of Canada spent in each year since 1977 to support the dollar?

In each year, for the past five years, what was the high, the low and the average level of the dollar?

What is the actual method by which the Bank of Canada intervenes to support the dollar?

If the bank has spent money to support the dollar, where did the money go? What institutions or persons inside or outside Canada received the money?

What guidelines and other considerations does the Bank of Canada utilize in determining when and to what extent it should intervene to support the dollar?

What institutions in Canada are selling the dollar short and in what amounts?

Does the Bank of Canada on occasion profit as a result of its dollar support operations and, if so, in what amounts?

If the Leader of the Government cannot answer these questions immediately, I am prepared to wait a week for an answer.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

THE MILITIA—RUMOURED REDUCTION IN BUDGET

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government and has to do with the letter to the Minister of National Defence from the Brockville Rifles of Canada indicating their dismay and concern over what they say is going to be a 50 per cent cut in the militia budget.

Has this matter been brought to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and would he reply in order to allay the fears of that militia unit which has such a strong historic background?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank the Honourable Senator Marshall for giving me notice of this question.

Unfortunately, I do not have any information on the point as yet. Hopefully the question can be answered tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

CP AIR—OTTAWA-TORONTO ROUTE—FARE REDUCTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It relates to an advertisement in the newspapers by CP Air indicating that that company intends to reduce the fare between Ottawa and Toronto by 20 per cent, which means a saving of $35.

At a time when the government should be willing to accept suggestions for restraint, perhaps public servants travelling between Ottawa and Toronto should be advised, or even commanded, to use CP Air since the government would achieve a saving of $35 on each of the thousands of tickets purchased.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): The senator's proposal will certainly be brought to the attention of the government. I can assure him that we are interested in all proposals which may assist the economy.

THE CABINET

SUGGESTED FREEZE ON SALARIES

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. There is a Chinese proverb which says that all journeys, even those of 1,000 miles or more, begin with the first step. Can the Leader of the Government inform the Senate why the Right Honourable the Prime Minister does not stop merely urging the need for restraint and take a first step by freezing, if not reducing, the salaries of himself and his cabinet colleagues? I am sure all other parliamentarians of both houses would commend him and gladly follow his lead.

● (2010)

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a number of proposals are under discussion with respect to wage and indemnity levels in the country, and the Prime Minister has made a number of offers publicly. He has offered proposals and has invited responses from other sectors, inviting economic restraint at all levels from other sectors of the economy and from other levels of government. I know the honourable senator's support will be of interest to the Right Honourable the Prime Minister.

Senator Cook: I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer, but I asked why the Prime Minister does not take the first step.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Surely, you don't expect an answer?

Senator Perrault: I hope honourable senators are aware that there has been a substantial measure of restraint demonstrated by this government, particularly in the past two or three years.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Where?

Senator Perrault: The criticism of the federal government, that somehow it is a profligate entity which is taxing inordinately and spending unwisely, is untrue and totally ignores the fact that while the federal government, in a sense, is the main "collection agency" in this country, the vast majority of revenues go back to the provinces in transfer payments and to individuals. Wage and salary settlements at the federal level and within the federal jurisdiction are lower than those within the provincial sector and lower than those that are to be found in certain other sectors. No one disputes the fact that this is a time for restraint, however, and the senator has voiced a concern of many Canadians.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is it not a fact that the expenditures of the federal government are rising at a rate that greatly exceeds the rise in the cost of living which is supposed to be their guideline? Is it not a fact that the federal deficit estimated last November will be grossly exceeded by the time the figures are in, even at the present rate? Is it not time that the federal government should consider some real measure of restraint instead of this face-saving information called "pap" that they give us from time to time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the opposition seems to—

Senator Flynn: Does the Leader of the Government include Senator Cook in the opposition now?

Senator Perrault: —take a special delight in picking through certain negative economic statistics which are made available from time to time. It is a pursuit which lacks any constructive aspects. Huge spending cutbacks are demanded, yet when the opposition is asked precisely how these massive spending reductions are to be achieved, the opposition is at a loss for words.

Senator Flynn: You are never at a loss for words, but you never say anything.

Senator Perrault: One way to markedly reduce spending in this economy would be to cut deeply into the social programs as well as other programs designed to meet human needs. The opposition continually talk in terms of improving services to people, increasing pensions and increasing investments in various parts of the country. They are continually demanding more employment-creating programs, all of which cost a great deal of money. Where are the proposals for the deep spending cuts which are being demanded by Senator Roblin this evening? At no time have I heard Senator Roblin—perhaps I can be corrected by other honourable senators—suggest specific proposals for deep spending slashes which are going to measurably and markedly reduce the budget and federal spending in this country. Are Senator Cook and others suggesting that we reduce old age security payments, family allowances or payments to veterans? These are the essential, visceral issues to which we must address ourselves.

● (2015)

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne: How about senators?

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Perrault: Where are the specific proposals? It is easy to rise in this chamber and demand that spending be reduced, and to ask why the government is not deeply slashing spending. I ask: Where are the specifics of the proposals for significant reductions?

Senator Cook has suggested that there should be restraint in the public service, salary reductions for MPs and ministers; that they should make sacrifices by cutting their indemnities. As meritorious as such proposals may be, the economies achieved would not cure the economic problems which afflict this country and every other country in the world.

Senator Flynn: A change in government will.

Senator Perrault: Until the opposition produces specific details of the massive cuts they would like to see, their arguments will lack credibility, to say the least.

Senator Cook: But, honourable senators, could such a proposal to reduce the salaries of the Prime Minister and the cabinet not be a first step on a journey of 1,000 miles?

Senator Perrault: There is another Chinese saying, and it is this: "Better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." There has been too much cursing the darkness in here and not enough candle lighting.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Then why don't you bring out a candle?

Senator Perrault: It is so easy to "curse the darkness" and to say how terrible things are. Where is the "light" of constructive ideas, the "light" of useful information which would—

Senator Flynn: You insult the intelligence of this place.

Senator Perrault: —assist the government and Canada? We have seen very little of that kind of “light” in this place.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am inclined to think that Senator Cook’s suggestion of a first step has much merit. One of the things the government must do is re-establish some form of confidence on the part of the business community and the public at large. They should be leading us with their little candle, or whatever it is that guides them, out of this slough of despondency, bankruptcy, unemployment and loss of production and opportunities in which we find ourselves.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Order! Question!

Senator Flynn: You did not intervene when your leader was speaking at length.

Senator Frith: That is not my job; that is your job.

Senator Roblin: The minister wants suggestions for decreasing government expenditure. I have a second little suggestion that I would ask him to consider. It is not a very big one, but if he would take that $90 million he spends on advocacy advertising to convince the people that he is doing a good job and spend it on something more worthwhile, it would do something for us. And if the government would adopt the firm and resolute policy to hold the size of the public service to its present level—that is all we ask, and it is a very modest suggestion—in the course of time it would prove remarkably effective. If my honourable friend would pay attention to the Auditor General, who says—

Senator Frith: Question!

Senator Roblin: —that our civil service produces at a rate of 60 per cent, then we would have something. If the honourable senator wants a question I will ask: Why does the government not pay attention to the Auditor General?

Senator Flynn: He doesn’t know.

Senator Roblin: Why do they not investigate the efficiency with which government services are being delivered? As the honourable senator suggested, that is just a beginning. I do not think it would satisfy the Canadian public to stop there, but there is plenty of room for the government to make a start on this very difficult question of trying to turn our economy around. If the honourable senator is really interested in employment and jobs, then he must look at the national energy policy, because no matter what it may have done for Canadianization, which is a popular move in many quarters in this country, its effect on the economy of the country has been a disaster.

Senator Lamontagne: Dispense!

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wants suggestions as to how he can improve his policies, they are not hard to find.

Senator Perrault: Senator Roblin was once the premier of a great province, and he knows how important psychology is in building confidence, not only in the provinces but throughout the nation. Last week we saw, for example, a totally irresponsible series of rumours circulated. They appeared in the media. They were voiced by certain members of the opposition. What were the rumours? One was that Mr. Bouey was going to resign as the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: It was suggested that somehow there were internal problems within the bank, that there was some great dispute between Mr. Bouey and the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance. Then we heard the rumour about exchange controls and devaluation of the dollar. All of these rumours were false. Apparently, they were circulated by certain groups or individuals—

Senator Smith: How do you know?

Senator Perrault: —some of whom may have sought to profit from those rumours.

Hon. C. William Doody: Shame!

Senator Flynn: I suppose it was members of the opposition.

Senator Asselin: Give us some evidence.

An Hon. Senator: Name names.

Senator Flynn: You are talking through your hat.

● (2020)

Senator Perrault: You hear me out. It is a belief held by some—

Senator Asselin: Oh, shut up!

Senator Perrault: —that certain people in world money markets have sought to realize profit out of recent speculation regarding the Canadian dollar.

Senator Flynn: It is easy to accuse in general.

Senator Asselin: Give us some evidence.

Senator Perrault: May I suggest that those who circulated those disquieting rumours, knowing them to be false, did a notable disservice to Canada and to the Canadian economy. They helped to cause a minor “run” on the Canadian dollar. But the rumours have been dissipated, and it is known now that those rumours were lies.

Senator Flynn: I did not know that there was a run on the Canadian dollar.

Senator Perrault: The episode caused difficulty for the Canadian economy. Senator Croll asked a few moments ago how much it cost the government to support the Canadian dollar.

Senator Flynn: He may be one of those.

Senator Perrault: Those rumours about impending devaluation were particularly unhelpful at this time.

Senator Flynn: You are spreading rumours.

Senator Perrault: The opposition spends time preaching doom, gloom and disaster, picking their way through what they hope will be an economic graveyard, hoping that conditions will be bad enough to propel them into power again.

Senator Asselin: You are supposed to be so good.

Senator Perrault: That negative talk does not help the country.

As has been said on so many other occasions, it is better to be a member of the construction crew than a member of the wrecking gang, and there are too many members of the wrecking gang in the opposition right now.

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting that Senator Croll is one of those who has spread those rumours simply because he put a question of that kind? Is that what you are saying?

Senator Perrault: Don't be ridiculous.

Senator Flynn: You are being ridiculous. You have ridiculed the Senate and have been doing that for too long now.

Hon. David Walker: Sonny boy, be quiet!

Senator Flynn: Senator McElman, would you please occasionally tell your leader to behave.

Senator Roblin: I rise on the invitation of the Leader of the Government to discuss the question of rumour-mongering, seeing that it arose from a question included in my remarks, and to tell him that I do not know who his rumour-mongers are, but I do know that they are not members of the opposition in this house, who are not profiteering at the expenses of the public interest.

I also ask him to reflect upon the fact that rumours gain credence only if there is some reason why they should. When one considers what has been happening to the Canadian dollar, and the weakening effect of the government's policies on the dollar, one sees why the rumours are given credence. That is the point my honourable friend should remember. These things do not arrive out of pure chance, because people, a great many of whom are outside of this country and not Canadians at all, are expressing their confidence in, and their views with respect to, our currency.

I am not one of those who want to see the Canadian currency under such serious pressure and to go so low as to be damaging to our economy, but I tell my honourable friend that if he is looking for the cause of the weakness of the Canadian currency, and the major reason why we have high interest rates in Canada in defence of that currency, he must surely look at government policy, because there lies the root of the mischief.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is entitled to his opinion, and we will have a full debate on that subject shortly. The honourable senator has suggested a useful initiative this evening.

Senator Frith: A mischievous initiative.

Senator Perrault: No, it is an opportunity for honourable senators to debate this question, and that is quite proper, but I do not think, regardless of our political differences, that any of us should be cast in the role of deliberately or accidentally destabilizing the Canadian dollar. That is why, whether we serve in government or opposition, it is important to be as responsible as possible at this particular time.

Senator Roblin: May I ask my honourable friend if that is an apology for his recent imputations?

Senator Perrault: My imputation was—

Senator Smith: We all heard you.

Senator Perrault: I am making a direct statement; I am not implicating or attempting to implicate any member of this chamber, but there are those in certain financial circles in the world who, it seems to some of us, are deliberately trying to destabilize the Canadian economy, trying to weaken the Canadian dollar. I suspect that some of them made money last week when the Canadian dollar was under attack. Some of the rumour-mongering tactics were disreputable, and certainly against the interests of this nation.

Senator Asselin: That is a grave accusation.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I would draw the minister's attention to an exchange that we had on Tuesday, May 11, during the course of which I asked him whether the speech given by his colleague the Minister of Finance to the OECD meeting was intended to reflect any change in the economic policy or priorities of the government.

● (2025)

The Minister of State for Economic Development in the course of several answers to questions by my colleague, Senator Smith, and me, said among other things, in connection with Mr. MacEachen's speech:

—Canada would like to play its part in remedying that as soon as possible, with a higher level of emphasis on the unemployed than has been the case in dealing with inflation and all of the undesirable consequences like high interest rates that stem from that.

Later the minister said:

—it ought to be self-evident to my honourable friend that there may be some shift... in the emphasis on what needs to be attended to because of the secondary and consequential problems.

Still later the minister said:

Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance has raised that as a higher priority, and perhaps a suggestion that there may be some action the western countries, in their fiscal, monetary and other policies, can take to accelerate the remedial action that should be taken to relieve the hardship that has accompanied the high level of unemployment.

Finally, in reply to a question from my colleague, Senator Smith, the minister said:

I would suggest to the honourable senator that there is a change in emphasis.

In light of subsequent statements made by the Minister of Finance, and by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister—in particular I quote the Prime Minister's statement to his press conference last Friday, May 14:

So, the way to tackle high unemployment is by bringing inflation down. That has been our policy, that is our policy, and that will remain our policy.

In light of those statements, will the Minister of State for Economic Development agree that the answer he would give today to my question, as to whether Mr. MacEachen's speech reflected a change in government policy, is "No"?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has given us a trip through a number of statements, all of which have been taken out of context. I am not complaining about that.

Senator Murray: Surely you did not want me to read it all.

Senator Olson: Everyone can read the full reply that I gave. If the honourable senator wishes to take out those selected quotes, and from that conclude that I said the Minister of Finance was shifting his economic policy, then I agree completely with him. I did not intend to give that impression.

Some of those replies did say, however, that the distress—there are some other terms that could be used—resulting from the downturn in the economy, the unemployment, and so on, was the cause of ministerial concern; and at the OECD meeting in Paris, as well as the IMF meeting in Helsinki, he re-emphasized that he believed that countries of the western world, particularly the United States, should do certain things to bring interest rates down. The Minister of Finance has said more than once that a real interest rate—that is, interest rates over inflation levels—of between 8 per cent and 10 per cent in the United States, and between 5 per cent and 7 per cent in Canada, is too high; and that fact is continuing to dampen our economy and to postpone the advent of the kind of confidence needed by the decision-makers on capital investment to proceed with a number of projects that they have on their books. So I would hope that my honourable friend does not pursue this matter, because what he is trying to suggest is—

Hon. G. I. Smith: You are doing—

Senator Olson: All I hope is that the senator does not pursue his misinterpretation. That is the problem.

Senator Smith: You do not have to pursue anything you don't like.

● (2030)

Senator Olson: That is the problem. If I appeared to say that what the Minister of Finance said—to the effect that the fight against inflation would lead hopefully to a reduction in interest rates, and therefore a restoration of capital investment—meant a shift in government policy, I can assure you that that is not the case. He sincerely believes, and has repeated, as has the Prime Minister in the quotation that my honourable friend has read, that that is at the root of the problem.

The United States, by the way, said at the summit meeting here in Ottawa that when inflation backs off by a reasonable amount we can expect interest rates to come down, but there are a few complicating matters, such as the size of the deficit in the United States, as interpreted by the market, which is very important. The Minister of Finance made some representations with respect to that, and did put more emphasis on the secondary and consequential problems, expressing the deep concern that this government has for the distress it is creating.

Senator Smith: "It" is creating? A slip of the tongue, perhaps?

Senator Olson: That the situation is creating.

Senator Smith: No, no—that the government is creating.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when the minister said that he wanted to re-emphasize that the Minister of Finance is very concerned about the hardship and other social and economic problems resulting from this international slump, or downturn in the economy, and that Canada would like to play its part in remedying that as soon as possible and I underline the following words, "with a higher level of emphasis on the unemployed than has been the case in dealing with inflation"—if that did not denote a change in emphasis and a change in policy, what did it mean?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend ought to read the words over again a few times. If the whole meaning has not got through to him in the past week or so since I made those remarks, he can read it over again tonight.

I will, however, put it in very simple terms for him. My honourable friend ought to know that this government has a very high level of concern for all of these things. The higher the unemployment levels get the more concerned we become. That ought to be self-evident, and that is what the remarks that my honourable friend has just read mean. If he reads them over again he will see that for himself.

Hon. R. James Balfour: As a supplementary to the question of my colleague, may I ask this? The minister indicated concern on the part of himself and of the government with respect to the size of the United States deficit. Would the minister indicate to us what the present estimate, as distinguished from the estimate contained in the budget, regarding the size of the Canadian deficit, will be?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, when the Minister of Finance is ready to make a statement regarding recalculations and projections along those lines, obviously he will do it. My honourable friend, I am sure, knows very well that other ministers, including the Minister of State for Economic Development, are not going to speculate on what the amount will be; but my honourable friend also knows that the Minister of Finance has said that as a consequence of the downturn in the economy there has certainly been a reduction in revenue. In the case of certain programs that undergo automatic adjustments, there is also an increase in expenditures. Obviously, therefore, in the situation that we have today on both sides of the ledger, unless there is an immediate, significant upturn in the economy, producing an upturn in revenue to the federal treasury from taxation in all its forms, there will likely be a larger deficit than was forecast; but the Minister of Finance will be making a statement with regard to that when he is prepared to make an updated prognostication.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Balfour: Is the Minister of State for Economic Development saying that he, as a minister of the Crown, has no idea of what the change in the size of the Canadian deficit is going to be; whether it will be 20 per cent, 50 per cent, or 100 per cent greater?

Senator Olson: I did not say that at all. What I did say—and I thought it was pretty clear—was that I am not going to assume the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance in making a new calculation public.

Senator Murray: If the minister takes the deficit projection in the November budget, allowing for the differences in the Canadian and American economies, would he not agree that the deficit projection would be, in proportional terms, the equivalent of $100 billion in the United States?

Senator Olson: No, I would not.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask a supplementary question about the meaning of some of the statements made by the Minister of Finance as a result of the Helsinki meeting.

As a preliminary, I might say that if the deficit of the Government of Canada is not almost double the figure that was indicated in the budgetary statement last November, I think a lot of us will be pleasantly surprised; but I am afraid it is going to be a very substantial sum.

In his report on the Helsinki meeting, the Minister of Finance stated—and I quote from page 2 of that statement:

Both the G-10 and the Interim Committee communiqués identified fiscal deficits as a factor contributing to high interest rates.

I pause to note that this is a statement subscribed to, obviously, by the minister, who was a party both to the Group of Ten meeting and the Interim Committee as well.

The Group of Ten industrialized countries emphasize “that a strengthening of fiscal discipline in both the near and medium term could foster economic recovery by relieving pressure on interest rates.”

That is a general statement they make their own, and it applies to all the countries in the Group of Ten.

I note that fiscal discipline in respect of the deficit is not strengthening in Canada, but is in fact weakening. However, my question is this. The minister quotes these remarks with approval—that is, “that a strengthening of fiscal discipline in both the near and medium term could foster economic recovery by relieving pressure on the interest rates.” What new policy initiatives does the Government of Canada intend to propose in order to strengthen fiscal discipline in both the near and medium term?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there were a number of measures in the budget of November 12 that fit into that category. There was discipline in holding down on the expenditure side, for example, to the extent that the cash requirements of the government for the fiscal year 1982-83 would be almost, but not quite, $4 billion less than the previous year. That, I think, is very important discipline.

The fact of the matter is, however, that the international economy, including some sectors that are very important to Canada, has changed rather substantially since that time. I repeat that when the Minister of Finance is ready to make an adjusted assessment of the consequences of that state of affairs, he will do so. That is his responsibility and, no matter how many questions are asked along these lines, I am not going to assume that responsibility.

Senator Roblin: I do not really expect my honourable friend to assume that responsibility, and I would not recommend that he do so; but I think he could assume the responsibility of asking his colleague some questions and finding out whether there is any intention in the near future—and by that I mean within the next 30 days, before this Parliament rises for the summer—on the part of the Minister of Finance, of presenting us with his views as to how he is going to handle the deficit, which is obviously wildly out of control, and as to how he is going to respond to this statement made by the Group of Ten, to which he adheres, that more fiscal discipline would enable us to deal more effectively with the problem of high interest rates, which is throttling the country at the present time.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think my honourable friend should go back to the statement he read. He should recall that that statement was made in the context of, or following, a meeting of the Group of Ten and the International Monetary Fund. It may be that the Minister of Finance will have a statement or announcement to make within a few days. I will convey to him my honourable friend's interest in this matter. However, I am sure that he will want to continue the discussions in the hope that they will reach the desired end result that was spelled out so succinctly, not only before the other ministers who were present at the meeting but also in the statement that my honourable friend has in front of him.

● (2040)

Senator Roblin: I hope that my honourable friend will ask the minister how he intends to do something about this matter within the context of his further declaration that perseverance in our present course is the best procedure. It looks to me like a contradiction in terms. I am glad that I do not have the responsibility that my honourable friend has of asking the Minister of Finance to reconcile “Allan” to “MacEachen.”

Senator Olson: I am glad that I do not have the responsibility of explaining what my honourable friend has interpreted as a contradiction, because it is quite obvious to me that it is not.

Senator Roblin: I think that my honourable friend underestimates himself. He could do much better than that if he really tried.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SENIOR STAFF APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the questions asked by Senators Godfrey and Benidickson on April 28, 1982 concerning the number of under-secretaries in the Department of External Affairs.

The majority of the positions referred to by Senators Godfrey and Benidickson were created as a result of the government reorganization which was announced on January 12, 1982, and as a result of the subsequent decisions of the senior management of the Department of External Affairs.

Hon. G. I. Smith: Was that an answer?

Senator Perrault: That is the first stage of an answer, yes.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government. When may we expect the next instalment of his answer, and will it answer the original question?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a count is under way at the present time.

Senator Smith: I thought there was a great number, but I did not realize that it would take so long to count them.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Well, there was quite a number.

THE CONSTITUTION

PROCLAMATION ACTIVITIES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the question asked by Senator Donahoe on May 5, 1982, concerning invitations to attend the function on Parliament Hill at which Her Majesty the Queen was present on April 17, 1982. Two or three other senators have mentioned the fact that, at least in some cases, the invitations arrived after the event.

Honourable senators, I have contacted the Secretary of State and he informs me that all of the invitations were first issued by telephone. Invitations were sent immediately to all who indicated that they would accept them. However, because of the great number of invitations involved, it was decided to send the actual invitations after the fact to those who said that they would not be attending. This was done as a courtesy to those who could not be there to provide them with some memorabilia of the event.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

STATUS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to the question asked by Senator Murray on May 6, 1982, concerning the release of a Canadian Unity Information Office poll.

Senator Frith previously indicated to Senator Murray, in a delayed answer given on March 30, 1982, which appears at page 3892 of the Senate Debates, that the Minister of Justice felt that the release of this poll might be prejudicial to federal-provincial relations and should, therefore, not be released at this time. That answer still stands.

PRIVATE BILL

E.G. KLEIN LIMITED—SECOND READING

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc moved that Bill S-26, to revive E.G. Klein Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill would revive E.G. Klein Limited, retroactive to the date of the company's dissolution. E.G. Klein is a federal company which was dissolved when it failed to produce annual summaries, for two consecutive years, as required under subsection 133(1) of the Canadian Commercial Corporations Act.

The said company was incorporated on January 21, 1957, for the purposes and objects set out in the letters patent. However, the company never carried out such operations. In December 1978, when the company wanted to start active business, it got in touch with the Corporations Branch in Ottawa, through petitioner Mr. Paul Robert, solicitor, to enquire whether the company still existed. The answer was affirmative. However, it was pointed out that the company was in default regarding the filing of certain annual reports.

The petitioner asked the Corporations Branch to send appropriate forms for the missing years so that these could be completed and returned as required. The completed reports were sent in May 1979. The lapse of time from December 19, 1978 to May 1979 is due to the fact that the company's chief executive officer was in Germany, and that reports were sent to him for his signature. The reports were produced in May 1979, accepted by the Corporations Branch, and the related costs duly paid. However, at the beginning of December 1980, the undersigned sent the Corporations Branch a certificate of continuance pursuant to the new Corporations Act. In a letter dated December 9, 1980, the company was informed that it was dissolved as of March 1979.

After checking with the services concerned, which confirmed the dissolution, and after examining the legal options for reviving the said company, it was found that the only option was to have a private bill passed, since the Canada Business Corporations Act contained no provisions for reviving a company once it had been dissolved. Hence the present proceedings.

The petitioners do not know to whom were sent the notices of the Corporations Branch stating that said company would be dissolved if it failed to file its annual reports. Unfortunately, neither this fact nor the notices published in the Canada Gazette to that effect were brought to the attention of the company's administrators. The company therefore carried on its business, unaware that it had been dissolved. It is therefore vital that said company be allowed to apply for a certificate of continuance under section 181 of the new Canada Business Corporations Act after December 15, 1980, which was the deadline, otherwise the company would be faced with a second legal dissolution.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have no objection on this side to this bill's going to committee.

[Translation]

Senator Leblanc: If there are no other senators who wish to speak on this subject—

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): We cannot proceed to second reading now because you have already done so.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Before proceeding to second reading of his bill, I have one or two questions I want to ask Senator Leblanc. You said that when the forms requesting information were sent to the company, they were received by the senior officer who was in Germany. Have I understood correctly that these forms were sent for two years and that no answer was ever forwarded by the company? Was there a change in the management or the presidency of the company?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps the company changed lawyers.

Senator Asselin: Or else was there a change of staff. How is it that, for two years, the required forms were sent out but were not completed or returned to the department?

Senator Leblanc: According to the letter which I received from the law firm of Robert and Champagne, with respect to the two years for which no information was received, the forms were sent simultaneously and the report was filed in May of 1979. I have also been told—of course, I have not been able to check—that apparently, the company still has the same executive director since there is no mention of any change, but that he was then in Germany.

Senator Asselin: For two years?

Senator Leblanc: From December 1978 to May 1979. Afterwards, the report was filed with a cheque which was cashed. Apparently, the department notified the company that a late report had been received and that the company was dissolved.

Senator Asselin: At that time, how many years had the company been in operation?

Senator Leblanc: The company was incorporated on January 21, 1957. Mr. Robert informed me that it remained inactive until December 1978 when it decided to become operative.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Robert will be present during the proceedings in committee. As you know, there are also technical details concerning procedure and I am not an expert in this field. I believe that Mr. Robert will be able to provide all the required information.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Leblanc moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces", tabled in the Senate on 10th February, 1982.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): I remind honourable senators that the adjournment of this debate stands in my name so that other honourable senators may have an opportunity to speak to it, if they so wish and to give the chairman of the committee an opportunity to close the debate. However, the adjournment will not stand in my name beyond the end of this week unless some other senator indicates that he or she wishes to speak to it, in which case I shall be glad to yield.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Leader of the Government not be speaking to this report?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He can tell us about the navy.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I may be moved to speak at some point.

Senator Flynn: We should like to compare what you are going to say to what you said last week.

Senator Frith: I suggest, honourable senators, that the order stand until Thursday next.

Senator Roblin: Go on; coax him to speak!

Senator Frith: But you are doing so well.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-105, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, May 25, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY MONITORING BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-106, respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, May 25, 1982.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL REPORT TO SENATORS

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Government tabled the report of the Canada Labour Relations Board for the fiscal year ended March 31. I have not received a copy of that report in my office. Would the Leader of the Government check into the matter to determine whether other senators have received a copy and, if not, why not?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Inquiries shall go forward.

QUESTION PERIOD

NEWFOUNDLAND—JURISDICTION OVER OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: I would like to ask the following question of the Leader of the Government: Does the government intend to refer the issue of jurisdiction over offshore rights to the Hibernia oil field to the Supreme Court of Canada before the Supreme Court of Newfoundland—which is now seized of that question, among others—has delivered its judgment?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my colleague, Senator Olson, has some information on that point.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Minister of Justice issued a statement today from St. John's, Newfoundland. Since it is not very long, I shall be glad to read it. It is as follows:

The Government of Canada has today filed with the Supreme Court of Canada a reference concerning jurisdiction over seabed resources in the Hibernia area offshore Newfoundland.

Because the matter is before the court, I am not in a position to comment in any detail on the legal issues, but I do want to tell you something about the reasons why the Government of Canada has found it necessary to take this step.

Our two governments have for months and years been discussing both the question of offshore jurisdiction and an agreement on revenue sharing and resource management. But these negotiations have always foundered because of the underlying dispute over the legal issue.

The provincial government has recently filed a reference to the provincial court of appeal. The questions raise a number of complex issues in addition to the question of jurisdiction in respect of Hibernia, including the status of inland waters, the territorial sea, and perhaps the interests of other provinces as well. We are participating in that reference and will continue to do so, but in the meantime it appears to us necessary to move to have the urgent and pressing question of jurisdiction in Hibernia resolved at the earliest possible date by the highest court, the Supreme Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, I apologize for my inability to provide you with an advance copy of this communiqué. It was handed to me less than two minutes before I entered the chamber.

Senator Lang: I have a supplementary question. Does the government realize what the effect of such a reference will be upon our whole judicial system and, particularly, upon the credibility of our judicial system? Further, does it realize what long-term effect it may have on our confederal relations with Newfoundland?

Senator Olson: I think we can assure the honourable senator that the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice have taken all of that into consideration.

I also believe that the honourable senator puts forward a legitimate argument. However, I find myself in a somewhat awkward position in regard to making any comment, not only because I was only notified in the last few minutes that this was going to happen or, indeed, did happen today, but because there are some very severe limitations on what ministers may comment respecting matters before the courts.

Hon. Lowell Murray: May we infer from the minister's statement that the grave decision, announced by the Minister of Justice, was not really a cabinet decision, but one taken either by the minister acting alone or by the minister in concert with one or two of his colleagues? Frankly, it is astonishing that a minister in as senior and important a portfolio as the honourable gentleman's would have been informed of a decision such as this only two minutes ago.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is not what I said; it is one of Senator Murray's usual misinterpretations of what I said.

It may be useful for honourable senators and, indeed, for my own edification, to read the rest of the communiqué. It will probably spell out some of the additional concerns honourable senators may have.

Carrying on from where I left off reading, the communiqué goes on to state as follows:

The prospects for Hibernia production are very promising indeed, and we consider that these resources are presently very close to commercial production. Development will require heavy investment that can only come within an established régime.

The major oil companies which are conducting the exploration need to have answers very soon as to which level of government has jurisdiction, and we must act to give them a firm legal basis on which to proceed.

The development of these resources is to the benefit of all, the people of Newfoundland as well as other Canadians. Delaying development, perhaps for years, is unacceptable to all concerned. We need the oil that the offshore promises to yield.

Perhaps most of all, I believe that the provincial economy is poised to enjoy the important contribution offshore development can make to its prosperity, and that the new job opportunities and economic stimulus await a political settlement between the federal and provincial government. While the legal issue must be resolved, we are still willing to meet with negotiators for the Newfoundland government to explore ways of managing resource development and providing for a generous revenue-sharing arrangement with the government of Newfoundland. We are anxious to find a mechanism for co-operative management, one that can be implemented no matter what ruling the Supreme Court gives.

● (1410)

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: Is it now the policy of the Government of Canada to short-circuit the judicial process whenever it is expedient to do so?

Senator Olson: Absolutely not, and if my honourable friend would consider this and reflect on it for a moment, he would agree that the jurisdictional basis is a firm legal one on which other agreements can be negotiated. The private sector, which will be making these investments, will know what the basis is and that the Minister of Justice has done the responsible thing.

Senator Murray: He will have short-circuited the process.

Senator Olson: That is absolutely wrong.

Hon. C. William Doody: May I ask the minister a supplementary question?

Has the minister considered what going over the head of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland could do to the credibility and, indeed, the integrity, of the highest legal body in the province of Newfoundland?

Senator Olson: The answer I gave a few minutes ago adequately answers that question.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Not at all.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Economic Development.

The federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as I understand it, met last week with the Newfoundland Minister of Mines and Energy. Can the minister inform the Senate whether anything positive came out of that meeting?

Senator Olson: I can confirm that not only that meeting took place but several other meetings took place earlier. I will ask my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to give me a report on that meeting, provided both ministers concerned agree to make their discussions public.

Hon. G. I. Smith: I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development—or whatever his title is.

Senator Olson: "And Regional Development."

Senator Smith: Would he tell us whether there has ever been a precedent since Confederation wherein the jurisdiction of a provincial supreme court has been usurped, as it has been in this case, by a federal reference to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Olson: It is difficult, honourable senators, to answer a question when one does not agree with the premise upon which it is based.

Senator Smith: If the honourable minister's objection to answering is only on the ground that he considers the wording of the question objectionable, I will be glad to put it in the most courteous way I can think of.

Senator Olson: It is not a matter of courtesy; you said "usurped".

Senator Smith: All right. I shall rephrase my question. All I want is the information.

Does the minister know of any precedent since Confederation wherein the federal government, after a matter had been referred to a supreme court of a province but before the judgment of that court had been rendered, referred the same matter, or a similar matter, to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am not a lawyer, nor am I in a position to give a legal opinion on what the similarity to other cases might be. However, regarding the uncomplicated part of the question as to whether there are any similarities, I will take that part of the question as notice and will attempt to obtain an answer.

I might advise the honourable gentleman opposite, though, that it was only a short while ago that the Leader of the Conservative Party urged the government to make this reference directly—and I underline the word "directly"—to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Senator Smith: I am aware of that.

Hon. Eric Cook: The minister quotes the Leader of the Opposition but forgets to say that that statement was made before the issue was put to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

Senator Smith: The minister has undertaken to provide us with an answer in respect of any similarity, but honourable senators will also recall that I asked about a precedent, which is a vital part of my question.

I should also like to ask the minister whether he would also be kind enough to furnish us with a copy of the reference to which he has referred in reading the statement made by the Minister of Justice.

● (1415)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can get a copy of the reference soon. However, a copy is probably in the senator's mailbox by now, but I will give an undertaking to see that that happens.

In reply to the other part of the question, yes, I can get that as well. I have heard from people around me who are in the legal profession that there are precedents for all of this, but I will try to find more specific references that will satisfy my honourable friend.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, could the minister tell us if it is the intention of the Government of Canada to disband or dissolve the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, and, if it is not, could he tell us what role he envisages for that court in the future if it is going to be superseded by a direct reference by the Government of Canada to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not think a question like that really deserves an answer other than a simple "no". It will continue to perform the very useful functions it is performing now and has performed in the past.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, was the decision of the government to refer this directly to the Supreme Court of Canada taken because they were angry at the Supreme Court of Newfoundland for the decision that body made on the constitutional issue?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is a comment which I think is unbecoming of even my honourable friend's usual misinterpretation of anything.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin: I have a supplementary for the Minister of State for Economic Development. I should like to know whether the federal government's decision to appeal to the Supreme Court is some indication that in future, the Government of Canada will prefer to take its case to the courts, in order to obtain legal solutions, instead of negotiating political solutions on contentious issues that may arise between the provinces and the federal government.

[English]

Senator Olson: The answer is no—

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: —and if honourable senators opposite would like me to read a couple of paragraphs out of the communique that very precisely gave the reason why the reference—

Senator Asselin: It would help if we had a copy of his statement.

Senator Olson: —is being made at this time, I will do that. I only read it once, and they do not seem to understand it.

Senator Smith: We understand it very well.

Senator Asselin: Does he want to establish a principle?

Senator Olson: If it would help to give the answers in advance to those questions that have already been replied to in the communique that I read a few minutes ago, I will do so.

Senator Perrault: They want one-syllable words.

Senator Smith: The answers he read are quite unimpressive for the action taken and a very poor excuse for doing it.

Senator Olson: We do not expect the opposition to acknowledge that answers are good or impressive or anything else, but they are the real ones.

Senator Smith: It would be quite a change to get a real one which is also a truthful one.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the document the minister read a few minutes ago is obviously a political blurb to try to justify the action that was recently taken—talking about the economic wellbeing of the people of Newfoundland and talking about the benefits which would accrue from the development of Hibernia.

The people of Newfoundland gave a political answer to that a little while ago when more than 60 per cent of them voted in favour of Premier Peckford's stand on that issue. In order to demonstrate the legality of that stand, a reference was made to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. The Government of Canada has now demonstrated its contempt for the whole process by referring it to the Supreme Court of Canada in the face of the people of Newfoundland, and I find that contemptible.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the best and most accurate reply I can give to that is that I do not agree with the conclusions.

Senator Doody: Are there any questions that are acceptable to the minister, and, if so, would he present them to us so we can ask them?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, when Question Period is used properly—and that is for honourable senators to ask questions seeking information on matters of fact—then, of course, they will get very accurate and precise replies based on facts. However, when they express an opinion and ask the minister for an opinion based on their misinterpretation they will get a reply that is in accordance with that expression.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, just about every senator who has risen in his place so far today on this side of the chamber has asked a question seeking a factual answer. The only thing we got in reply was a quotation from a political press release blurb issued by the minister from St. John's, Newfoundland, telling us, and telling the ministry, what they had done in the face of the opinion of the Government of Newfoundland and in anticipation of the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

Senator Asselin: Shame!

Senator Olson: That is a great question because the honourable senator predicated the first part of his question on the basis of someone's opinion. That is exactly what I replied to a minute ago.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I want to ask a question so that it will be abundantly clear to all honourable senators that we maritimers are outraged by the decision of the federal government.

● (1420)

My question is: When it made the decision to override the Supreme Court of Newfoundland—

An Hon. Senator: To ignore it.

Senator Donahoe: —to ignore it, did it have any indication in advance as to whether or not the Supreme Court of Newfoundland was likely to bring in a decision adverse to the position of the federal government?

Senator Murray: Exactly. It was an educated guess on the part of Jean Chrétien.

Senator Olson: I am absolutely shocked that anyone would ask such a question.

Senator Donahoe: Don't be shocked; just answer the question.

Senator Doody: I wish the people of Newfoundland could see the grin on the face of the minister.

Senator Donahoe: Should the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada differ from that of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, has any decision been made as to which of the two decisions the government intends to follow?

Senator Olson: My honourable friend knows very well the jurisdiction and the level of both courts.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, as a matter of fact, does the Supreme Court of Newfoundland have to stop the case because it has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, or can the Supreme Court of Newfoundland proceed with the case as it has been submitted to it?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will check into that. If the references are different, then that is one matter; and, of course, there is also the matter of a legal opinion, as to whether they are different or similar. Obviously, any decision that is made by the supreme court of any province is appealable to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Senator Tremblay: I just want to know, as a matter of fact, if the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has to stop proceeding with the case.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): The court has to decide that.

Senator Tremblay: Which court? Has the Supreme Court of Canada to decide whether or not it will wait until after the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has taken its own decision, or will they just forget about the Supreme Court of Newfoundland? Those are questions of fact.

Senator Olson: No, they are not matters of fact; but if they are, then to the extent that they are, my honourable friend knows very well that both of those questions are entirely up to the courts to decide.

Senator Tremblay: If, by chance, the Supreme Court of Canada decides to wait until after the decision of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has been rendered, then what would have been the purpose of referring the case to the Supreme Court of Canada before the Supreme Court of Newfoundland had rendered its decision—if there is the possibility that the Supreme Court of Canada, as a matter of courtesy and respect for the institution, will decide to wait until after the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has rendered its decision?

Senator Olson: It gets worse, honourable senators. The honourable senator is now asking me a hypothetical question. Both questions are predicated on the word "if", and the minister is then asked to make a decision that only the courts can decide.

Senator Tremblay: Re-read what you have just said.

Senator Perrault: Look at the Rules of the Senate.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, one minister who is now absent from the chamber has said that the two references—the reference to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland by the Government of Newfoundland and the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada by the Government of Canada—are different. Perhaps the minister will tell us what is the difference between those two references.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will obtain a copy of both references. Even if I do, I do not intend to give a legal opinion, and an interpretation of those references would be just that. The honourable senator can reach his own conclusion, or perhaps he can wait for the courts to make their legal interpretation of what the references mean.

● (1425)

Senator Doody: I was not asking for a legal opinion. Somebody across the way said that there was a difference between the two references. I asked what the difference was. Obviously, the minister does not know.

Senator Perrault: They will be provided for you, and then you may wish to withdraw certain remarks.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA TREATY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government with regard to the recent conclusion of the Law of the Sea Treaty.

I notice that the United States, along with three other countries, voted against the treaty, while 130 countries voted for it. Ratification of the treaty by 60 countries is required, and this will probably happen at the end of this year. In view of the implications to Canada, what is the government, and the Department of External Affairs in particular, doing with respect to pounding some sense into the heads of the United States government in order for them to come to some conclusions on the ratification of this treaty, which, in the future, will affect the lives of everyone in the world?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the Canadian government does not believe pounding sense into anyone's head to be a constructive initiative. The government opts for patient negotiations. The honourable senator's question, however, will be taken as notice, and the information will be provided.

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: May I ask a supplementary before my honourable friend gets up again? I would like to know the distinction between "pushing" and "shoving" and "pounding".

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator, with his vast experience in provincial politics, has had a long career doing all of those three things, and he is in a better position to tell us the distinction than are we.

Senator Donahoe: On this occasion I am quoting the Prime Minister of Canada, who said that very shortly he would be pushing and shoving the Government of the United States.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): He did not say that. He said there may be some pushing and shoving.

Senator Donahoe: If it is only a possibility, perhaps he would have done better not to have said such a thing.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government referred to patient negotiations. The negotiations have been going on for nine years now, and the only person who has shown any leadership is Mr. Alan Beesley, our representative in New York. In all the meetings I have attended, I have never seen anyone participate in these negotiations in the way that Alan Beesley and his excellent staff have done. The only other people I have ever seen down there was the odd minister paying a flying visit for one day. I think it is time that Canada showed some leadership and tried to come to terms with the United States, and the countries who are abstaining. We should try to get this treaty ratified for the benefit of all mankind.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is gratifying to note that credit is being given to Alan Beesley for his outstanding work. As honourable senators are aware, Ambassador Beesley is regarded as one of the top two or three people in the entire world on this subject of the law of the sea, and great progress has been made in achieving progress largely because of his efforts.

For Senator Marshall to suggest that Canada has been backward in attempting to achieve an agreement is unfair. I think Canada has played a prominent role in putting together an agreement, however imperfect and incomplete, and Alan Beesley is one of the reasons for it. Honourable senators can be assured that there has been a great deal of government support for Ambassador Beesley in his efforts.

Senator Marshall: There seems to be an impression that there is already an agreement. This is a mistake. It still has to be ratified by 60 countries.

Senator Perrault: Great progress has been made.

Senator Marshall: If great progress has been made, it has not been because of the efforts of the Department of External Affairs, but because of the efforts of Mr. Beesley and his staff.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, Senator Marshall knows better. He knows that Ambassador Beesley has had the full support of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other ministers. He should give credit where credit is due, despite his partisan leanings.

Senator Marshall: The credit is limited.

Hon. C. William Doody: I wonder if the minister could tell us if the quiet and patient diplomacy he has talked about with respect to the law of the sea is the same sort of diplomacy that has been going on with the Province of Newfoundland, or is there a bit of bullying, or pushing and shoving, involved?

Senator Perrault: If the honourable senator would be less political he could make a more constructive contribution to this chamber. The kind of inflammatory talk in which he has been indulging today may make great reading back in the local papers in Newfoundland, but it hardly adds to a constructive dialogue in this chamber. The fact is that the senator has been promised all sorts of information with respect to these court referrals—documentation and other material—that he can read at his leisure. Having read it, he may have a more balanced view of events. However, to speak in the intemperate terms that he has done, in order to achieve some sort of political credit in Newfoundland, is, I think, unworthy of his position in this chamber. This is a kind of verbal pyromania.

● (1430)

Senator Doody: I wonder, honourable senators, whether the Government of Canada would consider replacing Mr. Lalonde, on that negotiating team, with the quiet diplomat who just spoke?

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—JURISDICTION OVER OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, may I ask the Minister of State for Economic Development whether there was any consultation between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland prior to this decision being taken to short-circuit the judicial process and refer the matter directly to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I do not agree that the judicial process has been short-circuited. I will not get any closer to agreement with that comment, no matter how many times Senator Murray makes it.

Yes, there have been a large number of negotiations going on for months—I think it is fair to say, for years—with everyone realizing that a sound legal basis on which regulations and jurisdictions can be put together is an absolute necessity for that development to take place.

Senator Murray: Did the Government of Canada consult the Government of Newfoundland during the period after the Government of Newfoundland referred the matter to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and before the Government of Canada referred it to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will check that out to determine exactly how many occasions there were, since I am sure there were more than one.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REPORT OF SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Hon. G. I. Smith: Honourable senators, I have a question that I would like to direct to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. I assume that he is aware of the report of the Science Council of Canada that was made public yesterday?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): No, I am not aware of it. I read a lot of things, but I have not got around to this report.

Senator Smith: Perhaps, then, he would allow me to pass on to him a little information and ask him whether he agrees with it, because I will be seeking other information on this matter.

Senator Olson: The purpose of Question Period is to seek information, not to give it.

Senator Smith: Yes, honourable senators, that is what I am trying to do—to get information. Since the honourable gentleman does not have the background that would enable him to understand the question, I am giving it to him, after which I will proceed to ask the question.

Senator Olson: In cases like this, where a report has only recently been made public, I think it is for the honourable senator to ask the question, not to give a resumé of what is in that report. I will take the question as notice and come back with an intelligent, precise and informative reply.

Senator Smith: I am delighted to have the honourable gentleman's undertaking. I am sure that kind of answer will be a refreshingly delightful one to get from him, and one to which I look forward with great interest and anticipation.

Since the honourable gentleman does not want any background information, the question is simply: Does he agree with the council's reported view with reference to the importance of new information and other technological research to the welfare of Canada?

Senator Olson: Yes, honourable senators, I will take the question as notice.

Senator Smith: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. When the minister is taking the question as notice and preparing the delightful answer that he informs us will be forthcoming, will he consider this as a further portion of the same question and indicate whether he agrees that, if Canada does not keep abreast of technological research in these fields, many sectors of our manufacturing industry would be rendered obsolete virtually overnight; our trade balance, already precarious, might never recover; and structural unemployment could lead to permanent joblessness for many Canadians, declining living standards and, for some, emigration?

Senator Olson: I should tell my honourable friend that I have just been advised by my very efficient staff that I already have a sheet in my book which is in reply to that exact question. If he will give me a few moments to read it, I will extract those points which are most pertinent to the reply.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thanks for asking!

Senator Smith: I would rather the honourable gentleman took his time and put himself in the position of giving us the splendid sort of answer he promised a few moments ago. I am really quite surprised that he has more knowledge than he thinks he has; generally, it is the other way around.

● (1435)

Senator Olson: The problem is that I have to put it in the right sequence and in the kind of terms my honourable friend will understand. That takes a little more time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): All things come to those who wait.

Senator Olson: I should advise honourable senators that the report is very much in line with the discussion paper we have had in our possession for some time. The questions, and some of the ramifications that my honourable friend pointed out, refer to perhaps only part of that paper. There may be other things in it that ought to be taken into account. For example, the Science Council reports a high level advisory committee reporting to the government and to provincial premiers, which has been rather useful. It is not full of the kind of doom and gloom my honourable friend referred to, which shows that he was rather selective in what he took out of it.

Senator Smith: I think the honourable gentleman would be well advised to take advantage of his first offer, namely, to make himself more fully acquainted with, and more perfectly informed of, the contents of the report, before he ventures into these flights of imaginative lecturing.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, once again I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government concerning the Garrison diversion project. The concerns and fears of the people of Manitoba over that project have been expressed on various occasions in both the Senate and the other place. I am fully aware of the representations that have been made, of the court injunctions and of the report prepared by the Canadian delegation to the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group which was appended to Hansard of May 13. I read that report thoroughly and I had a discussion about it with Senator Deschatelets. Despite all that, I am still concerned on behalf of the people of Manitoba, and I would like to bring additional information to the attention of honourable senators.

In response to my questions last week we were told that there was a possibility that, instead of its being directed north from North Dakota as a result of the Garrison project, the water might well be directed south. In that respect I should inform the Senate that a delegation from Pierre, South Dakota, is now making representations to block any such move. They do not want the water going south for fear that their own waters will be polluted by it.

In the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, May 15, 1982, the following news item appeared:

The lawyer for a group seeking to halt construction of North Dakota's Garrison diversion project tried to show a

[Senator Smith.]

U.S. federal judge yesterday that it needs more study and a new congressional authorization.

Tom Klinkel, representing a group of about 100 South Dakota farmers who fear possible harm from Garrison, spent yesterday questioning the U.S. official in charge of the North Dakota irrigation project.

U.S. District Judge Donald Porter ordered testimony to resume Monday in the lawsuit the farmers have filed seeking a court order to prevent Garrison from being built. All lawyers in the case said they expected testimony and arguments could be completed Monday.

I just want to suggest to the Leader of the Government that if the people of South Dakota are concerned at the suggestion that that water might be turned south, thus polluting their waters instead of polluting our own fresh water in Manitoba, surely that adds to the arguments and representations which have been made in the Senate to date. Thus, I ask the leader once again to make further representations outlining all of our concerns, the concerns not only of the people of Manitoba but of the people of South Dakota, to prove that our case is legitimate and that we have a right to holler about it.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): I take it that the essence of Senator Guay's question is, first, whether these news reports from Pierre, South Dakota, are accurate, and, second—

Senator Guay: They are accurate.

● (1440)

Senator Perrault: The second part of Senator Guay's question was whether additional representations are being made to the United States. I thank the honourable senator for those two questions, and they will be taken as notice.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, did our honourable friend leave us with the impression that additional representations are being made?

Senator Perrault: Yes. I have some information here, but I fear it is somewhat ancient. I say that because the material is dated April 27. On the basis of the statement made today by Senator Guay, I will seek further information respecting the Garrison project.

Senator Roblin: The information you have has been printed in Hansard.

Senator Perrault: Perhaps some of it.

Senator Roblin: The information in Hansard is more recent than your information, and the information referred to by Senator Guay covers the entire question.

Senator Perrault: And that, honourable senators, is why I do not propose presenting the material which I have before me. I shall ask for further information to be brought to the Senate tomorrow.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—CHANGES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development in connection with a reported intention on the part of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to produce a new policy in their field, which is being described by the department as the "son of NEP," in which there will be certain further changes made to our oil and energy regime. Is it true that changes are being contemplated in this field? I am particularly concerned to know if these changes have anything to do with the tax regime with respect to conventional oil in Alberta.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said, on a number of occasions, that the circumstances relating to energy volumes, prices and so on—all of which are extremely important, not only to the health of that industry but to attaining the objectives desirable for Canada—have been so profound that, obviously, he is looking at the current set and the projected set of conditions from this point on, rather than from one year, two years or even ten months ago. Of course, when an announcement is to be made, it will be made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If and when the minister makes such an announcement, I will be very happy to flesh out the details which, I am sure, my honourable friend will want.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think the minister has made a significant statement, because he has accurately described what has gone on in the oil industry as a profound change, and some of us think it is not for the better. However, he has left me with the impression that the government is actively considering some change in the tax regime in the conventional oil business in Alberta. If that is not what he means, I wish he would say what he does mean.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, Senator Roblin will have to understand, however difficult it is for him, that I will not make announcements or preludes to announcements prior to the minister making a statement. I know several gentlemen opposite were pursuing a similar line of questioning with regard to a matter on which the Minister of Finance may or may not make a statement because certain things have changed in that arena since last November.

Hon. R. James Balfour: That is the understatement of the year.

Senator Olson: What I want to say and to convey—because I want to give as much information, keeping it factual without injecting opinion, as I possibly can—

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: And give us the truth.

Senator Olson: —is that there have been some significant changes in the energy field, particularly with regard to gas and oil, and the minister has acknowledged these changes. He has also said that they are considering the changing circumstances which may necessitate modification. However, those comments do not mean that a statement will be forthcoming in a week, a month or even three months. He has merely acknowledged that significant changes have been made out there in the real world.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for the development of his answer, but it really leaves untouched the core of the matter, and that is as to what the intentions of the government are with respect to making an announcement of this kind. I do not expect my honourable friend to make the announcement or to speak on behalf of the department, but I do think that he could find out from the minister when this particular matter will be brought to a head.

I am not asking this question out of idle curiosity, but because, as everybody knows, the oil industry in the province of Alberta is in very serious straits. The industry cannot be kept twisting in the wind much longer; there has to be some finality. My honourable friend wants finality in Newfoundland. We also want it in Alberta. I ask him whether he can find out for us when this statement will be made.

Senator Olson: I can do that, and I will also convey my honourable friend's admonition that sooner is better, because I think that is really the gist of his question.

Senator Roblin: I have always maintained that it is better to be half right in time than perfect far too late, and that is what I accuse my honourable friend of heading for unless he develops some sense of urgency with respect to this matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Can one be too late and still be perfect?

Senator Roblin: Yes, sir. It is better to be half right in time than perfect too late.

Senator Frith: But how can you be late and still be perfect?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can argue his scholastic approach to these adages—

Senator Frith: Why don't we do that?

Senator Roblin: —and, of course, it is interesting to intellectuals, but that leaves me quite out of the picture, so he will have to resolve his own dilemma by himself.

Senator Frith: It is your phrase, not mine.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I want to ask the minister another question. What intentions does the government have with respect to the creation of an emergency reserve of oil for Eastern Canada? Is such a program in the works?

Senator Olson: I shall include that in the reference or the question that I take to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in response to the rest of the question.

Senator Roblin: While the minister is investigating that matter, would he look into another aspect of it? That is, one of the difficulties with imported oil these days has to do with the compensation fund and with the closing down of the oil industry in western Canada, to some extent, because it cannot market its product against the subsidized imports. Will he find out how the government intends to reconcile the fact that they have an emergency supply of twenty million barrels, as has been mentioned—one month's supply—with the fact that that oil will be paid for at export rates and overhang the market in the same way as the non-adjustable contracts do at the present time?

I am not sure that I am making myself entirely clear, but the minister is one of those clever men who can usually see quite clearly the point that I have in mind. He may say that he can see quite clearly through me, but I would not quite agree to that.

Senator Frith: Nobody is perfect.

Senator Olson: I thank the honourable senator for the compliment, although I do not believe it is well deserved. I sometimes find a great deal of difficulty in seeing the real motivation, if there is one different from the apparent one, for asking a question. In this case, however, I think I understand the question.

There is, of course, a problem and, though my honourable friend may not wish to acknowledge it, it is a fact that about one year ago there was a major shutdown in the supply of Canadian oil to the Canadian market and, no matter how many times that fact is repeated, it remains a fact of life.

One of the things we often have to learn is that we must live with the consequences of the decisions we make. One of the consequences of that decision was that during the winter of 1981-82 refineries assured their customers for heating oil that there would be enough available, and that was a very profound obligation. As a result, they sought alternative supplies, some of which had to be provided under contracted arrangements.

The minister has already indicated in his April statement, I believe, that he has asked those refineries to minimize the amount of offshore crude they have to take under those contracts and to do a number of other things that will help enhance production within Canada. I believe he went even further and said that if all these things are not successful in returning Canada's oil production potential to its full level he would take some further steps. These are the facts that are unfolding. At this time of year it is also a fact, as it is every year, that a number of refineries go into a shutdown or, at least, a partial shutdown phase and, therefore, rely on supplies of refined products while they do necessary maintenance and repair. Therefore, some of the nominations at this time of the year are not as high as in other periods until they get through that repair and maintenance period.

● (1450)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has no grounds for saying that I am not concerned about security of supply in Canada. Of course, I am. I want self-sufficiency in Canada, and I much regret that the government's policy does not seem to be leading us much closer to that.

Would my honourable friend give us a report on what has happened to this shut-in oil in Alberta after the minister's requests to the importers of oil into Canada? Will he give us a report on what has happened and what the state of the Alberta production system is at the present time?

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I need more details on what the production levels are right now and what nominations are already in for June. As I recall, the statement of April 1 did not anticipate a very significant increase in production, from what is now shut-in production, until after we got through this period, and from now until about July when the nominations for crude would be substantially higher when stockpiles are being rebuilt. That refers to the refined product for the coming winter and the ensuing season, other than the winter requirements.

Senator Roblin: It will be interesting to calculate the cost of this particular policy to the Alberta oil industry.

Senator Olson: Yes, it would be interesting to a number of people, including provincial governments and others who supported that shutdown at that time, to calculate the cost of the decision they made. It may make them a little more cautious in the future because markets such as this—including a different quality of crude and, in many cases, the inability of refiners to handle different qualities from what they were used to, for the very simple reason that the output in the mix of refined products is different—have to be considered. You also have to know where to dispose of those things. If you interrupt the flow, both in and out of refineries, there ought to be a profound look at the consequences which flow from that. These things cannot be turned off from one week to the next.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday in the chamber some serious charges were made about the lack of restraint in the area of government spending. I should like to answer some of those questions today.

The principle of restraints is reflected in the estimate of total government spending of $76.3 billion for the fiscal year 1982-83, which represents an 11.7 per cent increase over spending forecasts for the 1981-82 fiscal year outlined in the budget. In fact, this rate of growth in government spending is lower than for the previous two years.

The government's restraint efforts have been assisted by making the Post Office a crown corporation.

Hon. Martial Asselin: And increasing the price of stamps to 30 cents.

Senator Perrault: I also have with me today a statement concerning the Post Office, and I will be glad to read that.

Honourable senators have asked for information, and then, when an effort is made to provide information, we see the result.

Senator Asselin: You are doing fine.

Senator Perrault: Rather than carrying the full operating cost of Canada Post, only the crown corporation's deficit is included in government spending plans. The projected deficit is $400 million, but the $1.7 billion operating cost has been deleted. As a crown corporation, Canada Post will pay for services provided by government departments.

The government has also shown marked success in restraining growth of the civil service. More than once yesterday Senator Roblin stated:

—if the government would adopt the firm and resolute policy to hold the size of the public service to its present level—that is all we ask—

The government has shown marked success in that area. The total number of authorized person-years has been reduced from 315,680 in 1981-82 to 255,322 in 1982-83. Senator Roblin said, "That is all we ask." We have met his wish.

Senator Asselin: It is not enough; too little too late.

Senator Perrault: When consideration is given to the number of employees transferred from Treasury Board control to other jurisdictions, the increase in the number of employees under Treasury Board will be held to less than one per cent. This kind of record, I suggest, did not invite the kind of opposition attack levelled at the government yesterday.

Government spending is now guided by an envelope system. Major funding allocations are made according to specific areas. It is the responsibility of departments coming under an envelope to raise funds for programs within the envelope allotment.

The government's commitment to equality and fairness is demonstrated by spending in the social affairs envelope. It is the single largest envelope, accounting for nearly 40 per cent of all government spending.

This is why yesterday I said that, if we are to achieve the kinds of massive cuts which will markedly reduce the deficit and reduce government spending, we must look at these major programs. The opposition must ask themselves whether they want to see deep visceral cuts in these human programs. None of us wishes to see human beings suffer as a result of some economic target.

Some of the largest programs in this policy sector include old age security and guaranteed income supplement payments, payments to the provinces for hospital insurance, medicare and extended health care, and payments towards post-secondary education. The same opposition members, who were attacking the government's alleged record with respect to funding of post-secondary education, charging that the government was being parsimonious by allegedly cutting back on support for higher education, were, yesterday, demanding deep reductions in government spending.

Family allowances are included in the social affairs envelope as well as unemployment insurance and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Social affairs has been, continues to be, and, I hope, will always remain, a major priority with the Government of Canada.

The economic development envelope contains funding provisions for new economic development initiatives to help renew Canada's economy. Surely, honourable senators are not attacking that. Are they suggesting that we cut back on programs to stimulate the economy of the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, northern Ontario and other parts of Canada?

Spending for economic development will increase by 12.9 per cent. Perhaps the opposition supports major cuts in this area. Is this the area where they would like to see spending reductions?

The estimates do not reflect the recent re-organization affecting the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Regional Economic Expansion, and External Affairs. The estimates also do not include spending plans under the 1982-83 allotment of $175 million through the Western Development Fund. All will have, we believe, a positive effect on economic renewal.

These economic development dollars are not dollars which are being trickled down the drain. If this aid triggers the kind of economic activity we hope it will, it will have a multiplier effect; it will create jobs, secondary employment, and benefit the entire country. It will also ultimately add to tax revenues of governments and help to support vital services.

Senator Asselin: Speech!

Senator Perrault: Yes, it is, in a sense, but I know that honourable senators want information.

A special supplementary estimate for 1982-83 explains in detail fund allocations in these areas.

The spending estimates presented by the President of the Treasury Board, Don Johnston, underscore the government's determination to curb inflation. The 11.7 per cent spending increase is less than the inflation rate at the end of 1981.

An Hon. Senator: Is there much more?

Senator Perrault: There is not much more, honourable senators. I know that, in their avid pursuit of truth and freedom of information, most honourable senators will wish to have this material.

Government spending plans for 1981-82 had to be revised in the November budget, as honourable senators will recall, to take into account changes in interest rates, the cost of carrying the public debt and inflation.

The public debt envelope will increase from 11.7 per cent to 19.6 per cent of total outlays between 1976-77 and 1985-86. It increased by more than $2 billion between 1981-82 and 1982-83.

Government finances are subject to the same inflationary strains as the finances of all Canadians.

Restraint, equality, fairness and renewal are the principles behind the estimates. The policies funded by the estimates are designed to reduce inflation as the cause of high interest rates.

The 11.7 per cent growth in government spending is not a short-term cosmetic commitment to restraint. Spending estimates for future years will reflect a similar rate of growth.

● (1500)

So, there is an earnest effort being made in the area of restraint. As I said yesterday, honourable senators are aware of the fact that federal governments, whether they be Conservative or Liberal, inevitably seem to be cast in the role of the villains because they are the tax collectors—

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Mostly Liberal.

Senator Perrault: —the people who must raise most of the revenue which, in turn, is passed back to the provinces by way of transfer payments, and to individuals, with little federal credit given. Thus I hope no one in this chamber would wish to make political capital on the basis of allegations of waste and lack of restraint, which are not supported by fact.

Hon. G. I. Smith: I wonder if the honourable gentleman would read again what his speechwriters have said regarding the amount of money spent by the government on its self-culogizing advertising campaign.

Senator Perrault: The government has an advertising campaign—there is no doubt about that.

Senator Smith: I asked the honourable gentleman to read what he has before him.

Senator Perrault: In relation to the total budget, the cost of advertising is a minuscule amount.

An Hon. Senator: What's $8 million?

Senator Perrault: The people of Canada have a right to know how their tax dollars are being expended on their behalf. This should be an entitlement of the people of your province, Nova Scotia, and the other provinces. They should know how their dollars are being managed at the federal level. Surely the honourable senator is not criticizing that.

Senator Smith: What you really mean is that you are feeding pap from your imaginative values of that type of advertising. You are not concerned with telling people the truth in that advertising; you are concerned with spreading propaganda.

Senator Perrault: This government is not concerned with what the honourable senator has so colourfully described as propaganda; it is concerned with meeting the economic problems which plague this nation and other nations. That is the number one priority. The people of this country have a right to know how their tax dollars are being spent, and the programs which are available to improve their lot and assist their incomes.

The honourable senator often sounds like a clone of Scrooge in Dickens' A Christmas Carol. In the face of facts, often he will say, "Humbug" or, "This is nonsense." I hope that the generous spirit which eventually transformed Scrooge will transform him some day.

Senator Smith: Since the honourable gentleman insists on making a long speech, I suppose that the same privilege is extended to everyone.

The best thing I can wish for the honourable gentleman, and the information and helpfulness he can provide to the Senate, is for him to lessen his lexicon of blustering and bombastic words and confine himself to facts occasionally—occasionally, is all I ask.

[Senator Perrault.]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REPORTED ANNUAL RATE INCREASES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information to give concerning the Canada Post Corporation. Over recent weeks, I have been asked questions by certain honourable senators about Canada Post, so I have some facts to provide.

Hon. G. I. Smith: That is a change.

Senator Perrault: I should like to put the postal rate increases into perspective. My reply will be a long one, but it is a reply to a number of questions that have been asked. I shall be most pleased to present it now. It will take but a few minutes.

The deficit of the Canada Post Corporation for this year will be about $620 million. The corporation is expected to reduce that over the next few years in order to eventually reach the goal of self-sufficiency.

The corporation has formidable targets to meet. It intends to deal with them in a number of ways—by improving cost effectiveness, by boosting productivity and by adopting a predictable policy directed toward gradually shifting the total cost of postal service from taxpayers to users. Postal increases will not be made arbitrarily or by whim.

The recent rate increases were not popular but they were necessary. I believe it was the Honourable Senator Donahoe who seemed to suggest that these rates were unfair—at least, that is the expression in—

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I only remember that they promised to improve the service if they raised the rates.

Senator Perrault: I have an answer to the honourable senator's question which he raised yesterday with respect to the invitation he was sent. I hope the honourable senator has an opportunity to read that, and after reading it perhaps he will be more understanding of the Post Office.

One of the main reasons that the deficit has grown so alarmingly is that postal rates had not gone up for a period of three years. Canada Post's costs have shot up alarmingly over that period. The new rates will enable the corporation to reduce the subsidy requirements and to fund revenue-producing services.

These rates have only been in effect a short time and the corporation is still assessing their impact on its business customers. Until it has done this, it is premature to suggest further rate revisions.

There is a widespread misconception that I must clear up, and it is that the Canada Post Corporation has a monopoly on the mails and can increase rates with impunity. There is an impression that the corporation is beyond challenge and can act arbitrarily with impunity. That is certainly not the case.

The Canada Post Corporation is required by Parliament to take over the operation of the mails from a department of the federal government which previously had that responsibility. The postal service will now be run more like an independent business, subject to the same discipline of the marketplace as every other business, with one highly qualified exception.

The postal service is also a public service with unique social responsibilities. One of those responsibilities is to make sure that all Canadians and businesses have access to a basic level of service at a standard cost to themselves, no matter where they live or where they do business in this country. To discharge that responsibility fairly and consistently, we must price the postal service in the same way as other public services are priced, whether they be utilities such as local hydro-electric commissions, transportation systems such as the Toronto Transit Commission, or communication facilities such as those offered by Bell Canada, which is, of course, one of the corporation's main competitors.

Parliament recognized this principle by writing into Canada Post's mandate a preferred position on first class mail. The rate indicated by the preferred position is 30 cents for 30 grams. Is this too much for the carriage of a letter from Newfoundland to the Yukon?

Senator Donahoe: It sure is.

Senator Perrault: Incredibly, the honourable senator says that it is, but I will not comment on that because I do not want to be unduly political.

The rate is the minimum financial condition for giving all Canadians a basic standard of postal service, whether they live in densely populated cities or in remote and tiny villages.

It is important to recognize that the rest of our services—parcels, ad mail, our courier service, and many others—are delivered daily across Canada in competition with the private sector. Private entrepreneurs can and do compete with the Post Office.

Let me reassure honourable senators that this competition has and will force the corporation to pursue realistic pricing policies for all its services.

The only concession made to Canada Post in discharging its responsibilities is the preferred position I mentioned a moment ago on first class mail. Such a limited concession does not result in a monopoly. The corporation has no exclusive claim on first class mail traffic; quite the contrary.

Canada Post's mandate, in fact, specifically exempts from preferential status some of the mail now being handled by couriers. I refer, as one instance, to the large volumes of written material which are moved daily between head offices and regional operations by company employees. There are many other exemptions as well.

Where such mail does fall within the jurisdiction of Canada Post, it can still be carried by private carrier at a cost that Parliament has decreed will be at least, currently, $1.35.

Canada Post has an exclusive privilege in first class mail and certainly not a monopoly. Parliament, in granting this exclusive privilege in first class mail, re-asserted one of the basic principles upon which Canada's postal service was originally founded, a principle that underlies all of the world's leading postal systems. This principle is particularly appropriate to a vast country like Canada with its scattered population. That principle, quite simply, is this:

There will be a basic level of postal service available to everyone... individuals and business alike, across this country.

This ensures all Canadians, in cities, towns, villages and rural roads, will have mail service at the same affordable price.

Notwithstanding this mandate to provide a mail service to all Canadians, the corporation is still committed to working toward financial self-sufficiency. What is still at issue is the timetable to attain that. If it moves too fast, it will be prone to indigestible rate increases and pricing policies; if it moves too slowly, it loses the financial discipline of the bottom line. These constraints are hardly those enjoyed by any monopoly.

Clearly, then, Canada Post does not have a monopoly. What it does have is an exclusive privilege to deliver first class mail at a preferred rate. Parliament has re-affirmed this capability in recognition of the fact that the Post Office provides universal service throughout the country. Even in this instance, others can compete with it if they charge a multiple of the normal rate. In every other case, the corporation's products and services are fighting in head-to-head competition in the marketplace with many other businesses.

● (1510)

I would like to now address the charge—I am almost at the end—that the—

Senator Donahoe: Good!

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators have been asking for weeks for information about the Post Office. Now that I have brought that information to the Senate, they are impatient about listening to it.

Senator Smith: This is not information but propaganda.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator calls it propaganda, and yet I have divested myself of a virtual blizzard of facts.

I would like to now address the charge that the Canada Post Corporation is "flexing its muscles" and threatening legal action against those who are seeking alternative delivery methods.

A handful of utilities—ironically, pure monopolies in their own right—have decided that they want to use their own systems for some easy-to-deliver locations. However, it is being discussed as if this sort of thing were an epidemic. It is not. The vast majority of municipal utilities use the Post Office services. They are saying that they are prepared to invest in Canada Post Corporation at a time when the Post Office has an opportunity to turn things around.

The overwhelming majority of the business community has seemed willing to extend their support of the new corporation. A few have not. They have resorted to alternatives, in some instances, without objectively exploring the services the Post Office can offer. I have mentioned why the postal service was given a preferred position on first class mail. It is needed to ensure a basic service to all Canadians. The other side of that coin is that those who continue to use alternative services for first class mail, in breach of the corporation's mandate, are doing so at the expense of all Canadians. They are the ones who are really being subsidized, by the additional costs the rest of us must incur as a result.

In conclusion, the corporation's approach to resolving the problems has been by way of improving the postal service to the point where the need for alternative services is progressively reduced, and by selling Canada Post's services to customers. It is a marketing approach but, to be successful, it will need the support of the private sector. This strategy has only been in effect for a short time and the corporation sees no reason to change it now.

In the meantime, I want to emphasize that there is no lack of commitment to self-sufficiency for the Post Office. It is simply a matter of arriving at financial targets that also allow the Post Office to meet the other mandates of service set out in legislation.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a couple of follow-up questions on the two statements that the minister has made. He tells us that he has given us a blizzard of facts. I rather fear that it may turn out to be a snow job, particularly in respect to his mini-budget speech. After Senator Phillips introduces his resolution this afternoon, as he may do, my honourable friend can make another speech on the budget, and we will listen very attentively to it.

With respect to his first one, could he finally furnish us with the spending estimates of the federal government on a national accounts basis? I believe that the figures he gave us recently were not on that basis, which is the all-in basis.

The second thing I would like him to do is to adjust the figures he gave us for the changes in bookkeeping procedures which have adorned the present budget. He knows what several of them are—he just mentioned the Post Office. Another one is the Oil Import Compensation Fund which has been removed from the expenditures and handled in another way, but exists just the same. Would my honourable friend be so kind as to bring in those figures so that we can compare the amount for the current fiscal year with the amount of the past fiscal year on what would be the same equitable basis?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will certainly confer with my colleague, the Minister of Finance, in order to find out if that information can be made available.

Senator Roblin: Does that mean that it might not be produced?

Senator Perrault: I will direct an inquiry to the minister.

THE SENATE

MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS—PRINTING OF WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I have not been here for a sufficient length of time to understand how the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate are prepared. It seems that written questions that remain unanswered are not printed in the Order Paper each sitting day. Would the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader explain why those questions are not printed each sitting day until they are answered?

[Senator Perrault.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we will obtain an answer to that question.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Molson has asked me to remind honourable senators who may be interested that the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders will be meeting in Room 356-S when the Senate rises this afternoon.

Senator Molson has asked me to do this because he realizes that the notice was rather short, and he hopes that there will be a full attendance since there is a rather substantial accumulation of business for the committee to consider.

YOUNG OFFENDERS BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill C-61, intituled: "An Act respecting young offenders and to repeal the Juvenile Delinquents Act".—(Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C.).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in the name of Senator Neiman, I move that this order stand until Tuesday, May 25, 1982.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA— REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science on Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Florence B. Bird moved that the report be adopted.

She said: Honourable senators, in the absence of Senator Bonnell, I was in the Chair during the single meeting when your committee studied Bill S-25. We interviewed the following four witnesses: Stanley Stillwell, of Winnipeg, who is President of Dominion Command of The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada; Albert Bianchini, of Edmonton, who is the Vice-President of Dominion Command; John C.

McArthur, who is the Secretary-Treasurer of the Dominion Command; and Shannon Howard Martin, their legal adviser.

Your committee was concerned about the points raised by Senator Macdonald and Senator Smith concerning the possible wide interpretation of membership as stated in paragraph 2(a) of the bill.

The witnesses assured us that all persons applying for membership are subject to a careful screening process to avoid infiltration by possible subversive individuals. They made it clear that it is unlikely that former veterans would tolerate the membership of men and women who had fought against Canada, or who were known to be opposed to the principles of a free, democratic society.

What this bill does is to legalize what is already a policy enforced by The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, as it did in the case of the Royal Canadian Legion.

The Law Clerk suggested three minor amendments to help clarify the text of the bill. All of them were readily agreed to by the witnesses and by your committee. The first amendment changes the long title and reflects more accurately the scope of the bill; and the second and third amendments deal with inaccuracies in the French version of the bill.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to ask one question. Referring to the first amendment, realizing that in the course of time the majority of members would not be veterans, was any consideration given to the fact that they drop the word "Veterans" from the title?

Senator Bird: The feeling on the part of our witnesses was that there would always be veterans as long as we have an army, navy and air force, which we would obviously need for civil defence and in case of crises in the government. Therefore, there would always be veterans who would be looking after the bylaws, which are very strict, as well as the screening process, and they will continue to need the support of their families and like-minded people.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Marshall moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF THE FIRST REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs entitled: "Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces", tabled in the Senate on 10th February, 1982.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. It would appear that on at least two occasions the Deputy Leader of the Government has extended to me the courtesy of closing the debate on this report. Obviously closing the debate in the Senate—or in the country—on our failings in matters of national defence is the least of my wishes, unless we have had some meaningful response or notice of intent from the government. In the interim, the subcommittee is pursuing its inquiry and will produce reports to the people of Canada on the status and requirements of Canada's defence establishments. Should the government wish this item dropped from the Senate's order paper at this time, I will not oppose it, but I do not want to share any responsibility for it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Perrault said there was a possibility of his intervening. I know of no other expression of intention by the government to intervene in the debate. I suggest, therefore, that this order be allowed to stand until next Tuesday, to give Senator Perrault an opportunity to intervene if he wishes. If he does not wish to proceed, we can follow the procedure recommended by the chairman of the subcommittee.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, can the Deputy Leader of the Government advise whether any honourable senators may speak twice on this report?

Senator Frith: Certainly, with leave; and I do not anticipate any difficulty in obtaining leave.

Order stands.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC, FISCAL AND ENERGY POLICIES OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, pursuant to notice of May 18, 1982, moved:

That the Senate of Canada do urge the Federal Government to re-direct its economic, fiscal and energy policies, and bring forward as soon as possible a new budget; such budget to provide proper economic direction, improved employment opportunities and measures to restore national confidence in the economy.

He said: Honourable senators, I must first apologize for the confusion in moving the motion. I shall presume that when I have completed my remarks the apology will not have been necessary.

Earlier it was my intention to move a motion dealing with Alsands and the Alaska pipeline. I went home to dinner and tuned in the CBC to hear the 6 o'clock news. I learned that the Conservative opposition in the other place had moved a similar motion. I was rather disappointed to hear that, but, on the other hand, I was encouraged by a friend on the opposition benches who said, "All right, you have, in the language of CBC personnel, been pre-empted". I may have been pre-empted, honourable senators, but that does not mean that I or any other honourable senator in this chamber has been deprived of the opportunity to look at the economic situation and—I would particularly like honourable senators to note this—to vote on the economic situation.

Honourable senators, I hope that a debate will take place on my motion. I hope that later on it will not be possible for me to stand up and say, “There are not enough senators present.” I hope that honourable senators will be sufficiently interested to consider today’s difficult situation.

Honourable senators, I approach you with nothing more than an honest request that you consider the difficulties. I hope that in my remarks I have not labelled anything Liberal that Senator Lamontagne finds offensive—

An Hon. Senator: Not yet.

Senator Phillips: —and I hope that I have not labelled certain things which, within the Liberal viewpoint, would be considered offensive.

I see Senator Benidickson talking to the lady senator from New Brunswick and also a senator from British Columbia, who I understand represents the Indian population. I have had the greatest respect for Senator Benidickson and also for the other two senators, but there is no need for them to get into a conclave, a whispering group. Come on, honourable senators, be fair.

We do not have to have millions of dollars to be talking about today’s economy. We have to have common sense. Common sense replaces the millions of dollars that the Grit party has become used to.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is the trouble with common sense—it is not very common.

Senator Phillips: I will remember that, Senator Frith. I thank you.

● (1530)

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, may I say a word on a point of privilege?

I hope my honourable friend, who has always got along well with me, was not complaining because I went to speak to two other senators. My purpose was to make arrangements to go with them to the funeral of the husband of one of our highly regarded waitresses in the Parliamentary Restaurant; that was all. I hope I did not interfere with my honourable friend’s speech.

Senator Phillips: I thank the honourable senator for his intervention. I would like to think that I did not have a reason to incite him with regard to his remarks. Unfortunately, I cannot agree with his intervention. If he really wants to be hit with the attitude of 1957 to the present day, I think I can remind him of a few things. I would just ask the honourable senator to remember that we are friends. I have always respected him, and I am sure I always will, but do not push me too far, senator.

Honourable senators, it is very easy for me to say my motion deals with all sections of the economy. Our fisheries, our agriculture and our manufacturing industries are completely destroyed. I look at the government benches and see they are vacant. I note the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not present, as is the case with the Minister of State for Economic Development, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, and with the character no one can describe, the Minister for nothing. Why should I stand here and ask questions? Someone always says, “Well, you get answers.” I do not get answers from them, however, honourable senators. I end up asking questions of a vacant head—a head that contains nothing.

Honourable senators, you have been here as often as I have. Would you like those answers? Would you be proud of those answers, Senator Frith? I just ask you, because these are points that disturb me.

Honourable senators, when I look at my notes, I see that it is my intention to discuss the mega-projects, including the Alsands project. I presume that I am supposed to discuss the mega-projects with the attitude that there are certain benefits to us that may come from them, and I am agreeable to doing that; but, Honourable Senator Frith, every time I have spoken in this chamber you have got to your feet with the ultimate knowledge of whether I should speak or whether I should not. You give directions to the Speaker and, incidentally, I do not mind saying that the Speaker has always followed them. I suppose that somehow or other it was my fault for having raised certain subjects. I am directing that remark to the deputy leader, and I hope I am not giving him cause for satisfaction, or whatever you want to call it. It is a rare occasion when the deputy leader is not present. I compliment him on that. It is also a rare occasion when he gets back to reality. I ask him, in the name of God, to get back to reality. I respect the honourable senator in a good many ways, but, get back to reality, senator. It is a simple request. Get back to reality and I will have even greater respect for you. If you think I am wrong, Senator Frith, let me point out that Senator McElman has not opened his mouth so far, so I must be right.

Hon. Charles McElman: You tempt me deeply.

Senator Phillips: I thought I would, senator.

Honourable senators, this afternoon I just want to forget my notes, make my remarks and tell you basically what I think. That is very difficult, honourable senators. It is easy for me to say, “Forget about unemployment.”

● (1540)

By the way, Senator Frith, I have two uncles who were Grits. In a large family, certain things tend to be overlooked. Although I have forgotten many members of my father’s family and my mother’s family, I do remember that there were two Grits, and for that I apologize. Everybody has a black sheep in the family.

Senator Frith: I am sure the feeling was mutual.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator is absolutely right: my uncle said the same thing to me. My point is simply that there are times when I understand you guys, Senator Frith.

Honourable senators, I find that I have spoken for a good many minutes and I have not yet referred to my notes. If I continue in this pattern, I would ask honourable senators to remind me to refer to my notes because I have no desire to proceed without looking at them. At the same time, I have no desire to simply stand up and read my notes.

I would now like to refer briefly to a statement which was made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to the effect that we are now independent, that we have cut the apron strings, that everything is free. Honourable senators, I just ask this question—

Are you through twisting and turning, Senator Frith?

Senator Frith: I was just counting to see if we have a quorum, Senator Phillips.

Senator Phillips: If the Honourable Senator Frith would like a quorum count, I would remind him that I can count.

The question I should like to ask is: Do you believe that Canada has cut its apron strings; that Canada is free and can do whatever it likes in the future? Do you agree with that, Senator Frith?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this is not Question Period. I take that as a rhetorical question. I have heard it and I would like to hear Senator Phillips develop what he has in mind.

Senator Phillips: Well, I know what the reply of the honourable senator will be. I must say that I am a little disappointed that he cannot stand up in this chamber and say that we are free. Is he willing to go to Perth and say, "Oh, no, we are no longer free"? Are you, senator, willing to do that?

Senator Frith: No. Besides, I doubt whether I can get there before dark.

Senator Phillips: It would not matter whether you arrived at sundown or sunrise, Senator Frith, we would still be in disagreement. I want to make that clear.

How can the Honourable Senator Frith, however, say that we are independent, but that they are not independent in Perth and they are not independent in Smiths Falls? How is it that the honourable senator can have that attitude?

Honourable senators, I have been having what I thought was fun in dealing with Senator Frith; perhaps the Senate did not think it was fun. Now, I shall move on to the Honourable Senator Olson, the Minister of State for Economic Development and Cancellation. In the November 12 budget, the Minister of Finance filed a document entitled, "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s." Honourable senators, I should like to quote the first paragraph:

The decade of the 1980s holds great promise, offering opportunities of unprecedented magnitude and the potential for lasting benefits from economic renewal to Canadians in every area of the country.

Honourable senators, for the 1.75 million Canadians who are unemployed and for the 1.5 million Canadians who have been forced to accept part-time employment, that promise is meaningless. I say to the Honourable Senator Olson that the decade of development has become the decade of depression.

Honourable senators, allow me to go on to read the next paragraph:

These developments will involve massive investments in productive capability, and in the transportation industry's capacity to ship bulk commodities. The recently published report of the Major Projects Task Force, for example, identifies $440 billion of potential projects, predominantly in the energy and resource sectors, which are under consideration for investment between now and the end of the century.

Honourable senators, I draw to your attention that the "now" referred to in the quoted section is long gone. The end of the century is now the new target.

• (1550)

Recently, Senator Olson, in replying to Senator Roblin, said, "Oh, but it is difficult to understand and to project the mega-projects to the year 2000 or beyond." Honourable senators, there is the crux of the truth: the Honourable Senator Olson is now projecting the projects beyond the year 2000. He is somewhat like the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and, yes, the Prime Minister, in that they have assembled a group to consider a television program, which is rather simple: "Pay for Your Fantasies, Your Dreams." Yes, honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Olson, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have all bought that idea of a fantasy. But the fantasy did not materialize because they refused to pay the price. Of course, I would not suggest that the Honourable Senator Olson did not attempt to pay; but he attempted to pay with Canadian dollars and he never got beyond that point.

We on this side of the Senate are quite accustomed to the honourable senator replying to questions with a sort of smart-alecky attitude, saying, "Do you want the long list or do you want the short list?" Well, honourable senators, I am asking the honourable minister to give us the short list, the long list and, above all, the factual list. But he cannot do that. He knows that when it came to paying for their fantasy island, the honourable senator, the Honourable Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Honourable Minister of Finance and the Right Honourable Prime Minister had to pay in Canadian dollars and nobody would accept such payment.

On numerous occasions the Leader of the Opposition has reminded the Honourable Senator Olson that his title as minister is about to be changed. I find it intriguing that the minister's title is to be changed from "Minister of State for Economic Development" to "Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development." In any event, that just has not occurred, honourable senators, and I can tell you why it has not. The reason is simple: the change in his title has not been made because his title is going through a further change. Senator Lamontagne, I am sure you are more aware than I am that his title is to be changed to "The Minister responsible for Economic Cancellation and Development."

I realize it may be difficult for the honourable minister to accept, but the next time we on this side are asked whether we want the long list or the short list, I wish he would remember that what we really want is the factual list.

Honourable senators, let us consider for a moment the mega-projects that have become mega-disasters as a result of the manipulations of the micro-minds of the cabinet. The two projects uppermost in the minds of Canadians, when one mentions cancelled projects, are the Alsands and the Alaska pipeline, and I will have more to say about those two projects later. But let me ask the minister now to consider for a moment some of the other projects that have been cancelled but had not received the publicity or the advance notice of the Liberal Party. Just consider Cold Lake. Well, it is frozen, honourable senators. But I, for one, did not receive an announcement from the honourable minister with respect to Cold Lake. How come? Let's look at the Syncrude expansion. That is deadlier than a mackerel, honourable senators. Why didn't I receive an announcement from the minister with respect to that? How come the Deputy Leader of the Government did not remind me about that? Let's look at Judy Creek. That project has also gone down the creek.

I am sorry that the honourable minister seems to be so irritated.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I am not; not at all.

Senator Phillips: I really did not intend that the honourable minister should become irritated. Perhaps he will just bear with me for a minute. The Polar gas project is another that has been cancelled. How come? I suspect that interest rates might have something to do with it. The project for liquefied gas has been cancelled. Can the minister tell me why that project was cancelled? It was in his budget.

The upgrading of heavy oil has been cancelled. Honourable senators, surely after the announcements concerning that—and there were several from the Minister of Energy—one could expect that project to be a present project receiving high consideration. As I said, the list of cancelled projects has now become the long list, and the list of projects to be undertaken does not even exist. I could go on and give a long list of cancelled projects, but I am sure Senator Olson will be doing that. It is unfortunate that Senator Olson and Senator Frith have capitulated. I wish we could have something a bit different.

● (1600)

Honourable senators, I have enjoyed myself and I hope honourable senators have enjoyed my remarks. It is unfortunate that Senator Frith has not enjoyed my remarks as much as I have.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): He would not admit it.

[Senator Phillips.]

Senator Frith: I did not hear what he said, so I cannot anyway.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I come to the part in my notes where it says, "The Minister of State for Economic Development is about to have a title change." Have I dealt with this topic?

Senator Olson: Yes, you have.

Senator Flynn: Very effectively.

Senator Phillips: Then that is fine. I am sure the minister accepts the fact that he is to become the "Minister of Cancellations." The fact is that Senator Olson will be busier than a cat on a hot tin roof if he is trying to explain the cancellations into the future.

Senator Olson: I like to be busy; I thrive on it.

Senator Phillips: Pardon me? I did not hear you.

Senator Olson: It is all right; I don't want to interrupt you.

Senator Flynn: I bet you are sorry you did.

Senator Phillips: Looking at my notes, then at Senator Olson, I am reminded of the fact that I have not dealt with the Alsands situation. I recall that the honourable senator was approached by the CBC and other media organizations. There is a picture somewhere showing him standing on a stone on his ranch. I do not object to that, and I merely say that I wish I had something like that. But then he said that—and it is not Eskimos but buffalo that rub their heads on the stone on which he was standing. Do you remember that, senator?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Phillips: Good. I have no complaints about the honourable senator standing out in the middle of nowhere and having a buffalo rub his head. But let us say that this buffalo which approaches the honourable senator and rubs his head has a certain amount of knowledge. I wonder what the response would be then. I am saying this with the idea in mind of waking up the Senate. Let us suppose that Joe Clark is the buffalo. Let us suppose that Joe Clark, as the buffalo, says, "Oh, there are no interest rates." Would the minister say the same thing as he said last week—and I shall come to that later?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I wonder what he said.

Senator Phillips: I have mentioned that the mega-disasters have made Canadians aware of the National Energy Program as a national failure. It should also be recognized that our economy is collapsing. Most Canadians have looked at the Alsands project and have said that it will help Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. However, the spin-off from the Alsands project would be of great help not only to Alberta but also to Ontario and Quebec.

I am sorry if I am interrupting the conversation between Senator Olson and Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: Apology accepted.

Senator Phillips: Let us consider for a moment the towers that would be built as a result of the Alsands project. Some of those towers would carry high voltage power lines among other things. However, those towers have been cancelled. Those cancellations do not only affect Alberta, as Senator Olson seems to think, but also Ontario and Quebec. I notice that Senator Olson is picking up his notes and is preparing to leave. I ask that he stay for a moment because I want to come to him in a short time.

Senator Flynn: This is just the beginning.

Hon. Lowell Murray: The introductory remarks.

Senator Olson: I shall read the speech very carefully tomorrow.

Senator Phillips: I do not think Senator Olson recognizes the fact that such a project would require a great deal of steel. In Ontario alone it would require 200,000 tonnes of special steel to build these lines. The Hamilton steel workers know that, and I would hope that the Liberal senator from Hamilton would make other senators aware of it. However, in case he does not, I hope senators will remember my remarks.

● (1610)

Every tap and every valve necessary for the Alsands project would have been made either in Ontario or Quebec. Because of Mr. Lalonde's decision, those will never be manufactured.

Thousands of trucks would have been required to meet Alsands' needs. Those, honourable senators, would have been made in Canada, but they will not be made now or ever. Tires would have been required for those trucks. Every plant that was producing tires in Ontario has closed.

Honourable senators, I am disappointed that the Minister of State for Economic Development has left the chamber, but I appreciate the fact that the Deputy Leader of the Government is still making notes.

I turn now to the situation as it affects Montreal. Honourable senators, the engineering institutes within Montreal have lost a $1 billion contract. Does the Deputy Leader of the Government really think that the Charter of Rights was worth $1 billion?

The Government of Canada has boasted about its assistance for electronic development. Honourable senators, I would simply make the comment that it will be very difficult to sell electronics to Japan.

The migrant workers for the Alsands project have come from eastern Canada. Where are those migrant workers to go now? Will they go back home to the maritime provinces? Most of them are now in western Canada.

It is my hope that honourable senators will take a more concerned attitude about the cancellation of the mega-projects than did the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has said that we still have the F-18A, which is an American aircraft, and that we still have the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes pipeline. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that we still have the Beaufort Sea project and the Hibernia project. Honourable senators, I do not expect that the F-18A aircraft will materialize; neither do I expect that the TQ&M pipeline will materialize.

Honourable senators, I turn now to the National Energy Program. The NEP places more emphasis on nationalism than it does on energy. I am sure we all realize that nationalism does not turn turbines; it gives very low mileage in a car; and it does not heat a home when the temperature is below zero.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in conjunction with the Prime Minister, made certain attitudes public. The Prime Minister was to get his Constitution, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was to achieve his idea of socialism in energy. I do not agree with that. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, during his present career, has done more to destroy oil production than the bomber commands of the allied forces in Europe and the Pacific could possibly have done.

Honourable senators, I realize that my remarks are taking longer than I had anticipated and, therefore, I will attempt to abbreviate them.

Last year, honourable senators, as a result of the National Energy Program, Canada lost about $18.6 billion in investments. This was not investment that was looking for special returns; this investment was looking for legislative returns; but that money left Canada.

● (1620)

Honourable senators, let us just look at this situation for a moment. Of that $10.2 billion I mentioned earlier, $5.3 billion was foreign; $4.9 billion was Canadian, but it left Canada. Why? Why would Canadian funds leave Canada? In addition, we have $8.4 billion for the purchase of shares of foreign-owned companies in Canada—in other words, Canadianization, or Mr. Lalonde's socialism. The total figure is $18.6 billion.

Now, honourable senators, there is an assumption that you just do not recognize figures, and that the company investing tends to forget, and so on, but, honourable senators, I will come back to the lack of investment. I would ask you to remember this, that of the amount of money that left Canada last year, supposedly to account for Canadianization, the interest far surpassed the dividends. I ask you to consider that point. The idea of Canadianization will cost Canada $56 billion in the next few years. Canadianization will cost $56 billion, plus increased interest rates. Is it really worth it? You can smirk if you like, but I do not think it is worth it.

I look at my notes and see that I have a long section dealing with the fact that the federal government has reduced the payments to the provinces for health services. I look at those figures and I see that they amount to about $5.5 billion. I also look at my notes, honourable senators, and see that the federal government is giving Petro-Canada $5.5 billion. I do not think that is purely coincidental.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that we still have the Beaufort Sea and Hibernia, that there would be no problems with oil production. He further said that we would be self-sufficient in 1990.

Recently an announcement was made that a consortium had been formed to drill nine wells in the Beaufort Sea. These nine wells—incidentally, this became a mega-project—will cost $600 million, but the taxpayer is being nailed for $50 million a well. Honourable senators, I just cannot see this type of reasoning. Why should the mere drilling of a well cost Canadian taxpayers $50 million for their mere 25 per cent? Is that justifiable? I ask honourable senators to look at that very carefully.

Honourable senators, I have figures that show a well off Newfoundland or a well off Nova Scotia will cost $20 million to $30 million, as compared to the Beaufort Sea, which will cost about $66 million per well. I also have a study that was carried out by the Alberta Gas Trunk Line, now NOVA. It compares the Beaufort Sea and the Hibernia cost. Honourable senators, the costs in the Beaufort Sea are far higher than they are in Hibernia. For the Beaufort Sea, the cost of development and exploration is $11.75 per barrel, including $7.35 for tariffs and transportation.

Honourable senators, I want you to remember the figure ten. The ten begins to escalate each year. Also the ten refers to the development and exploration costs.

Let us take the lower one, the transportation costs of $7.35 in 1980, Senator Frith. Let us take that through to 1990. That then becomes $19.06 or 42.5 cents per gallon, or 10 cents per litre, according to my calculations. I ask you to consider what the difference will be in the future, what the cost of oil will be in 1990. I project that it will be $6 or $7 a barrel more because of the current attitude of the government.

● (1630)

Honourable senators, I realize that I have spoken for a considerable length of time. I should like to ask you at this point whether I should adjourn the debate and resume at another time, when I will attempt to be briefer.

Senator Roblin: Go ahead.

Senator Frith: Honourable senator, of course, you can adjourn the debate and move a motion to continue at a later date, and I am sure that you will have no difficulty in getting support for such a motion. But depending on how much more time you feel you need, it is not late; it is only a quarter to five. Therefore, I do not think you need feel any pressure to stop now. However, I would certainly prefer that you stop before 6 o'clock so that rule 12 does not bring us back here automatically at 8 o'clock this evening.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in looking at my notes I seem to be a little more than half way through, but I did not intend to be this long. I will try to abbreviate my notes on the transportation of oil. I would ask honourable senators to consider the difficulty of transportation of oil from Ellesmere Island down through the straits. With the additional expense, it is just not possible to sell that oil. We could transport it from the Beaufort Sea at a great expense, and we could bring that oil to Come By Chance for refining. Of course, Come By Chance is closed down at the moment and it will cost about $300 million to get it into working order. When it gets there, what are you going to do with it? You cannot distribute it from there, so then, hopefully, you ship it off to the United States. But the United States is not going to buy oil at $20 a barrel above the world price.

[Senator Phillips.]

The Trans-Quebec and Maritime pipeline is a very interesting one because originally it was going to be one way and now they are considering reversing it. Recently, we saw some new drawings and those drawings are very simple. They are going to take it from four feet in Montreal down to eight inches or four inches at the Strait of Canso. Honourable senators, if you try to reverse that you will have the damndest explosion in Montreal since the atomic bomb exploded on Hiroshima. I ask you to stop and consider that the TQ&M pipeline not be reversible. What we in the maritimes would like would simply be, if there is enough oil off Sable, not to ship it back to Montreal but to ship it the other way. Probably there is not enough natural gas there, but let us make the pipeline reversible. Let us not have it at four inches at the Strait of Canso and four feet at Montreal.

Honourable senators, I am now going to deal with unemployment. For years we have heard the government refer to inflation rates and the rate of unemployment. At the present time we have 1.3 million unemployed that are accounted for. It is presumed that we have another half a million unemployed that are not accounted for. We have 1.5 million that do not have full-time jobs or are unable to find them because the government is not encouraging programs that will create jobs.

The next important point I should like to make is that the government one week will take a certain attitude regarding deficits and so on, but then ignore the point that disturbs me most. That is, we are spending $2 million per hour to pay interest on our deficit; and we can then turn around and say, "Well, let us have a look at interest and interest rates". I ask how one can be sincere if one is going to do that.

● (1640)

The purchasing power of the dollar has been reduced to less than half its value of 10 years ago, but, in the meantime, government expenditures have increased fourfold. Surely, that is reason for us to stop and consider. In the meantime, the government has made no effort to control its expenditures. The main cause of—

Senator Frith: Pardon my sneezing; I am allergic to expenditures.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, let us stop and consider the fact that basically the cause of inflation is a question of over-expenditure.

I would like to make one brief point concerning Senator Olson's statement in Alberta. I am sorry that he is not present in the chamber, but I hope that he will read my speech. Senator Olson, when he was in Alberta last weekend, expressed concern that Canada would no longer be able to compete in international markets if inflation and high interest rates continued in Canada.

Honourable senators, I am not in disagreement with Senator Olson's statement. In fact, I am rather pleased to think that a cabinet minister would suddenly recognize that fact. I would ask this of the minister: Would he provide us with an explanation of his views? Surely, we in the Senate are entitled to hear the views he expressed in Red Deer. Would he tell us what his attitude is? This is an ideal motion for Senator Olson to absorb and support, because he was worried about interest rates in the United States; he was worried about inflation in the United States; and he was also worried that we in Canada are doing worse than the United States. Therefore, I would say to Senator Frith that this is his opportunity to tell the minister to support this motion, and he need have no worry in that regard.

Honourable senators, I realize that I have taken a good deal of your time, and I thank you for your attention. However, I should like to mention briefly two things, namely, fisheries and farming. In regard to fisheries, I will summarize my views in this way: Last year many fishery plants in Atlantic Canada were closed. They closed because the plants could no longer afford to carry an inventory at 20 per cent interest. The government's response was to appoint Mr. Kirby. Last year Mr. Kirby was a constitutional expert. This year he is a fishmonger.

With regard to farming—and I realize Senator Smith is an expert in farming—let us look at the speech given by the Minister of Agriculture to dairy farmers in Saskatchewan. The Minister of Agriculture said that farm income would decline by 30 per cent. Let us take a brief look at Statistics Canada. It has confirmed that bankruptcies are up 50 per cent this year.

Honourable senators, I apologize for having taken up so much of your time. There are a number of subjects that I wanted to touch on, but I realize that there is only so much time.

In closing my remarks, may I say this: I have asked you to consider my motion, which refers to "a new budget". As a Conservative, I have respected you Grits in that you were able to come up with two oil policies at a time when it was necessary. Is there any reason why you cannot come up with a two-budget policy? I believe you can.

I come from a very large family. I had two uncles who were Grits, and I still ended up respecting them. I would hope that you people would also show respect and vote for my motion. Here I am not being partisan. I can point to the fact that John Turner, the leading candidate for the Liberal Party leadership, has asked for a new budget. I can also point to the fact that Donald Macdonald, who is close behind John Turner, has asked for a new budget.

Senator Frith: And also Brian Mulroney.

Senator Phillips: I do not blame the honourable senator for listening to him. I, too, am impressed with Brian Mulroney, and I appreciate the fact that the honourable senator is impressed with him. Let us get on with the consideration of my motion.

● (1650)

I realize that each of you over there, down to my left, will have his own view, and that you will vote according to your own beliefs. I do not quarrel with that, but I just ask one thing: For God's sake, let us vote on this subject. Let us not leave it on the Order Paper perpetually. When I look at the Order Paper, I see motions going back to last July. I ask you to remember this, that a vote against this motion would, in my opinion, be disastrous; but a vote to delay it would be disgraceful. Let us vote on it tomorrow night at 10 o'clock, or next week, but let us vote on it, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Balfour, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 20, 1982

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY SENATOR COOK

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, I rise to make a statement on a matter of personal privilege.

Honourable senators, Canada is a federal country. This sometimes annoys the Right Honourable the Prime Minister because it imposes some curbs on his powers. He has quarrelled with every other first minister. However, this is not too important—politicians come, and must, thank God, eventually go.

The courts, particularly the superior courts, are different from politicians. They do not come and go. They are permanent.

It is vital that all citizens of Canada, wherever they live, perceive our courts to be competent, independent and impartial. This is even more important now that the new Charter of Rights puts more responsibility on the courts. Any action which would tend to bring the independence and competence of any of our courts into question is a grave matter.

In my opinion, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice have dealt a severe blow to the public perception of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Cook: Honourable senators, I am a member of the Bar of Newfoundland and a former Master of the Court. In my view, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice have behaved with great impropriety. Perhaps if either of them had any real experience of practising before the courts, they would have had second thoughts before treating with contempt one of the superior courts of Canada.

I deplore their shocking discourtesy and their complete lack of statesmanship. Therefore, I can no longer support the Trudeau government, nor do I wish to remain a member of the Liberal Party, under its present leadership.

I was an active member of the party under the leadership of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent and the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, two great statesmen, and two wise, tolerant and kindly gentlemen. It is sad to contemplate the present state of this party. There are few distinguished public men or women in the provinces who are active Liberals. Federally, it has fallen under the complete and absolute control and power of one man who, I am sorry to say, I do not perceive to be a great statesman, nor do I think he is wise or tolerant, and he is certainly not a kindly gentleman.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until next Tuesday, May 25, 1982, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

JUSTICE

NEWFOUNDLAND—JURISDICTION OVER OFFSHORE
RESOURCES—REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—
NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I would like to move on the next appropriate day—I presume it would be Tuesday next—a certain motion. I do this only because I am concerned that my country be ruled by law and not by men. My motion is:

That the Senate deplores the decision of the Government of Canada to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada the question of jurisdiction over the seabed resources off Newfoundland, called Hibernia—

And this is my point.

—while at the same time the Appeal Court of Newfoundland is seized with the matter that includes this very question.

I hesitate to bring this matter before the Senate and perhaps I should not say any more, but it is an urgent matter. Perhaps I will not receive it, but I request leave to move this motion today.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Leave is not granted.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): No, of course not.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): What did you expect?

Senator Perrault: It requires notice.

Senator Flynn: That generosity is typical of the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Martial Asselin: I second the motion.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): He will need until next week, anyway, to get his argument straight.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am not sure about that.

Senator Flynn: I would like to see your argument. It is probably just blind faith.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDUSTRY

DOME PETROLEUM LTD.—SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

The Hon. the Speaker: Are there no questions, honourable senators?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Yes. We have a problem because it is very difficult to choose.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Try to ask questions and not make speeches.

Senator Flynn: I defy you to give me a lesson in that respect. Anyone who reads Hansard knows that you never reply to a question, and that you follow the bad example set by the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): What are you talking about?

Senator Flynn: I am not talking about anything very important.

Senator Perrault: Try to be lucid.

Senator Flynn: I was talking about you.

Senator Perrault: You were not talking about anything very sensibly.

Senator Flynn: Indeed, talking about you is not sensible at all.

I am wondering what the Minister of State for Economic Development has to say about the problem of Dome Petroleum?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the minister is aware that there has been some speculation recently in a number of newspapers in western Canada and, I believe, also in the Toronto Globe and Mail of today. There has been no response to any request with respect to their financing problems by the federal government.

Senator Flynn: Is the minister or the government worried about the situation concerning that great company and all the mega-projects connected with it?

Hon. Jack Marshall: No, what's a billion?

Senator Olson: The Government of Canada is concerned about all companies, both large and small, that are having difficulties in this economic downturn which is being experienced worldwide. That, of course would include Dome Petroleum.

CANADA

ALLEGED CIA INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a few questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate who always requests that we ask short questions relating to facts. Very briefly, could he tell me if he has met on one or more occasions, beginning in 1976, with a Mr. John Meier?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Yes, I have met with Mr. Meier.

Senator Nurgitz: As a supplementary question, would the leader confirm whether he received certain material from that Mr. Meier, as, I believe, was reported in House of Commons Hansard and, certainly, in newspaper accounts?

Senator Perrault: I did receive some material from Mr. Meier.

Senator Nurgitz: As a further supplementary—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): This is like old times.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is like a new man.

Senator Nurgitz: I told you I would change him.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate, more than any other senator in this chamber, waxes rather eloquent about the government practising freedom of information—

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Keep the questions brief.

Hon. G. I. Smith: How about brief answers?

Senator Olson: I just wanted to compliment the honourable senator on how well he was doing.

Senator Nurgitz: I thank Senator Olson for his comment.

As I was saying, since the Leader of the Government, more than any other senator in this chamber, waxes rather eloquent about his government's practising freedom of information, would he undertake to make public the documents, the tapes or, indeed, the report that was made in connection with the meeting with Mr. Meier?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is a commitment that I am not able to make.

Senator Nurgitz: Would the Leader of the Government tell us why he cannot make that commitment?

Senator Perrault: In May of 1976, I received a call from a member of the judiciary of the Province of British Columbia who told me he had, in his office, a distraught individual known as John Meier who alleged that he had in his possession a body of evidence relating to certain foreign activities touching upon the political life of this nation.

The judge stated to me on that occasion that the charges seemed to be so serious and of such import, that he urged me, as B.C.'s representative in the cabinet, to come to his chambers and meet with Mr. Meier in his presence. I immediately acceded to the request of his lordship and met with Mr. Meier.

Mr. Meier's allegations were of some gravity. So much so that I told him that I would be prepared to bring his information to Ottawa as quickly as possible. He then provided me with a tape recording in which he set forth personally his allegations. The tape was something like 25 minutes in length. Among a number of allegations, his statement made reference to certain alleged activities in connection with at least one of our major political parties by foreign citizens. I felt that Mr. Meier's views should be brought to the immediate attention of the government.

I visited Mr. Meier at his home. I reviewed certain documents, and subsequently brought the information to the office of the Prime Minister in Ottawa.

An independent investigation was then authorized. I was not provided with a written report of that investigation, and I was subsequently informed that the proof necessary to support the Meier allegations did not appear to be in existence. I have heard nothing of the case since that time.

Senator Nurgitz: Is the Leader of the Government prepared to tell us what the precise allegations, which proved groundless, were?

Senator Perrault: I believe it would not serve the public interest to repeat these allegations on the floor of the Senate. They could be injurious to certain people serving in public life and, unless they are substantiated, it would be unfair to sully the reputations of those people by repeating unsubstantiated charges.

● (1415)

Senator Nurgitz: I have a supplementary question to ask the Leader of the Government. Because he has been accusing some of us of being negative—and I am quite serious about that—I ask whether he has, indeed, satisfied himself as to the inaccuracy of newspaper accounts of CIA involvement in provincial elections in this country, and if so, can he give such assurances to us and to the people of Canada?

Senator Perrault: I can only say that a body of information was provided for me and, in the cursory manner in which I examined the evidence, it was not possible for me to make definitive judgments.

The material I reviewed related to many subjects, and Mr. Meier's allegations, as I recall, related to provincial and federal elections.

[Senator Perrault.]

As I say, to bandy about allegations in this chamber is not useful at this time.

At some point a decision may be taken to refer this matter in camera to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the other place or to some other committee of Parliament, a decision which will not be made by me.

QUEBEC

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CERTAIN PROVINCIAL STATUTES

Hon. Martial Asselin: Recently, the Quebec government tabled in the National Assembly a series of bills whose legality was based on the notwithstanding clauses in the Charter of Rights, which was adopted—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is the question for Senator Perrault?

Senator Asselin: Yes, for Senator Perrault. Do you wish to answer the question?

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): No, he only wants to tell him what to answer.

Senator Asselin: My question is directed to Senator Perrault. Subsequent to the tabling of these bills, the Minister of Justice, Mr. Chrétien, and the Minister of State, Mr. Joyal, stated the very next day that they would ask for a ruling on their constitutionality. They were willing to go to the Supreme Court to obtain a ruling on the constitutionality of this legislation.

Has the government, through its Minister of Justice or its Minister of State, Mr. Joyal, who apparently is responsible for Quebec affairs in the cabinet, had a change of heart since then, or does it still intend to submit a reference to the Supreme Court to determine whether the provincial legislation is or is not constitutional?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. I do not have that information available at the present time.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—JURISDICTION OVER OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to quote some remarks made yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Who is he?

Senator Perrault: The Deputy Prime Minister stated:

—while the provincial government—

This is Newfoundland:

—had recently filed a reference to the provincial court of appeal, the questions submitted by the provincial government raise a number of complex issues in addition to the question of jurisdiction in respect of Hibernia. These other matters include the status of inland waters, the territorial sea, and perhaps the interest of other provinces as well. In the view of the Minister of Justice, it was necessary to move rapidly to have the urgent and pressing questions of jurisdiction in Hibernia resolved at the earliest possible date by the highest court, the Supreme Court of Canada.

He then went on to state:

—the jurisdiction of Hibernia which, until it is resolved, will constitute a block to the development that we can all foresee for the province of Newfoundland.

This is part of the explanatory statement offered by him with respect to the reference to the Supreme Court.

Honourable senators yesterday asked whether in the history of our judicial system was ever such extraordinary action taken. I can only say that the Leader of the Conservative Party, Mr. Joe Clark, suggested this identical process himself in the case of Quebec's Bill 101. According to Hansard of October 19, 1977, at page 29, he stated:

There is one other matter in the constitutional field with which I want to deal quickly. It relates to the legislation passed by the legislature of Quebec, namely, Bill 101. I believe there is every reason for the government of Canada to take the action that only it can take, and to make a direct reference of that bill to the Supreme Court of Canada.

● (1420)

So there are other precedents.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the Leader of the Government is unintentionally misleading the Senate, because anybody who reads Hansard of that date will find that that was in order to have Parliament delay consideration of the constitutional resolution until after the Supreme Court ruled on it. Mr. Clark never suggested that he would bypass the appeal courts of the provinces. First of all, that is not a precedent; and, secondly, the simple reply that the Leader of the Government should have given, if he wanted to tell us the truth, is that there is no legal precedent.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): That is not right.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this matter will be fully debated next week, a debate which we on this side all welcome.

Senator Flynn: All right.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Why did you start the debate today?

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Conservative Party proposed a direct reference when this matter was before the courts in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Lowell Murray: That is right.

Senator Flynn: I have it right here.

Senator Perrault: This happens to be a matter of fact.

Senator Flynn: No, that is not a precedent.

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition should not be so agitated. He will have an opportunity to emote next week.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government should not mislead the Senate.

Hon. C. William Doody: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In the explanation that the Leader of the Government gave us a few moments ago, he mentioned the extreme haste that was necessary to resolve the issue of the offshore, and more particularly, to resolve the issue of Hibernia. Could the minister tell us why there is this sudden haste? What has happened in the immediate short term that makes it necessary to resolve it so quickly? It was mentioned yesterday that it has been ongoing for 15 years. Could the minister tell us if it is because all other aspects of the energy policy have fallen apart—the self-sufficiency mega-projects of the Alsands, and so on—and because the Liberal government is going to grab Hibernia as an alternative?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there will be a full exposition of the facts next week, but let me say that if one dispassionately examines the record, one will quickly realize that the federal government has exerted every conciliatory effort in trying to achieve an understanding with the Province of Newfoundland. I quote from some of the words in the correspondence between the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland. He said:

I continue to hope we can resolve our differences over resource management and revenue-sharing despite the fact that two legal actions have been launched. In the meantime, while these two court actions proceed, the federal government remains committed to working co-operatively with the government of Newfoundland in order to ensure that current oil and gas activity in the offshore continues.

He went on to say—

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Those are words that he was using.

Senator Murray: Utter hypocrisy!

Senator Perrault: Well, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition never credits the government at any time with any good faith and his credibility has been so—

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The Deputy Leader of the Opposition has not opened his mouth so far, but he is willing to do so.

Senator Perrault: —badly shattered by his unrelenting assault on the government that really he cannot be taken seriously.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege. I have not opened my mouth so far in the chamber this afternoon. Does my honourable friend wish me to do so?

Senator Perrault: You just made a comment.

Senator Roblin: I never said a word, although I would be happy to because my honourable friend's statement can be shot so full of holes that it would not hold water.

Senator Perrault: I withdraw my remark and direct it to the $60,000-man instead, Senator Murray.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Cheap shot!

Senator Perrault: It is not a cheap shot; it is an expensive remark.

Senator Donahoe: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of personal privilege. When the Leader of the Government was speaking and was objecting to being interrupted, I was conscious that I spoke at that time, and it was not Senator Murray who spoke the words. I made the comment: "Those are words", and I still say that those are words that he was using, and when attributing blame to anybody for interrupting his speech, he had better attribute it in the right direction.

Hon. Louis J. Robichaud: Who cares who said it?

Senator Flynn: Senator Robichaud cares about nothing.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there may be a ventriloquist loose in the Senate. I do not know where these voices are coming from.

Senator Roblin: He is right over there.

Senator Flynn: That is not fair to the leader's deputy.

Senator Donahoe: There is a good Charlie McCarthy here.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: There are some dummies around, at least.

Senator Perrault: Senator Steuart says there are some dummies around, at least.

An Hon. Senator: He knows about that!

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I quote further from the letter sent by the Prime Minister to Mr. Peckford?

Senator Asselin: We have read it.

● (1425)

Senator Perrault: It continues:

You have insisted that the federal government agree, in advance of serious negotiations, to set the issue of legal ownership aside permanently and commit itself to a framework for resource management that could produce a stalemate which would not be in anyone's interest.

I conclude this by quoting the Deputy Prime Minister, who said:

—the Government of Canada has succeeded in working out arrangements or agreements with three western producing provinces, and that we were able to work out an agreement on the offshore, after intensive negotiations, with the Province of Nova Scotia—

That is of great interest, I am sure, to Senator Smith. I am sure he hailed that negotiating agreement.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators—

Senator Perrault: Don't be so anxious—

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Flynn: I am rising on a point of order. I thought a moment ago the Leader of the Government said that we should not discuss the matter because we were to have a debate on the subject next week. The Leader of the Government is now making a speech.

Senator Perrault: I am not.

Senator Flynn: You are repeating one of your speeches.

Senator Perrault: Invariably, the Leader of the Opposition panics in the face of facts.

Senator Flynn: I do not panic at all. I merely resent being bored by you.

Senator Perrault: Then the Leader of the Opposition has the option to resign. Perhaps he can find a more useful occupation.

Senator Flynn: That would not solve the problem, which is you.

Senator Perrault: I wish the Leader of the Opposition would attempt to create more light than heat. He would then be making a real contribution to our energy program.

Senator Flynn: In comparison to you, everything I say is a useful contribution.

Senator Asselin: Would it not be better for the minister to hold his remarks until next week, when the subject is going to be discussed?

Senator Perrault: I would not have commented had I not been provoked.

Senator Asselin: Are you starting the debate right now?

Senator Perrault: This is what the Deputy Prime Minister said:

I believe that what has been possible with four of the provinces is possible and can be attained, with good faith on both sides, with the Province of Newfoundland as well.

Those are very conciliatory statements.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of State for Economic Development. The minister may recall that in the document that we quoted in the Senate some time ago, namely, his top secret memorandum to cabinet entitled, "Priorities for Federal Government Economic Development Policies and Expenditures to the mid-1980s," under the name of Senator Olson, Minister of State for Economic Development, it says, at page 36:

Economic development in Canada is by its very nature essentially regional in concern and activity and shared with regard to federal and provincial government responsibilities.

A little later it says:

The one clear requirement which emerges from these conflicting demands is consultation. The partners of the federation must know what each government is intending to do and the aim of such consultation must be to concentrate efforts and scarce resources on those problems and issues which will improve the standard of living, lifestyles, and choices for all Canadians.

There has been a recent trend away from consultative processes and activities. This trend has also been accompanied by efforts to establish programs which are aimed at increasing a government's visibility.

Later it says:

—it is equally important that departments also explicitly recognize the federal-provincial jurisdictional context for their goals and activities and plot a strategy of federal-provincial action and negotiation which will lead to the proper handling of issues and the successful fulfillment of departmental objectives—

And so on.

Will the minister say how he can reconcile the unilateral action taken by the Minister of Justice yesterday with those sentiments so eloquently expressed in his memorandum to the cabinet a few months ago?

Senator Olson: The honourable senator is a little sensitive about identifying what is essentially stolen property. Some time ago I gave him an answer regarding the ethics of that. There may be further implications involved in that, but what my honourable friend is doing now is quoting from a document that obviously he either stole himself or received from someone who did steal it.

Senator Asselin: Be careful!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Look who's telling someone to be careful!

● (1430)

Hon. G. I. Smith: I should like, honourable senators, to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. A few moments ago, in reference to the matter of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and the Supreme Court of Canada, the Honourable the Leader of the Government quoted as a precedent for the action that has just been taken by the Government of Canada a request by the Right Honourable Joe Clark to refer a matter arising out of the legislature of Quebec directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. Was that reference ever made, in the manner and the time suggested by the Honourable the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Senator Perrault: Yes. Ultimately, the reference was made to the Supreme Court. The honourable senator is aware of that.

Senator Smith: I suppose, honourable senators, the honourable gentleman is prepared to stand by that as an assertion of fact.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, next week there will be a debate on this matter, which I think we shall all welcome. That point will be scrupulously reviewed and dealt with at that time.

Senator Smith: Since the honourable gentleman has made his assertion today, and not as of next week, I should think he would be prepared to tell us today, and not next week, whether he stands by the assertion he has just made that this reference was in fact made in relation to the Legislature of Quebec at the time he referred to it as having been made.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, we gave the commitment here yesterday that a search would be made to determine whether in fact precedents exist. That search will be carried out as objectively as possible, and that information will be brought to the chamber.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman was not prepared to wait until that search was finished before making what I believe to be a completely erroneous assertion as to what he said was a precedent. I am merely asking him now to verify his assertion.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the point I am attempting to make—perhaps not very successfully—is that the Leader of the Conservative Party had suggested that there was merit in a direct reference to the courts in certain circumstances; indeed, he proposed that on October 19, 1977. That is the point I was making.

Senator Smith: What you said you were doing was offering a precedent for the action of the Government of Canada regarding the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada in matter relating to Hibernia. That is what the record will show.

Senator Frith: It is a comment, not a question.

Senator Smith: Honourable senators, I will ask the Leader of the Government if he will not more frequently respond positively to the restraints offered to him by his deputy leader.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the preliminary research turned up this rather interesting item from October 19, 1977, that the Leader of the Conservative Party felt there might be value in the procedure. It is not a precedent in the sense that the reference was actually made on that date.

Senator Flynn: What date are you quoting?

Senator Perrault: October 19, 1977, I understand, senator.

Senator Flynn: There was no question then.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate a little while ago if the great Hibernia grab that is contemplated by the Government of Canada is to be the replacement for its shattered energy self-sufficiency policy. I do not remember having had a reply.

It seems to me that it is passing strange, having heard the wording of the reference a few minutes ago, that it is only Hibernia that the Government of Canada is concerned about. Is the continental shelf, or the continental slope, or the continental trench, of no interest to the government of Canada? Are they only interested in the Hibernia oil field, while all the whale pasture out there is to be left to the peasants in Newfoundland? Is that the story?

Senator Olson: No, that is not the story at all.

There were several comments included in what Senator Doody alleges to be a question, but let me tell him that the government is interested in all of the potential reserves of oil for Canada. These include such things as the seismic data available on the west coast of Canada, in the Beaufort Sea, in the Mackenzie Delta, down through the great sedimentary basin and all the way through to the 49th Parallel. There are other interesting seismic developments off the shores of Labrador, and indeed, higher up in the Arctic, as well as off Sable Island and Hibernia. All of these things are of great interest to us.

● (1435)

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I thank the minister for his geographic, seismic and geological tour of Canada, but it does not really apply itself to the question I asked. Is it only the Hibernia oil basin in which the Government of Canada is interested in its reference? Is the minister now saying that the proven gas reserves in the Labrador Sea, which the honourable minister mentioned himself, are to be left to the Province of Newfoundland, and that it is only the question of the oil in Hibernia that is to be resolved in this particular reference? Is that what the honourable minister is saying?

Senator Roblin: It sounds like it!

Senator Olson: You are mixing things up again.

Senator Flynn: In your mind.

Senator Olson: The statement made by the Minister of Justice, when he was in Newfoundland yesterday, is very clear as to the reason for making a reference respecting the potential at Hibernia. It was also included in the letter that the Prime Minister wrote to the Premier of Newfoundland.

In their view, there is some urgency, in terms of time, to proceed with settling the legal basis upon which the private sector can make plans for drilling, development, and all the rest of the work and investment required for the Hibernia oil field.

Within the time frame laid out, it is, in their judgment, useful that this reference be made now so that economic activity can be generated and the people living in Newfoundland, indeed, Canadians all over the country, can benefit from what appears to be a potentially large oil find.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, may I ask the minister the same question in another way? Perhaps I can then get an answer.

Are all of the other components of the energy self-sufficiency program, as enunciated by the Government of Canada some time ago, going to be treated with the same sense of urgency as that applied to Hibernia? Are we going to have the same pull-out-all-the-stops-and-trample-the-rights-of-people attitude in terms of the Alsands project, Cold Lake, tertiary oil recovery and the sedimentary sand projects? Will the same priority be given to all of those as has been given to Hibernia, or does the Government of Canada see a big, rich, unprotected oil field out there that it can grab so that it does not have to worry about all of these other areas?

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is one of the most distorted, uninformed, misinterpreted conclusions that I have ever heard.

Senator Doody: Is that the honourable minister's answer?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Doody: Is he saying that my question is uninformed? That is why I am asking the question—because I am uninformed!

The minister has announced the Canadian government's policy.

Senator Olson: Order!

Senator Doody: The minister is the former of the policy, the enunciator of the policy—

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I did not—

Senator Doody: —but I am the recipient of the policy. I am getting it there, as a Newfoundlander!

Senator Donahoe: The shaft!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have heard the comments that were made there. As to the question that was put to me, after you take out all of the verbiage—

Senator Flynn: Your verbiage.

Senator Olson: No, his verbiage. The honourable senator asked whether the government was concerned about the potential of other oil producing areas in Canada. I replied to that question in some great detail, which he just called a geographic and geological tour of Canada. He then made a number of other comments with something less than complimentary phraseology, and I simply replied to him that that part of his preamble to the question was really a very distorted conclusion.

Senator Doody: I can only say, honourable senators, that if I can think of anything complimentary to say about the minister I will.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I have a question for the Leader of the Government which is prompted by his quotation of the Prime Minister's statement. I will try to repeat the main points. While the case before the Newfoundland Court of Appeal and the case before the Supreme Court of Canada would be under review, the federal government says it is prepared to continue the negotiations with the Newfoundland government. That means both cases will be reviewed at the same time. Which decision will be acceptable if, perchance, the two courts rule differently?

Senator Asselin: That would be a contradictory ruling.

Senator Flynn: I do not mind at all the deputy leader's prompting even though the question was not directed to him. Let us suppose there is indeed a contradictory ruling. The ruling of the Supreme Court will not take precedence over that of the Newfoundland Court of Appeal. They will still have to appeal the Newfoundland ruling. Are they not creating an impossible legal situation by proceeding this way?

● (1440)

[English]

Senator Olson: Well, the Leader of the Opposition—

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I did not ask you to give the answer, Senator Olson. No one is qualified to answer in any case, and certainly not you.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Has the Leader of the Opposition finished speaking? May I have an opportunity to reply? The Leader of the Opposition frames his question in hypothetical terms, using words like “supposing” and “if.”

Senator Flynn: I am not supposing.

Senator Perrault: You ask a hypothetical question—another hypothetical question.

Senator Flynn: No, no, not at all.

Senator Perrault: I am not prepared to speak to questions like that at the present time. Matters relating to this issue will be discussed next week. I hope to participate in the debate at that time.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

[Translation]

What I am asking the Leader of the Government to do is to inquire from the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister. In view of the decision they have made and the very clear possibility—it is not hypothetical at all—that the ruling of the Appeal Court of Newfoundland will be different from that of the Supreme Court, which ruling will prevail? The ruling of the Appeal Court of Newfoundland will have to be appealed and the government will not have saved any time.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can only remind the Leader of the Opposition once again that he is asking what will happen, if an event should take place—“if”. That is a hypothetical question, an improper question, and I do not intend to reply to it at this time.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: I simply asked the Leader of the Government to submit my question to the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister. Is he telling me that he will not do so?

Senator Asselin: Which ruling will prevail?

[English]

Senator Perrault: I have stated that it is a hypothetical question. The subject will be fully explored next week, in any case, but a question larded with expressions such as, “What if this were to happen or that were to happen?” or “Under these circumstances, what would you do?” is clearly out of order.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Perrault: That is clearly out of order.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

[Translation]

I asked if you were going to refer the question to the Minister of Justice, yes or no?

[English]

Senator Murray: If there is no answer to the question of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, then I would like to put a question to the Honourable Leader of the Government on another matter.

Senator Frith: He answered. He said he will not answer a hypothetical question.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: You are prompting, Senator Frith!

[English]

THE CABINET

STATEMENTS BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some weeks ago we had occasion in this house to remark upon the resignation from the British cabinet of the Foreign Secretary, Lord Carrington, which was done in strict adherence to the traditions of their cabinet and parliamentary system. I wonder whether those traditions, which are equally Canadian traditions, are respected in this country at all.

In particular, I should like to draw the attention of the Honourable Leader of the Government to statements made recently by the Solicitor General of Canada. The minister will recall that some time ago the Solicitor General of Canada parted company from his colleagues and committed a flagrant breach of cabinet solidarity by attacking the budget of the Minister of Finance, in return for which the Prime Minister described the Solicitor General as having been “incredibly naive.” Then yesterday, again, we had the irresponsible remarks of the Solicitor General, one of the chief law officers of the Crown, concerning the serious problem of prostitution in Vancouver.

My question is this: How many more statements will we require from the Solicitor General before Mr. Kaplan takes the honourable course and submits his resignation, or before Mr. Trudeau takes the constitutional course and demands his resignation?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is not a serious question being asked by Senator Murray. It is designed for some political effect, and I do not intend to reply to it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Oh, no, you would never do that.

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN HOUSING STARTS

Hon. Richard A. Donahoe: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on a matter of considerable importance. I hope that when he proceeds to answer me he will not drag forward his customary red herring of doom and gloom, because I propose to be exceedingly factual in the manner in which I put the question.

I cite the fact that there were 6,700 single, detached home starts in the first quarter of 1982, as compared to 22,700 in the first quarter of 1981. Does the leader consider that fact a harbinger of good or ill for the prospects of economic recovery?

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, our colleague Senator Olson may have more specific information on that particular point, but of course we would like the number of housing starts to be far higher than they are. I hope the Honourable Senator Donahoe hopes that they will be higher, too. Certainly, we hope they will be.

Senator Donahoe: I would like to say to my colleagues that I asked the question in the hope—the faint hope—that I would learn the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition with regard to this great problem.

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): You mean the Leader of the Government.

Senator Donahoe: Yes, the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sorry.

Hon. R. James Balfour: He should be the Leader of the Government.

Senator Donahoe: Yes, that is where he belongs.

Senator Perrault: I have already expressed agreement with the senator that we would like to see far more housing starts than that, and the thrust of the policy is to initiate more housing starts in 1982.

These are not easy economic times. The honourable senator is aware of that fact, and with his background in business he knows the difficulties facing Canada, just as he knows the difficulties facing every other country in the world. The world economic malaise really began in 1973 and there have been very difficult problems for all of us since then. By working together on a less partisan basis, perhaps we can solve some of our Canadian problems.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

An Hon. Senator: Get a coalition government!

Senator Donahoe: I do not consider what has been said by the leader to be an answer to my question, but having failed to hear an answer I will nevertheless ask a supplementary question. The Conference Board of Canada—the board that provided the statistics I have already cited—makes a quarterly compilation of its “consumer attitudes” index, the most recent of which shows that consumer confidence has reached its lowest level since the survey began in 1962.

Let it be said that I am not factual, I will quote from the report, which said:

This bearish attitude is likely to dampen any recovery in consumer spending in the months ahead.

Would the Leader of the Government—or the Minister of State for Economic Development, who seemed rather anxious to get into the act when I put the original question—tell me whether the government is depending upon a surge in consumer spending to dampen the recession? If so, on what basis does it make its projections?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is a bit sad that day after day in this chamber we hear this continuing effort by the opposition to destroy confidence in Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Perrault: They ferret out these supposedly adverse economic nuggets, like a gold miner trying to find the mother lode.

Senator Donahoe: “Supposedly adverse”?

Senator Perrault: Gleeefully, they extract certain adverse facts, quote some of them out of context, and seem to enjoy themselves in the process. I wonder why the opposition today is not joining in our great and enthusiastic applause for the sale to the City of New York by Bombardier of $1 billion worth of Canadian manufactured subway cars.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: That is one of Canada's great business deals of recent years. Why do members of the opposition have to say repeatedly in this chamber that “confidence is dropping” and that “never before has Canadian morale been worse”? What do these tactics do to inspire confidence in Canada? I am proud, as all honourable senators should be proud, of the fact that Canadian business and technology were able to make the subway sale. We should close many more such deals. Let's talk about the good news along with these shabby bits and pieces of adverse information that are dragged into the Senate.

Hon. Jack Marshall: What about the houses?

Senator Flynn: Everybody in Canada must be wrong except you.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: And there is the barker behind him.

Senator Steuart: A barker, yes, but always of the truth.

Senator Flynn: I wish the honourable senator would rise some time in his place and not always hide behind the Leader of the Government. I would like him to say how great his leader is, if he believes it.

Senator Steuart: I would like to say how great he is right now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thanks for asking.

Senator Flynn: That is on the record.

FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development. In view of the admonition of the Leader of the Government, I do not really know how to frame my question, which deals with farm bankruptcies. Perhaps I could deal with it from the standpoint that the surviving farmers do not have much competition.

Federal government statistics indicated at one point that farm bankruptcies had increased by 50 per cent in the first quarter of last year. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has some figures that may be even higher, and they say that it is not a situation that is unique to the east, but is spreading rather rapidly to the west.

I was born on pavement, so I am not really sure, but do farm bankruptcies, which mean a loss of production, jeopardize Canadian food production either in the short term or the long term, or is production somehow or other maintained?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I respect the tone in which the question was put and I want to say that, by and large, I expect that the land base is used by whoever purchases it, whether it be a neighbour or someone entering the market, from whom-ever it was who faced the unfortunate situation of bankruptcy.

It is not quite that simple, however, because in many cases there is an integrated operation that does not get up to full production within a short time. I have to agree that there is a difficulty with respect to some of the debt service charges because of the very high rates of inflation and because of how farm land prices have moved up, particularly in the latter part of the 1970s and including 1980 and 1981.

It is a fact that while the Consumer Price Index has moved up from around 8 per cent to a high of around 13 per cent, farm prices have advanced in some parts of Canada by 25 per cent, 40 per cent and as much as 80 per cent per year at various times. However, I think it is fair to say that the people who hold the mortgages to those lands have calculated that they could accommodate that kind of mortgage at the interest rates that prevailed prior to the sharp upswing that took place about 12 to 18 months ago. So there are farmers who are in the situation I have just described, and I think they can be found in all parts of the country.

I would like to add one other thing, and that is that from the discussion that we had with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, it would appear that the debt-to-equity ratio of farmers generally across the country is substantially better than in most other businesses. In other words, their equity in those farms is higher in relation to their debt. So it probably could be argued that the situation in the agricultural sector is not as serious, but, of course, I understand that for the individuals who face such economic problems it is just as serious to them. There were some figures given of farmers who have a difficult debt-to-equity ratio, to the effect that the level is somewhere around 20 per cent.

NEW BRUNSWICK

CLOSING OF CFB CHATHAM—EFFECT ON LOCAL ECONOMY

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have the response to a question asked on May 5 by Senator Thériault about CFB Chatham. It is a rather long reply and, if it is acceptable, I will ask that it be incorporated into the record of today's proceedings as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The decision to move 416 Squadron out of Chatham was taken on the best military, strategic and economic criteria provided by experts in the Department of National Defence. With the introduction of the new fighter aircraft, the CF-18 Hornet, the technical capabilities of this aircraft together with its cost necessitate a consolidation of ground support systems. In other words, costs dictate that we must operate from fewer bases, in this case Cold Lake and Bagotville with support from Goose Bay and Comox.

The social and economic effect on the Miramichi region with the departure of the 416 Squadron is well known to the government. Inasmuch as the decision to reduce CFB Chatham cannot be reversed, the government has taken a strong interest in this matter to protect the economic health of the region over the short and long term. The Department of National Defence has ordered a delay in the reduction of the base until 1984, two years later than originally, contemplated. The Minister of Defence also visited the Miramichi on November 7, 1981 to talk with the people and to hear their concerns.

A committee of officials of several federal departments has been set up to identify alternative economic activity for Chatham and communities affected by the reduction of activities due to the surplus of military infrastructure. The matter is also the subject of specific attention by a high level task force at the assistant deputy minister level which is being chaired by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The recommendations of each of these groups will be brought forward to the ministers concerned for consideration this summer.

As for the feasibility of Chatham as a site for future DND research, some options in this field are under consideration. The focus must now be on the identification of alternative economic activity for Chatham. With the combined efforts of the Government of Canada, the Government of New Brunswick and local officials from the Miramichi, the government remains confident that the concerns of all affected groups in this matter can be met in a satisfactory way.

ENERGY

EAST COAST—OFFSHORE OIL EXPLORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked on April 27 by Senator Donahoe. It relates to the allocations of drilling permits for offshore oil exploration. Again, the answer consists of several paragraphs, and I would ask that it go into the record as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

Under the Canada Oil and Gas Act, which received Royal Assent on December 18, 1981, new exploration agreements are to be completed with the federal government by all companies operating on Canada Lands. The process of completing these agreements is proceeding expeditiously and is not holding up exploration programs. Conditional upon completing an agreement is an undertaking on the part of companies, under the Canada benefits clause of the Canada Oil and Gas Act, to submit:

—a plan satisfactory to the Minister for the employment of Canadians and for providing Canadian manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies with a full and fair opportunity to participate on a competitive basis in the supply of goods and services used in that work or capacity.

This requirement and the need to ensure that proposed programs will meet environmental standards are key components of the exploration and production approval process. Provided that companies make appropriate preparations for meeting these legislative requirements, there would be no delays in proceeding with exploration and production programs.

With regard to the second question asked by Senator Donahoe, I would like to reiterate what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said earlier this month at the Houston Offshore Technology Conference, that the Government of Canada is pushing ahead vigorously in the Canadian offshore to secure oil and gas supplies for a stable, long-term energy future.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS—STREAMLINING OF REGULATORY PROCESS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): I also have a response to another question asked on May 5, this time by Senator Nurgitz, and it relates to the streamlining of the regulatory process with regard to mega-projects in the Arctic, and especially those in the energy field. It also is rather lengthy, and I would ask that it go into the record as having been read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

As I indicated when initially responding to this question, there is an ongoing general review of Canada's regulatory processes in the form of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. It is not the federal government's intent to weigh down the development of Canada's resources—both energy and non-energy—with a myriad of superfluous regulations. The government is prepared to adopt streamlining wherever feasible. For example, just last week, May 14, the National Energy Board announced changes in its natural gas export approval procedure. However, the government is not prepared to cut corners when the environment, citizens' health or civil rights are at stake. A case in point is the deferment for two years of the Norman Wells oil pipeline. This deferment was imposed to ensure that proper studies were carried out relative to native rights and environmental impact.

With specific regard to regulations governing energy developments in the Arctic, the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration is responsible for regulating oil and gas exploration and development in the Canada Lands, as well as onshore and offshore oil and gas activities in the Arctic. COGLA itself is a tangible example of the federal government's efforts to simplify the regulatory process, as the functions currently being carried out by this body were formerly divided between the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Energy, Mines and Resources.

THE SENATE

MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS—PRINTING OF WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question put to me yesterday by Senator Lang respecting the printing of the full list of written questions on the Senate Order Paper on a weekly basis.

Senator Lang asked during yesterday's proceedings why the full list of written questions is printed only once a week on the Order Paper.

The reason is that the Journals Branch of the Senate is following the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration which stated:

That all questions asked pursuant to Rule 20A(1) be printed on the Order Paper on the next sitting day after they are sent to the Clerk of the Senate and only once a week, on the first sitting day of each week thereafter, until they are answered.

The recommendation formed part of the Internal Economy Committee's report respecting the printing of certain information in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate, which was presented on December 16, 1981. The report was agreed to by the Senate on December 17, 1981.

Rule 20A(1) is as follows:

(1) A question described in paragraph 20(1)(a) or (b)

(a) that seeks statistical or other information not readily available, or

(b) to which an answer in writing is desired, shall be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate to be placed on the Order Paper until answered.

(2) The reply to a question on the Order Paper shall be printed in the Debates of the Senate of the day on which it is given.

The reference to the report of the committee is the Minutes of December 16, 1981, at page 1811.

PRIVATE BILL

THE ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE VETERANS IN CANADA— THIRD READING

Senator Marshall moved the third reading of Bill S-25, respecting The Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief intervention on third reading of this bill, simply to explain that the amendments suggested by the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, and subsequently adopted by the Senate, will be incorporated in the bill when it is printed. The bill, as it appears on honourable senators' desks at the present time, is in its unamended form.

Hon. Jack Marshall: How's that for co-operation, Mr. Leader?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC, FISCAL AND ENERGY POLICIES OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Phillips:

That the Senate of Canada do urge the Federal Government to re-direct its economic, fiscal and energy policies, and bring forward as soon as possible a new budget; such budget to provide proper economic direction, improved employment opportunities and measures to restore national confidence in the economy.

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, my remarks this afternoon will be brief.

In early 1980, as economic storm clouds gathered over the western industrialized countries, we in Canada had good reason to believe that it was within our power to insulate ourselves to a substantial extent from the recessionary forces that would be felt by our neighbour, the United States, and our trading partners in western Europe.

We had, in effect, an economic "ace in the hole" in the form of a thriving, dynamic petroleum industry poised for a great leap forward in the attainment of what all agree must be the ultimate goal of Canada, energy self-sufficiency.

The planning was virtually complete and the technology developed for several so-called mega-projects which, when on stream, would for decades to come provide Canadians with millions of barrels of petroleum annually and, in the process, create across this country thousands of jobs.

Then came October 1980 when the government of Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Lalonde produced, amid great fanfare, the so-called National Energy Program which, on analysis, had as its main thrust a massive grab for control over the development and revenues of the resource industry.

The industry was at first simply stunned and then, inevitably, angered. Corporate planners who, in good faith, assumed that they were conducting their business operations and making their financial plans and commitments in a political atmosphere of honesty and stability, suddenly found that this government, without warning, had pulled the rug out from under them.

A confiscatory tax regime was imposed on their revenues—in truth, not a tax but a wellhead royalty. Twenty-five per cent of Canada Lands leases were confiscated without compensation. Government commitments on tar sands oil pricing were repudiated. Unreasonable, discriminatory measures against foreign, mainly American, petroleum companies were introduced, and with massive adverse economic consequences.

Instead of the thriving, aggressive, dynamic petroleum industry operating in Canada that was the case in 1980, we now have a demoralized, apprehensive, angry petroleum industry in Canada whose main concern is what act of monumental stupidity will next be planned and imposed upon it by this incompetent federal government.

Consider the consequences of the National Energy Program. Canada's ability to meet its own oil needs has sagged. More than $7 billion has left the country to purchase foreign oil companies, putting pressure on our dollar and raising interest rates. Billions of other Canadian and foreign investment dollars have fled, making the pressure worse. More than 300 oil-drilling rigs have moved south, and 2,000 fewer wells were drilled in 1981 than in 1980.

The oil sands and Cold Lake projects have been cancelled, representing a loss of over $25 billion of investment in the next seven years. The Alaska Highway gas pipeline has been delayed by four years or more and, indeed, the entire project may be in jeopardy. The Judy Creek tertiary recovery project has been lost; the Syncrude expansion has been lost; the heavy oil upgrading project in Saskatchewan has been lost; and all the drilling rigs and service rigs that were, by and large, owned, directed and controlled by Canadians and which were turning the energy industry in Canada into a Canadian-controlled industry, have picked up and moved elsewhere to invest elsewhere not only Canadian money but Canadian incentive, intelligence and expertise to create growth and jobs not in Canada but elsewhere.

But, of course, it is not just energy that is at stake here; it is the economic recovery of this country because the energy potential of Canada offers the best way to lift this nation out of recession and the best way to guarantee the kind of economic strength and future that is within our grasp.

To fully appreciate the disastrous consequences of what this government has done to the economy of Canada, you need only look at the government's own estimates of the jobs that would have been involved in the projects which have either collapsed or been delayed indefinitely.

All across Canada there would have been 255,000 potential new jobs. Those are not my figures, honourable senators; those are the figures of the Government of Canada published in 1978 by Mr. Gillespie. There would have been 71,000 direct jobs in energy projects, projects that the government boasted would be built but which have now been abandoned because of the step-by-step destruction of the energy industry in this country under the stewardship of Mr. Lalonde.

Back in 1978 Mr. Gillespie, referring to the energy projects which the federal government put forward as the basis of Canada's future, listed such projects as the Dempster pipeline, which is now on indefinite hold. That would have created 6,000 jobs directly and 26,000 jobs indirectly, or so he said. He listed the Alaska Highway gas pipeline, which would have created 13,000 jobs directly and 55,000 jobs indirectly; that is in jeopardy. He listed the Polar Gas project, which would have created 15,000 jobs directly and 45,000 jobs indirectly; that has gone. The Tenaco LNG project has been cancelled; the Kitimat pipeline to the Alaska Highway oil pipeline—the proposed one or the other—has gone; the Alsands project has been cancelled; the Syncrude project expansion has been cancelled; the heavy oil upgrading in Saskatchewan has been postponed indefinitely; the Cold Lake project has been cancelled; and the oil storage project at Wabanex has been cancelled.

These projects which, by and large, are the victims of this government's policies, would have created 71,000 jobs directly in the oil and gas industry and 255,000 jobs indirectly—jobs in Quebec, Ontario and Atlantic Canada, as well as in western Canada.

In 1978, the government of Mr. Trudeau announced a series of energy projects that would create nearly 100,000 jobs in the oil and gas industry and 320,000 jobs in related industries. Now, four years later, almost all of these projects have been abandoned, thanks to a so-called National Energy Program which can only be categorized as an unmitigated economic disaster for this country.

Consider the federal government oil subsidy program. In effect, by virtue of this policy, the federal treasury subsidizes the cost to import large volumes of foreign crude oil at a time when equivalent volumes are available but are not being produced in western Canada. We have been subsidizing the importation of foreign oil at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada to the extent of billions of dollars each year. The cumulative cost is in the order of $17 billion Canadian, or about 20 per cent of our national debt, which has been incurred to subsidize the price of gasoline and fuel oil. The interest on the money we have borrowed to subsidize oil prices, calculated at 15 per cent, which is low, is $2.5 billion annually.

The subsidy program has favoured importing oil at the expense of shut-in Alberta production. In April alone, 300,000 barrels a day were shut in. This represents unnecessary imports of $12 million a day and an unnecessary subsidy of $5 million a day.

As a result of this foolish policy, there is a double cost to the Canadian people, first, in the public funds being paid from the treasury through these subsidies; and, secondly, in the economic cost resulting from such large amounts of money leaving the country.

Surely, it is obvious that a fundamental change of direction in the oil importation subsidy program is called for. The program should be dismantled, and eastern Canadian refineries should be called upon and required to replace the imported oil with western Canadian crude.

● (1510)

But we pay another price for these foolish and destructive policies, honourable senators, a national price, because there exists within these policies a threat to the continued existence of this country as we now know it.

Yesterday morning the results of a recent Gallup poll were announced which showed that 27 per cent of Canadians had lost confidence in the future of Confederation—27 per cent honourable senators.

In the aftermath of the Saskatchewan provincial election, the figures indicate that support for the once-strong Liberal Party has eroded to 4.5 per cent of the total vote. Surely honourable senators opposite must pause at the mention of such figures and recognize the obvious fact: the Trudeau government has forfeited the confidence and support of the Canadian people.

Honourable senators, the long and the short of it is that Canada's energy industry is in a shambles and, as a result, its economy is in a shambles. Nothing short of fundamental changes to the National Energy Program, preceded by the resignation of the minister responsible and the removal of the bureaucrats who were the program's architects, will start the industry on the road to recovery and thus restore the possibility of achieving self-sufficiency by the end of this decade and, at the same time, begin the process of economic recovery for this country.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: May I ask the senator a question?

Senator Balfour: Certainly.

Senator Godfrey: I am a little puzzled because you stated twice that the postponement of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline was as a result of the National Energy Program.

I did not think that that project, which brings U.S. gas from Alaska to the lower 48 states, had anything to do with the National Energy Program. How has the National Energy Program caused a postponement of that project?

Senator Balfour: I suppose that the financeability of the line is jeopardized by our high interest rates, which are as a result of the National Energy Program.

Senator Godfrey: Is it not true that that project is to be financed primarily by the United States, and, therefore, it is the high U.S. interest rates that affect the financeability of that project?

Senator Balfour: Interest rates in the United States and Canada are inextricably linked.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Government): Good.

Senator Godfrey: The postponement is as a result of high U.S. interest rates.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Charbonneau, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 25, 1982, at 8 p.m.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

MEGA-PROJECTS

Hon. Jacques Flynn (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Economic Development, which is his proper title.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You mean "and Regional" Development.

Senator Flynn: No, that is entirely irregular.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Not yet.

Senator Flynn: That is not in accordance with the legislation.

Honourable senators, evidently, the minister was kind enough to give an interview on mega-projects to a journalist from Le Devoir. The article makes very interesting reading, and I would commend it to all members of this house, particularly to the members on the government side because they may find out some things of which they may not have been aware.

The Minister of State for Economic Development is quoted as recognizing that the revision of the industrial strategy, which he is now bound to proceed with, will mean many substantial changes of orientation, especially in the oil sector. I am wondering whether the minister will be as candid with us as he was with the journalist in question and tell us a little of what is entailed in that revision.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of State for Economic Development): Honourable senators, I want to make sure that my honourable friend is quoting me directly—

Senator Flynn: It is my translation, but I will give it in French if you like.

Senator Olson: —and is not stopping half way through a sentence, because I do not believe that I spoke in exactly those terms.

Senator Flynn: You were misquoted!

Senator Olson: What I tried to indicate was that this government is very realistic and that it takes into account the economic conditions as they now exist—and they have changed rather dramatically over the past six months, although perhaps there were some signs of change even prior to that time.

Senator Flynn: I hope the minister does not deny that he spoke of a revision of the orientation of the government perspective with regard to its energy policy, which has been in existence for two years.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what I think I said—and I am not so capable in the French language, as my honourable friend knows—

Senator Flynn: I am not trying to trap you.

Senator Olson: I understand that, but what I did say in English—and I took it from the tape, by the way—was with respect to the Alsands and Cold Lake projects we were talking about. I said:

There are two things wrong or that are disturbing with the Cold Lake and Alsands, and that is the massiveness of the project and the time frame required from the disbursement of funds until you get cash flow. Smaller projects can be done more quickly in that respect.

I think that is a statement of fact. Until recently, until the cost of capital and the time frame which adds to the cost of capital changed the situation, it was intended that those projects would go ahead. I think my honourable friend agrees with me that there was at one point in time the view—and, indeed, a great deal of investment was made to support that view—that both of those projects would go ahead. The reasons given now for change are the international market and the cost of capital and the time frame. I am sure my friend the Leader of the Opposition will agree that this was a very objective assessment of those two projects.
